Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Lulu M. Peiper, of Wallingford, Conn., the sum of $5,000 in full settlement of all claims against the United States for the death of her son, Raymond E. Monson, late apprentice seaman, United States Navy, who was killed in the performance of his duties at Newport, R. I., on May 14, 1928: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM F. KIMBALL

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2305) for the relief of William F. Kimball, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$1,885.74" and insert "$1,208.01", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to William F. Kimball, of Mud Butte, S. Dak., the sum of $1,208.01 in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for the remainder of a refund due him on account of the cancelation of a certain contract entered into between the said William F. Kimball and the Department of the Interior in 1920, relating to the purchase of certain lands owned by the heirs of His Red Horse, deceased Standing Rock allottee no. 2186. Payment to said William F. Kimball shall be conditioned upon his executing and delivering to the Secretary of the Interior an assignment, satisfactory to the Secretary, assigning to the United States all his right, title, and interest in and to the remainder of such refund. All sums recovered from the estate of His Red Horse by the United States under such assignment shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2372) for expenditure of funds for cooperation with the public-school board at Wolf Point, Mont., for completing the construction, extension, equipment, and improvement of a public-school building to be available to Indian children of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, Mont., was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. On this bill there is an adverse report. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

LEASING OF INDIAN LANDS IN WASHINGTON

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 608) to authorize the leasing of certain Indian lands, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 4, after the word "lands", to strike out "allotted under the treaty of January 22, 1855, between the United States and the Dwamish, Suquamish, and other allied and subordinate tribes of Indians in Washington Territory (State of Washington)" and insert "on the Port Madison and Snohomish or Tulalip Indian Reservations in the State of Washington", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding any other provision of law, any Indian lands on the Port Madison and Snohomish or Tulalip Indian Reservations in the State of Washington may be leased with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, and upon such terms and conditions as he may prescribe, for a term not exceeding 25 years; and an option for the renewal of the lease for an additional term not exceeding 25 years may be included therein.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PER-CAPITA PAYMENT TO SEMINOLE INDIANS IN OKLAHOMA

The bill (S. 2263) providing for per-capita payments to the Seminole Indians in Oklahoma from funds standing to their credit in the Treasury was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to the enrolled members of the Seminole Tribe of Indians of Oklahoma entitled under existing law to share in the funds of said tribe, or to their lawful heirs, out of any money belonging to said tribe in the United States Treasury or deposited in any bank or held by an official under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior, not to exceed $35 per capita: Provided, That said payment shall be made under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: Provided further, That in cases where such enrolled members or their heirs are Indians who belong to the restricted class, the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, withhold such payments and use the same for the benefit of such restricted Indians: Provided further, That the money paid to the enrolled members or their heirs as provided herein shall be exempt from any lien for attorneys' fees or other debt contracted prior to the passage of this act: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to use not to exceed $2,000 out of said Seminole tribal funds for the payment of salaries of necessary employees and other expenses for the distribution of said per-capita payments.

PURCHASE OF LANDS ADJACENT TO TURTLE MOUNTAIN INDIAN AGENCY, N. DAK.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1774) to authorize the purchase of certain lands adjacent to the Turtle Mountain Indian Agency in the State of North Dakota, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized to purchase privately owned lands and improvements within and adjacent to the Turtle Mountain Reservation, N. Dak., title to be taken in the United States of America in trust for the Indians of the Turtle Mountain Reservation, and for that purpose there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100,000, which sum when appropriated shall remain available until expended: Provided, That title to the land so purchased may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be taken for the surface only: Provided further, That lands purchased under this authority shall not be allotted in severalty.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, in view of the adverse recommendation, I inquire of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER], whether this is wise or proper legislation at this time.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, the Office of Indian Affairs were favorable to the appropriation. They state in their report in connection with the bill that there are 688 families of Indians there, aggregating approximately 3,000 Indians on 23,000 acres of land, which is not enough land to support them. The direct relief and work relief amounted to not more than $100,000 last year. This bill would not take care of all of them, but it would be a step in the right direction. Senators will note that the Acting Secretary said that the bill is "not in accord at this time with the President's program."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I inquire of the Senator from North Dakota why, when the Interior Department appropriation bill was under consideration, which measure was presumed to take care of the needs of the Indians for the next year, and which carried a large appropriation—much larger than it should have done—provision was not made for the purchase of these lands as a wise and a just measure.

Mr. FRAZIER. The Office of Indian Affairs recommended the purchase, but the item was cut out.

Mr. KING. By the Appropriations Committee, after full investigation?

Mr. FRAZIER. No; by the Bureau of the Budget, as I understand.

Mr. KING. Was not the item eliminated by the Appropriations Committee?

Mr. FRAZIER. No; I think not. A year ago an appropriation of $100,000 was authorized to buy land in this region; but this particular group of Indians voted not to go in under the so-called Indian Reorganization Act, and the Department held that they were not eligible to receive the money that was appropriated for them.

Mr. KING. Do these Indians belong to any tribe which had land, and which had some treaties with the Government under the terms of which large appropriations were to be made annually by the Government?

Mr. FRAZIER. In this case the treaty with the Indians provided that they could have allotments at the Turtle Mountain Reservation. When the treaty was adopted several years later—it was held up for a certain length of time—the land had been taken up to a great extent, and there was not enough land for them. More than 3,000 Indians and a number of white settlers are crowded on two townships.

Mr. KING. In view of the wrongs to which the Indians have been subjected and the way we have plundered them for more than 100 years, I do not think I can object.

Mr. FRAZIER. This is merely an authorization, of course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 7472) to provide additional revenue for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask that the bill be passed over.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask the leader to give us an opportunity tomorrow to take up this bill for consideration.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, at the conclusion of the call of the calendar it is the purpose to make this bill the unfinished business.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, are Senators referring to the District tax bill?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. McCARRAN. I had intended to move the consideration of Senate bill 69. I cannot go along unless there is some understanding with reference to Senate bill 69, for the reasons I have stated to the new leader.

Mr. BARKLEY. Let us conclude the call of the calendar at this time.

The bill (S. 2317) for the relief of Robert L. Summers was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions of section 1118, Revised Statutes, the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to reenlist in the United States Army, Robert L. Summers, Medical Department, Fort Sill, Okla., at the expiration of said Robert L. Summers' present period of enlistment on November 12, 1937, and on such future dates as the said Robert L. Summers may make application for reenlistment.

COMPROMISE OF SUITS ON CERTAIN CONTRACTS OF INSURANCE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2383) to amend the act authorizing the Attorney General to compromise suits on certain contracts of insurance, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sixth paragraph following the subtitle "Veterans' Administration" in the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1934, approved June 16, 1933 (48 Stat. 283, ch. 101), be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"That the Attorney General of the United States is hereby authorized to agree to a judgment to be rendered by the presiding judge of the United States court having jurisdiction of the case, pursuant to compromise approved by the Attorney General upon the recommendation of the United States attorney charged with the defense, upon such terms and for such sums within the amount claimed to be payable, in any suit brought under the provisions of the World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended, on a contract of yearly, renewable term insurance which may be now pending or hereafter may be filed, and the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs is hereby authorized and directed to make payments in accordance with any such judgment: Provided, That the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to allow credit in the accounts of disbursing officers of the Veterans' Administration for all payments of insurance made in accordance with any such judgment: Provided further, That all such judgments shall constitute final settlement of the claim and no appeal therefrom shall be authorized."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HUGHES], who honors us with his presence here, explain the bill?

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, under the act passed March 20, 1933, the Attorney General was authorized to compromise certain insurance suits that had been brought under the World War Veterans' Act. After that time another act was passed, and other suits have been brought which did not come under the former act. A number of those suits are now pending, and there is no authority for the Attorney General to compromise the later suits. This bill authorizes the Attorney General to consider and to compromise the later suits which have been brought since the acts referred to were passed and which are now pending.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUNISHMENT OF OFFENDERS AGAINST NARCOTIC LAWS

The bill (S. 2388) to increase the punishment of second, third, and subsequent offenders against the narcotic laws was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill be passed over.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, a bill has come over from the House which is similar to the Senate bill 2388. The House bill (H. R. 6283) will be found on the calendar on page 13, being Calendar No. 922. I ask that the House bill be substituted for the Senate bill.

Mr. KING. I have no objection to that course.

Mr. HUGHES. I also ask that the Senate bill be stricken from the calendar.

Mr. KING. I have no objection to that. Then, Mr. President, let the House bill go over. The request of the Senator from Delaware is that the House bill be substituted for the Senate bill; and after that substitution is made I object to its consideration today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, House bill 6283, being Calendar No. 922, will be substituted for Senate bill 2388, being Calendar No. 904; and, without objection, Senate bill 2388 is indefinitely postponed.

At the request of the Senator from Utah, House bill 6283 will be passed over.

BILL AND RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2475) to provide for the establishment of fair labor standards in employments in and affecting interstate commerce, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 140) authorizing an investigation of the delivery or nondelivery of mail to establishments where industrial strife is in progress was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I do not see the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] present, and I suggest that the resolution be passed over for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

JOSEPH W. BOLLENBECK

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1168) for the relief of Joseph W. Bollenbeck, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendment on page 1, line 8, after the word "retired", to insert "on May 31, 1935,"; on the same page, in line 10, after the words "accident of", to strike out:

Service, and in the grade of major which he would have attained upon such retirement: Provided, That in determining the pay period of this officer there shall be added the length of accrued leave to which he would have been entitled prior to retirement: Provided further, That no bounty, back pay, pension, allowances, or any payment provided under the World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended, the World War Adjusted Compensation Act, 1924, as amended, or other benefit whatsoever to which said person may be or become entitled by law shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

And insert:

Service: Provided, That no back pay, allowance, compensation, pension, or other benefit shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon retired officers of the United States Army, Joseph W. Bollenbeck, captain, United States Army, shall be held and considered, notwithstanding any other provision of law, to have been classified in class A and to have been retired on May 31, 1935, under section 1251 of the Revised Statutes for incapacity which was a result of an accident of service: Provided, That no back pay, allowance, compensation, pension, or other benefit shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTINGUISHED SERVICE MEDAL TO HAROLD R. WOOD

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 126) authorizing the President to present in the name of Congress a medal of honor to Harold R. Wood, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, in line 3, after the word "present", to strike out the comma and the words "in the name of Congress, a medal of honor" and insert "a Distinguished Service Medal", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is authorized to present a Distinguished Service Medal to Harold R. Wood, formerly a corporal of the United States Marine Corps, for conspicuous bravery on the night of October 31–November 1, 1919, as an officer of the Gendarmerie d'Haiti.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing the President to present a Distinguished Service Medal to Harold R. Wood."

EMORY M. M'COOL

The bill (H. R. 6402) for the relief of Emory M. McCool, United States Navy, retired, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, notwithstanding the provisions of section 2 of the act approved May 23, 1930 (46 Stat. 375; U. S. C., title 34, sec. 790), Emory M. McCool, chief machinist's mate, United States Navy, retired, shall be held and considered to have completed 30 years' service, including naval service, time in the Fleet Naval Reserve, and Army service, including double time for service in the Philippines from November 28, 1899, to May 18, 1901, for the purpose of transfer to the retired list of the United States Navy, on May 19, 1929, and the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the said Emory M. McCool the sum of $630, which sum represents allowances at $15.75 per month, covering the period from May 19, 1929, to and including September 30, 1932, authorized by existing law (U. S. C., title 34, sec. 431) to be paid to enlisted men upon transfer to the retired list of the Navy upon completion of 30 years' service.

SALE OF OLD POST OFFICE BUILDING, LOUISVILLE, KY.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6899) to repeal the limitation of the sale price on the old post office and courthouse site and building at Fourth and Chestnut Streets, Louisville, Ky., which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the proviso (45 Stat. 179), contained in section 1, title I, of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes", approved March 5, 1928, Public Law No. 93, Seventieth Congress (45 Stat. 162), requiring that the old post office and courthouse site and building at Fourth and Chestnut Streets, Louisville, Ky., shall not be sold for an amount less than $2,500,000 is hereby repealed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Kentucky to explain the bill just read, which provides for the sale of the post office at Louisville, Ky.?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the bill authorizes the sale of the post-office building in the city of Louisville.

Mr. McKELLAR. The old post-office building.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; the old post-office building. The building, which has been vacant and unoccupied for the last 5 or 6 years, is located in the heart of the city. At the last session of Congress a bill was passed authorizing its sale but fixing a minimum price of $2,500,000. Both departments concerned have reached the conclusion that they are not able at this time to dispose of the property at that minimum price. This bill authorizes them to enter into negotiations for the sale of the property at a price less than that previously fixed. The fact is, the passage of the bill is desired by the Department, and I think it ought to pass.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ATTENDANCE OF MARINE BAND AT GRAND ARMY ENCAMPMENT

The bill (H. R. 7641) to authorize the attendance of the Marine Band at the National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic to be held at Madison, Wis., September 5 to 10, inclusive, 1937, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DECORATION OF SGT. FRED W. STOCKHAM, DECEASED

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 153) providing for consideration of a recommendation for decoration of Sgt. Fred W. Stockham, deceased, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Whereas on the nights of June 13–14, 1918, at Belleau Woods, Fred W. Stockham, deceased, formerly a gunnery sergeant, United States Marine Corps, in action involving actual conflict with the enemy, distinguished himself conspicuously by gallantry and intrepidity at the risk of his life above and beyond the call of duty; and

Whereas a citation citing said Fred W. Stockham for the extraordinary heroism displayed by him at such time was written but, through accident, was not published and is not recorded in the War Department; and

Whereas no decoration has been awarded to said Fred W. Stockham for the extraordinary heroism displayed by him at such time: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That any recommendation for decoration by the United States of America of Fred W. Stockham, deceased, formerly a gunnery sergeant, Ninety-sixth Company, Second Battalion, Sixth Division, United States Marine Corps, shall be considered and acted upon in the same manner as such recommendation would have been considered and acted upon if it had been pending on May 26, 1928.

The preamble was agreed to.

MARIHUANA EXCISE TAX

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6906) to impose an occupational excise tax upon certain dealers in marihuana, to impose a transfer tax upon certain dealings in marihuana, and to safeguard the revenue therefrom by registry and recording, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance, with amendments.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from Michigan if all the provisions of this bill, which seem to be rather multitudinous, are necessary to deal with this simple, though perhaps very deleterious, drug?

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. President, there is no question that the Treasury Department feels that the various regulations contained in the bill are necessary. The bill was considered by the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives; it passed that body and then came before the subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Finance. Hearings were conducted; all those who were interested in the industrial production of marihuana were present, and a general agreement was reached to add two or three minor amendments. The only amendment of moment was that we reduced the tax on the producers from $5 an acre to $1 an acre. That is the only material difference between the bill as reported to the Senate and the bill as passed by the House.

Mr. KING. Let me inquire of the Senator whether only the one drug marihuana is involved in this bill?

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. That is the only drug covered by this bill.

Mr. KING. I have no objection to its passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be stated.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Finance was, in section 1, paragraph (b), page 2, line 6, after the word "plant", to insert the words "fiber produced in such stalks"; in line 8, after the word "any", to insert "other"; in line 10, before the word "oil", to insert "fiber", so as to make the paragraph read:

(b) The term "marihuana" means all parts of the plant Cannabis sativa L., whether growing or not; the seeds thereof; the resin extracted from any part of such plant; and every compound, manufacture, salt, derivative, mixture, or preparation of such plant, its seeds, or resin; but shall not include the mature stalks of such plant fiber produced from such stalks, oil or cake made from the seeds of such plant, any other compound, manufacture, salt, derivative, mixture, or preparation of such mature stalks (except the resin extracted therefrom) fiber, oil, or cake, or the sterilized seed of such plant which is incapable of germination.

The amendments were agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, paragraph 2, page 3, line 9, after the word "subsection)", to strike out "$5 per year" and insert "$1 per year, or fraction thereof, during which they engage in such activity", so as to read:

SEC. 2. (a) Every person who imports, manufactures, produces, compounds, sells, deals in, dispenses, prescribes, administers, or gives away marihuana shall (1) within 15 days after the effective date of this act, or (2) before engaging after the expiration of such 15-day period in any of the above-mentioned activities, and (3) thereafter, on or before July 1 of each year, pay the following special taxes respectively:

(1) Importers, manufacturers, and compounders of marihuana, $24 per year.

(2) Producers of marihuana (except those included within subdivision (4) of this subsection), $1 per year, or fraction thereof during which they engage in such activity.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same section, paragraph (b), page 4, line 7, after "(1)" to strike out ", (2)," so as to read:

(b) Where a tax under subdivision (1) or (5) is payable on July 1 of any year it shall be computed for 1 year; where any such tax is payable on any other day it shall be computed proportionately from the first day of the month in which the liability for the tax accrued to the following July 1.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, page 6, line 10, after the name Columbia to insert "or"; in line 11, after the word "possession", to strike out "or the Canal Zone"; in line 14, after "Columbia", to insert "or"; and in line 15, after the words "United States", to strike out "or the Canal Zone", so as to read:

SEC. 5. It shall be unlawful for any person who shall not have paid the special tax and registered, as required by section 2, to send, ship, carry, transport, or deliver any marihuana within any Territory, the District of Columbia, or any insular possession, or from any State, Territory, the District of Columbia, any insular possession of the United States, or the Canal Zone, into any other State, Territory, the District of Columbia, or insular possession of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same section, paragraph (3), page 8, line 10, after "Columbia", to insert "or"; and in line 11, after the words "United States", to strike out "or the Canal Zone", so as to read:

(3) To the sale, exportation, shipment, or delivery of marihuana by any person within the United States, any Territory, the District of Columbia, or any of the insular possessions of the United States, to any person in any foreign country regulating the entry of marihuana, if such sale, shipment, or delivery of marihuana is made in accordance with such regulations for importation into such foreign country as are prescribed by such foreign country, such regulations to be promulgated from time to time by the Secretary of State of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same section, paragraph (5), page 8, line 26, after the word "to", to strike out "a person, registered as a producer under section 2, for use by such person for the further production of such plant, or to a person, registered under section 2 as a manufacturer, importer, or compounder, for use by such person for the manufacture of birdseed or for the manufacture of seed oil, seed cake, or any compound, manufacture, salt, derivative, mixture, or preparation of such oil or cake", and insert "any person registered under section 2"; so as to read:

(5) To a transfer of any seeds of the plant Cannabis sativa L. to any person registered under section 2.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 15, page 15, line 20, after the name "Hawaii", to strike out "the Canal Zone"; on page 16, line 5, after the word "the", to strike out "Canal Zone and the"; and in line 9, after the word "the", to strike out "Canal Zone and the"; so as to make the section read:

SEC. 15. The provisions of this act shall apply to the several States, the District of Columbia, the Territory of Alaska, the Territory of Hawaii, and the insular possessions of the United States, except the Philippine Islands. In Puerto Rico the administration of this act, the collection of the special taxes and transfer taxes, and the issuance of the order forms provided for in section 6 shall be performed by the appropriate internal-revenue officers of that government, and all revenues collected under this act in Puerto Rico shall accrue intact to the general government thereof. The President is hereby authorized and directed to issue such Executive orders as will carry into effect in the Virgin Islands the intent and purpose of this act by providing for the registration with appropriate officers and the imposition of the special and transfer taxes upon all persons in the Virgin Islands who import, manufacture, produce, compound, sell, deal in, dispense, prescribe, administer, or give away marihuana.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

GEORGE R. SLATE

The bill (S. 2159) for the relief of George R. Slate was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers George R. Slate, who was a member of Company G, Third Regiment Virginia Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 2d day of July 1898, and notwithstanding any provisions to the contrary in the act relating to pensions approved April 26, 1898, as amended by the act approved May 11, 1908: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

TRANSFER OF CERTAIN PROPERTY AT WEST POINT MILITARY RESERVATION

The bill (S. 2751) to authorize the transfer to the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Treasury of portions of the property within the West Point Military Reservation, N. Y., for the construction thereon of certain public buildings, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to make transfers to the jurisdiction and control of the Secretary of the Treasury of such portions of the property at present included within the West Point Military Reservation, N. Y., and upon such conditions as may be mutually agreed upon by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Treasury. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to construct within the limits of the property so transferred such building or buildings, appurtenances, and approaches thereto as he may deem adequate and suitable for the use of the Treasury Department as a depository, and for use in carrying out any other functions or duties of the Treasury Department: Provided, That upon cessation of such use the premises or any part thereof so transferred shall revert to the jurisdiction of the War Department.

AMENDMENT TO BANKRUPTCY ACT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2215) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 75 of an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", as amended, be further amended by amending subsection (c) to read as follows:

"(c) At any time after this section takes effect, a petition may be filed by any farmer, stating that the farmer is insolvent or unable to meet his debts as they mature, and that it is desirable to effect a composition or an extension of time to pay his debts. The petition or answer of the farmer shall be accompanied by his schedules. The petition and answer shall be filed with the court, but shall, on request of the farmer or creditor, be received by the conciliation commissioner for the county in which the farmer resides and promptly transmitted by him to the clerk of the court for filing. If any such petition is filed, an order of adjudication shall not be entered except as provided hereinafter in this section."

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of the bill, on page 2, after line 9, it is proposed to add two new sections, as follows:

SEC. 2. That section 75 of said act be further amended by amending paragraph 5 of subsection (s) to read as follows:

"This act shall be held to apply to all existing cases now pending in any Federal court, under this section, as well as to future cases. All cases under this section that have been dismissed by any conciliation commissioner, referee, or Federal court because such court erroneously assumed or held that subsection (s) of section 75 of this act was unconstitutional, shall be promptly reinstated, without any additional filing fees or charges. Any farm debtor who has filed under the General Bankruptcy Act may take advantage of this section upon written request to the court; and a previous discharge of the debtor under any other section of this act shall not be grounds for denying him the benefits of this section."

SEC. 3. That section 75 of said act be further amended by striking out and repealing paragraph 6 of subsection (s).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, I inquire if the amendment was submitted to the committee?

Mr. McCARRAN. The amendment was not submitted to the committee; but I may say to the Senator from Pennsylvania that it merely gives to those who, by reason of the original act being declared unconstitutional, fell outside the provisions of that act the benefit of the provisions of the act, it having since been held to be constitutional.

Mr. GUFFEY. I have no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NAVIGATION FACILITIES ON COLUMBIA RIVER

The bill (S. 607) to authorize improvement of navigation facilities on the Columbia River, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause such alterations in existing bridges across the Columbia River at Cascade Locks and Hood River, Oreg., as will render navigation for ocean-going vessels in the pool formed by the Bonneville Dam reasonably free, easy, and unobstructed, and to reimburse the owners of said bridges for the actual cost of such alterations from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for maintenance and improvement of rivers and harbors.

WABASH RIVER BRIDGE, LOCKPORT, IND.

The bill (H. R. 6636) granting the consent of Congress to the county of Carroll, in the State of Indiana, to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Wabash River at or near Lockport, Ind., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MERRIMACK RIVER BRIDGE, LOWELL, MASS.

The bill (H. R. 6920) granting the consent of Congress to the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, Middlesex County, and the city of Lowell, Mass., or any two of them, or any one of them, to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Merrimack River at Lowell, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ACADEMIC STANDING OF MILITARY AND NAVAL SCHOOLS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1971) to provide for the recognition by the Government of the United States of the academic standing of military and naval schools under its jurisdiction, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, with an amendment, on page 1, after line 6, to strike out "all military and naval schools (including the United States Coast Guard Academy)" and insert "the United States Military Academy, the United States Naval Academy, and the United States Coast Guard Academy", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the executive departments and independent establishments and agencies of the Government shall give equal recognition to all academic work certified to have been completed in, and certificates of academic credit furnished by, the United States Military Academy, the United States Naval Academy, and the United States Coast Guard Academy, under the jurisdiction of the Government of the United States, whether or not such schools have been accredited by the Association of American Universities.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the consideration of bills on the calendar.

ACCOMMODATIONS FOR DISTRICT COURT AT GLASGOW, MONT.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate return to Order of Business 879, being Senate bill 537, to provide suitable accommodations for the district court of the United States at Glasgow, Mont. The bill was objected to when reached on the calendar by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. I have explained it to him; I think he has no further objection; and I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have no objection to returning to the bill and to having it considered now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 537) to provide suitable accommodations for the district court of the United States at Glasgow, Mont., which had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with amendments on page 1, line 8, after the word "amount", to insert "not in excess of $100,000"; and on page 2, line 2, after the word "necessary" to insert "not in excess of $100,000"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to provide suitable rooms and accommodations for holding terms of the district court of the United States in the Federal building proposed to be constructed in Glasgow, Mont. The limit of cost for such building is hereby increased by such amount not in excess of $100,000 as may be necessary for that purpose; and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary not in excess of $100,000 in addition to the sums heretofore appropriated and allocated, for the construction of such building.

SEC. 2. So much of section 92 of the judicial code, as amended, as heads "Provided, That suitable rooms and accommodations for holding court at Glasgow, Lewiston, and Havre are furnished free of all expense to the United States" is amended to read as follows: "Provided, That suitable rooms and accommodations for holding court at Lewiston and Havre are furnished free of all expense to the United States."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM K. RICHARDSON—VETO MESSAGE (S. DOC. NO. 88)

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying bill, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I return herewith, without my approval, Senate Joint Resolution 30, entitled "For the relief of William K. Richardson."

Some time ago William K. Richardson brought suit against the United States in the Court of Claims to recover the sum of $10,000,000 for an alleged infringement of a patent relating to artillery projectiles. The Court of Claims, after taking testimony and hearing the case on the merits, made comprehensive and detailed findings of fact and rendered an opinion dismissing the petition. While sustaining the validity of the patent, it upheld the contention of Government counsel that the patent had not been infringed by the Government.

The purpose of the present resolution is to remand the case to the Court of Claims for reconsideration, subject to the limitation that the amount claimed should be reduced to 3 percent of the original amount, to wit, $300,000. In addition, by the recitals contained in the preamble, the resolution would practically declare the prior decision of the court erroneous, and would affirmatively declare that the Government infringed the patent, in spite of the ruling of the court to the contrary. Further, it would expressly waive certain affirmative defenses of the Government, such as the effect of the prior adjudication.

The claimant has had his day in court. After a full hearing on the merits, the tribunal to which the law gave him recourse reached the conclusion that his claim was not well founded. Reasons of policy, as well as appropriate regard for orderly judicial procedure, would seem to require that the parties should abide by the result of the litigation. Sufficient reason does not appear for reversing the decision of the court by legislative action.

In view of the foregoing considerations, I feel constrained to withhold my approval from the joint resolution.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 19, 1937.

DIVISION OF WATERS OF THE YELLOWSTONE RIVER

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 534) granting the consent of Congress to the States of Montana and Wyoming to negotiate and enter into a compact or agreement for division of the waters of the Yellowstone River; which was on page 2, line 8, after "within" to insert "or tributary to."

Mr. WHEELER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

MARITAL STATUS IN GOVERNMENT EMPLOYMENT

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, there was reported today from the Civil Service Committee, House bill 3408. This bill provides that no person by reason of marital relation "shall be discriminated against in any case because of his or her marital status in examination, appointment, reappointment, reinstatement, reemployment, promotion, transfer, retransfer, demotion, removal, or retirement."

The bill repeals, in substance, section 213 of the Economy Act of 1933. The bill was reported unanimously by the committee, and I think everyone believes that the act referred to should be repealed. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Tennessee if the committee was unanimous in reporting the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; the committee was unanimous.

Mr. AUSTIN. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection the bill (H. R. 3408) to amend the Civil Service Act approved January 16, 1883 (22 Stat. 403), and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That an act entitled "An act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States" (act of Jan. 16, 1883, 22 Stat. 403), is hereby amended by adding at the end of the sixth paragraph of section 2 of the act a new paragraph, as follows:

"And no person shall be discriminated against in any case because of his or her marital status in examination, appointment, reappointment, reinstatement, reemployment, promotion, transfer, retransfer, demotion, removal, or retirement. All acts or parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed."

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA TAXES

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 7472, being calendar no. 901, which is a bill to provide revenue for the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nevada.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7472) to provide additional revenue for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER [Mr. MINTON in the chair] laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported adversely the nomination of Charles I. Davis to be postmaster at Leesville, La., in place of B. F. Cowley, removed.

He also, from the same committee, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported favorably the nominations of sundry officers for promotion in the Navy.

Mr. COPELAND, from the Committee on Commerce, reported favorably the nominations of several citizens (or officers) for appointment as officers in the Coast Guard.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar. If there be no further reports of committees, the nominations on the calendar will be stated.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATION

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Joseph Newman Alderson to be State administrator of the Works Progress Administration for West Virginia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

IN THE ARMY

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Army.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that nominations in the Army be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, nominations in the Army are confirmed en bloc. That concludes the Executive Calendar.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Friday, July 23, 1937, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, JULY 22, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, our Father, source of all wisdom and truth, we pray that we may approach Thee with renewed confidence and faith in the things that make for righteousness and purity. Do Thou inspire us with broad, comprehensive views of life. Thou hast given us Thy holy law to guide, enlighten, and admonish us. Grant, O Lord God, that we may not break its bands asunder or cast away its cords. Let us seek the integrity of soul that shall preserve us from all evil. Blessed be Thy holy name for all the tokens of Thy presence, for the power Thou dost give to Thy truth, and for the inspiration to labor which Thou dost breathe into all true hearts. May the Master, the revelation of divine love, be our personal ideal; thus may we work for the good of our country, softening misfortune and hastening the better day. Through Christ our Redeemer. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on the following dates the President approved and signed bills and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

On July 12, 1937:

H. R. 1851. An act for the relief of W. D. Davis; and

H. R. 2774. An act for the relief of certain employees of the Division of Investigation, Department of the Interior, and certain disbursing officers of the Department of the Interior.

On July 13, 1937:

H. R. 2901. An act to extend the benefits of the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930, as amended, to certain employees in the legislative and judicial branches of the Government.

On July 16, 1937:

H. R. 7865. An act making appropriations for certain necessary operations of the Federal Government for the last half of the month of July 1937.

On July 17, 1937:

H. J. Res. 431. Joint resolution making an appropriation for the control of outbreaks of insect pests.

On July 19, 1937:

H. R. 458. An act for the relief of Eva Markowitz; and

H. R. 7493. An act making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, for civil functions administered by the War Department, and for other purposes.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I have been granted permission to address the House on tomorrow for 15 minutes. I ask unanimous consent that that time may be extended to 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, after disposition of business on the Speaker's table and the business of the day, I may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona and Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania, by unanimous consent, were granted permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

REPORT OF SUBCOMMITTEE ON TECHNOLOGY

Mr. BARRY. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged resolution (H. Con. Res. 21) from the Committee on Printing, authorizing the printing of the report of the subcommittee on technology, submitted to the National Resources Committee, entitled "Technological Trends and National Policy, Including the Social Implications of the New Inventions", as a document, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 21

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Report of the Subcommittee on Technology, submitted to the National Resources Committee, entitled "Technological Trends and National Policy, Including the Social Implications of the New Inventions", be printed as a House document; and that 10,000 additional copies shall be printed, of which 2,900 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 7,100 copies shall be for the use of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, may we have the title explained before we give consent?

Mr. BARRY. Mr. Speaker, last Saturday the President's National Resources Committee made public a 450,000-word report on Technological Trends and National Policy, Including the Social Implications of New Inventions. The report presents a survey of most of the great fields of technology and applied science, namely, agriculture, mining, transportation, the metallurgical and chemical industries, and electrical manufactures.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BARRY. Later.

Mr. TABER. Is this the book?

Mr. BARRY. That is it.

Mr. TABER. It is some 400 pages?

Mr. BARRY. I refuse to yield, Mr. Speaker.

This work, prepared by a large group of scientists, educators, and engineers identified with industrial, academic, and governmental activities, has received widespread praise in the Nation's press. President Roosevelt, when he authorized the release of the report, stated:

> A review of new inventions and problems of change which they carry with them is made for the first time by the Federal Government in this comprehensive survey of technological trends in major industries. For the continuous revision of plans we need continuing surveying agencies. In our planning of the Nation we must view general causes and trends that bear on our welfare. Any specific program may be affected by forces originating outside a particular problem.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TABER. I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARRY] cannot be taken off his feet by such a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order of the gentleman from Mississippi.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Evidently there is no quorum present.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 118]

Allen, Del.	Flannagan	Keller	Robsion, Ky.
Bates	Flannery	Kerr	Ryan
Bernard	Fleger	Kloeb	Sabath
Binderup	Forand	Kniffin	Sadowski

Ellenbogen	Hill, Ala.	Peyser	Withrow
Englebright	Hoffman	Plumley	Woodruff
Ferguson	Holmes	Poage
Fernandes	Hook	Rayburn
Fish	Imhoff	Reed, N. Y.

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and thirty-eight Members present, a quorum.

By unanimous consent, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a statement explaining an item in the third deficiency bill.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a speech delivered by me over the radio.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

RESEARCH SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

Mr. EICHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the research subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce may be permitted to continue hearings during the session of the House this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

RESOLUTION LAID ON TABLE

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to lay House Resolution 269, a rule making in order the consideration of certain flood legislation be laid on the table as the bill to which it refers has already been passed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

REPORT OF SUBCOMMITTEE ON TECHNOLOGY

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BARRY] is recognized.

Mr. BARRY. Mr. Speaker, this report holds out the hope that we can anticipate some of the effects of the major inventions and make plans to meet new situations that will arise as these inventions come into widespread use. While it is certain that much of the unemployment caused by the march of technological advance is absorbed by new occupations born of the new industries, it is equally true that in the meantime labor carries a very heavy burden through the readjustment and adaptations necessary on the part of the workers whose jobs are affected by change. Employers, likewise, are deeply affected by swift technological changes producing obsolescence and displacement of capital investment.

More than jobs and investment are affected by technical change: Family, church, community, State, and all industry are subject to its influence. Study and investigation of technological advances and their social implications constitute one of our most important American planning problems.

I commend this report for earnest consideration in solving the great problem of how best to conserve and develop our vast national resources. A study of this report will be of help not only to public servants in the legislative, executive, and judicial positions of the Government but also to others in private employ, business, journalism, agriculture, and the teaching professions.

The purpose of this resolution is to have printed 10,000 copies of this report, 2,900 of which shall be for the use of the Senate and 7,100 copies for the use of the House.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARRY. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the distribution be through the folding room, where the copies will be placed to the credit of the Members, or through the document room, where the first fellows who get there get them all?

Mr. BARRY. I understand that each Member will have 16 copies. I do not know all the details of the mechanics of distribution.

Mr. MICHENER. I do not think a resolution such as this ought to be passed unless it is therein provided that the reports shall be distributed through the folding room, for then each Member will get his number. Otherwise they will be placed in the document room, and the fellow who does not get there by 10 a. m. of the second day will find them all gone.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARRY. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. Under a resolution of this character the documents must be distributed through the folding room. There is no other way in which they can be distributed, even though it is not so mentioned in the resolution, it is made mandatory by the Printing Act of 1895. Each Member receives a certain number, all being treated alike.

I had an opportunty to see an advance copy of this report. It contains 388 pages. Of course, I did not go into it as thoroughly as I would have liked to, but that part of the report which I read was very informative. It is really alarming to know the situation that confronts us today in reference to labor-saving and labor-displacing devices, as well as the situation that is going to confront us in the future. This report enumerates many various new inventions. I will refer to just a few. For instance, they have in the Pennsylvania Station in New York today a beam of light. When you walk through that light a gate automatically opens. It takes the place of the gateman.

There is another invention in existence where you can walk up to a door, speak, and the door will open. Do you realize they can produce food inside the home today? Whether you realize it or not it is being done. This is no laughing matter, it is too serious. Go through this document and you will then realize what I say is true. They are making gasoline from coal. That will sound good to the miner, but they also are mining coal now with about 50 percent of the labor formerly used. A device has been invented for the picking of cotton. If it is ever perfected practically 90 percent of the Negroes of the South who are now existing through the work they receive picking cotton will be thrown upon the public because they will have no means of earning a livelihood. I realize some will say this cotton picker will never do what is claimed for it but others, just as well informed, insist it will be a grave menace to the South if it is ever put to use.

Every big newspaper in the country last Sunday carried articles about this report on the first page under double-column headlines, and on Monday and Tuesday they followed with editorials. This report is one of the most valuable documents that I have ever seen come from any Government agency since I have been in Congress. Every library should have a copy and every businessman in the country should read it. There is a possibility for great industries to be destroyed overnight. I predict if labor-saving and labor-displacing devices continue to be placed in industry the day will arrive when you will be taxing machines to take care of those thrown out of employment by their operation. Dreaming, some will say. My answer is too much has already been accomplished to refer to these inventions in that way.

What are we going to do, others will ask. As I see it we will make a most serious mistake if the great minds of the country do not join and plan for the future. We should by all means accept the suggestion found in this report to set up a proper organization to prepare suggestions to meet the conditions that are bound to confront either this generation or the next. How can we overlook the prediction that if some of these inventions are perfected in order to put the same number of people back to work that were employed in 1929 we will be required to increase the production of that year 125 percent? What would we do with the food and articles if we produced 125 percent more than we did in 1929?

I hope the House will unanimously approve the resolution.

Mr. BARRY. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], a member of the committee.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I may say to the House that on Tuesday I secured a copy of the President's National Resources Committee report on technological trends and national policy, of which our committee was asked to have 10,000 printed and placed in the folding room. I spent the greater part of Tuesday looking this volume over. The more I read the more bewildered I became; the less I knew about the subject discussed.

There are many things in here in the way of recommendations that are a good bit like some of these stockbrokers' prospectus who try to sell you something that will tell you how to purchase stock. After you have read it, then you wonder what action should be taken in the purchase of stocks, whether to buy a certain stock or leave it alone. No definite information. So a great deal of the report that we have here seems to be in that category. I may say, however, that there are some things in here that probably will be of great value to the people of this country if they will study it. This book contains 388 pages. If we publish 10,000 copies, 16 will go to each Member of the House and 29 to each Member of the Senate. This will take up about 9,800 copies. Then the depository libraries will receive 500 copies, the Senate document room 150 copies, the House document room 500 copies, the Secretary of State 20 copies, the White House 10 copies, and several other minor distributions.

If the Members of the Congress who receive this book will study and read it, then I would feel it is money well spent; but if they get this book and let it lay on their shelves and not look at it at all, it is money unwisely spent. If you Members of Congress do not distribute it to people in your respective districts who will use it, then the money will be wasted. Therefore it is up to every Member of the House to use diligence in the distribution of this book.

Mr. Speaker, I call attention to some statements that caused me to believe that this book should be published. Of course, I do not agree with the statement I am about to quote; but thinking perhaps I might be wrong, I felt this should be published to give the benefit of the doubt. It says here in the foreword:

> For instance, even if industrial techniques remained the same, the volume of production would have to be greater in the future than in 1929 in order to absorb the increase in working population and keep unemployment to the level of that date. If the productivity of 1935 (the latest year for which figures are available) continues the same in 1937, and the composition of the Nation's total product remains unchanged, production would have to be increased 20 percent over that of 1929 to have as little unemployment as existed then. Failing this, there will be more unemployment; and if labor efficiency is increased by new inventions or otherwise, then the production of physical goods and services must be more than 120 percent of what it was in 1929.

Now, that is quite a statement to be made by the ones who edited this book.

I call attention to the fact that in part 1 of this book the people who edited it are college professors. Section 2 of the book was also composed by college professors. I have the criticism to make that if some practical men had helped write this book, some men who have had practical experience, a little different idea might have been conveyed with reference to the ultimate conclusions.

I think we ought to give consideration to the fact this book has been compiled and edited primarily by college professors. In the future when they want to find out the difference between theory and practice, we have got to put some practical men on the board to edit an edition of this kind.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. The fact is, no matter who prepared this report, they have given the practical men something to think about, something that shows a serious situation ahead; is that not true?

Mr. RICH. I would say it gave them something to think about because it has made me think. [Laughter and applause.] I am going to give them the benefit of the doubt and I agree to go along with my colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARRY] to recommend the expenditure of over $5,000 so that we may have some knowledge of what the professors are talking about. There has been much propaganda in the papers about this report appearing in print. This administration is a past master in propaganda.

Mr. BARRY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY].

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. Speaker, I favor this resolution. In this respect I differ from some of my colleagues. I believe this is one of the most timely documents that has even been offered the House and Senate in my 6 years as a Member of this body.

Mr. Speaker, education has been defined as the problem of diffusing knowledge and research has been defined as the problem of extending the borders of knowledge. This book is an expression in both education and research, measured by that yardstick. It has chapters on technology in agriculture, mineral industries, transportation, communication, power, chemistry, electricity, metallurgy, and with reference to the construction industries. It deals with the vital problem of adapting the inventive genius of mankind to modern life in labor and in industry.

I hope the resolution passes unanimously. I predict you will find a greater demand from your constituents for this book than for any printed document the Government has put out this year. It is timely, and follows the trend of the times. The expense is only $5,900. The other day we appropriated $225,000 on a small book about the Constitution. Here is an expenditure of only $6,000 for something which is worth while and which points out ways and means and methods to meet the changing conditions in industry and labor, with especial emphasis on unemployment and increasing productivity. I hope the House will favor this resolution.

Mr. BARRY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MICHENER. Is there any opportunity to offer an amendment providing that this document shall be distributed through the folding room rather than the document room, so each Member will get his share of copies?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state in answer to the parliamentary inquiry, that after the previous question has been ordered no amendment is in order.

The Chair may further state that under the provisions of the Printing Act of 1895 these documents automatically must be distributed through the folding room.

The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—INTERSTATE COMPACT TO CONSERVE OIL AND GAS (H. DOC. NO. 306)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and ordered printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith a report of the Secretary of State enclosing a certified copy of the Interstate Compact to Conserve Oil and Gas, executed on May 10, 1937, by the Governors of the States of Oklahoma, Texas, Kansas, New Mexico, and Colorado, which has been deposited in the Department of State of the United States in accordance with the provisions contained therein. The compact refers to the Interstate Compact to Conserve Oil and Gas executed at Dallas, Tex., on February 16, 1935, which received the consent of the Congress in Public Resolution No. 64, Seventy-fourth Congress, approved August 27, 1935. As the abovementioned compact will expire on September 1, 1937, the present compact provides that the original compact shall continue in force for 2 years from that date. In a letter from the Secretary of the Interior dated July 8, 1937, enclosed with the report of the Secretary of State, the opinion is expressed that some good may be accomplished by this compact.

Accordingly, I hope that Congress will enact appropriate legislation giving its consent to this interstate compact, as required by article I, section 10, of the Constitution of the United States.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 19, 1937.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—LAWS ENACTED BY LEGISLATURE OF PUERTO RICO

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs and ordered printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

As required by section 23 of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1917, entitled "An act to provide a civil government for Puerto Rico, and for other purposes", I transmit herewith certified copies of laws enacted by the Thirteenth Legislature of Puerto Rico during its fourth special session, September 21–22, 1936, and by the Fourteenth Legislature of Puerto Rico during its first regular session, February 8 to April 15, 1937.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 19, 1937.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL, 1938

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business is the further consideration of the conference report on the Interior Department appropriation bill.

The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 90: Page 86, after line 9, insert the following: "Colorado-Big Thompson project, Colorado: For construction in accordance with the plan described in Senate Document No. 80, Seventy-fifth Congress, $900,000: Provided, That no construction thereof shall be commenced until the repayment of all costs of the project shall, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, be assured by appropriate contracts with water conservancy districts, or irrigation districts or water users' associations organized under the laws of Colorado, or other form of organization satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. CUMMINGS].

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, if a man were to approach his banker and ask for a loan of funds, he would expect to make a statement to that banker which would show his financial ability to repay the loan. The people of northeastern Colorado, the district which I represent, are today asking the Members of the House as representatives of the Government to provide for the advancement of funds out of the funds of the Bureau of Reclamation for the purpose of constructing an irrigation project in northeastern Colorado.

May I say to you now, in all candor and all frankness, that after you have heard the presentation of this case if you feel this district is not only willing but able financially to reimburse the Government, then as Members of this House it is your duty to vote against it. We are not asking for something we cannot repay. In the average irrigation and reclamation projects the money is spent in developing new land. I am not seeking to take any fall out of those irrigation projects, because I know they are right and in time will repay the money spent on them; but today I am coming before you to ask for the advancement of funds for a district, part of which has been under irrigation since 1870.

This map before you shows the land involved. It is about 200 miles from there to this part. There are 850,000 acres under irrigation; 650,000 acres of it are affected by this project. There are 175,000 people living in that area today. If this bill is passed it will make it possible for another 50,000 people in the near future to live there, and in the years to come no one knows how many can live there. We have an assessed valuation of $175,000,000, plus $30,000,000 which is now invested in irrigation projects that are not taxed. The last session of our legislature passed without a dissenting vote a law which made it legally possible to put an assessment of 1 mill on every dollar's worth of property in this district, in the city as well as on the farm, which will raise $150,000. This means that some $400,000 will be raised by payments on this land.

I have owned and operated irrigated farms in this section for 30 years. I have owned stock in one ditch company all that time. Our bylaws provide that your water is not turned out unless you pay your assessments, and if you do not pay your assessments your stock is sold for the purpose of paying them. In my 30 years' experience there has never been a share of stock sold. Why? Because the water is worth more than the land, and without the water the land is practically useless.

In this territory today we feed 25 percent of all the lambs and 11 percent of all the cattle dry fed in the United States. During the campaign in the fall when they were processing the sugar beets, every day in the week, 7 days a week, we manufactured 100 carloads of sugar. There are 12 large factories in that district. We buy hundreds of thousands of dollars, millions of dollars, in fact, worth of corn and cotton cake.

May I call the attention of you people in the South to one thing specifically, that if this water is not used in the State of Colorado and the northern States it will go to Old Mexico. I made a trip to northern Old Mexico last fall and traveled over one ranch of 800,000 acres, of which 600,000 acres can be irrigated. They grew 90,000 acres of cotton on that land last year. I visited their gin in Mexicali, said to be the largest on the North American Continent.

They were ginning this cotton, shipping it to Japan to be manufactured into cheap cotton goods, and reshipping it to the United States. You people in the South are as much interested in this matter as we are.

Today I am going to just touch on the financial part of this proposition, and, as I have said, if you think it will not repay the fund, or if you think it is going to cost the taxpayers anything, do not vote for it.

In addition to the irrigation features of the project, it is the largest power development in the West except Grand Coulee, Boulder Dam, and the Tennessee Valley, and the people who propose to pay for this are building a tunnel 13 miles through the hills, building reservoirs on the western slopes, and we are providing for 350 cubic feet of water every day in the year with a fall of 3,200 feet, and as I have said, it will generate more power than any project in the United States except the ones I have just mentioned. The engineers say this project will pay for itself in 40 years, plus $90,000 per year to the Government, and will furnish a supplementary water supply for 650,000 acres.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I only have a few minutes, but I yield briefly.

Mr. COLDEN. Does the diversion of this water impair in any way the allocation of water under the Colorado Basin compact?

Mr. CUMMINGS. It does not; and the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR], who has opposed this project, has consented to it, and this project will only take 350,000 feet of water out of the 14,000,000 that passes Lees Ferry, 60 percent of which is furnished by the State of Colorado.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. And is not this one of the very few projects that Colorado has to utilize its portion of the allocation of water to the upper basin States?

Mr. CUMMINGS. So far as I know, it is the only one of any importance that can use it.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. And is it not a fact that Colorado furnishes 60 percent of the water that flows into Lake Mead?

Mr. CUMMINGS. It does.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. How much power did the gentleman say this will produce?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I say it is the fourth largest in the United States, and the gentleman can answer that better than I can. There is 350 cubic feet of water, with a fall of 3,200 feet, and the first drop is 730 feet.

Some question has been raised about where the funds will come from and whether or not we are overloading the Interior appropriation bill, and also whether or not the Bureau of the Budget has agreed to this.

I call your attention to the fact that the Bureau of the Budget for this year authorized $41,151,000 for reclamation purposes, and for Indian reclamation projects $3,515,000, or a total of $44,640,000. The appropriation for the Indians has been increased by over $3,000,000, but the total for irrigation and reclamation this year, as compared with last year, shows a decrease of over $12,000,000.

In other words, if this bill is passed, we will be appropriating less by $12,000,000 than was appropriated last year.

I do not know that there is much more I can add, except to say that within this district we have the State university, the State agricultural college, the State teachers' college, 13 large sugar factories, and 175,000 people, taxable today at probably $175,000,000, and this is in a district that feeds, as I have said, 11 percent of all the cattle and spends millions of dollars in buying feed from the outside.

Mr. GREEVER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I yield.

Mr. GREEVER. And this brings no new land of any kind into cultivation, as I understand it?

Mr. CUMMINGS. Not a foot.

Mr. GREEVER. And is merely a supplementary water supply to lands that have been under irrigation for a long time?

Mr. CUMMINGS. Some of them since 1870.

It may interest you gentlemen to know the kind of crops we will grow.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I yield, briefly.

Mr. DOWELL. As I understood the gentleman, if this project goes through, 50,000 people are to occupy this land?

Mr. CUMMINGS. There are 175,000 people living there now, and this will make it possible for at least another 50,000, and in the years to come several times that number.

Mr. DOWELL. Will this change the character of the agriculture in that country?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to refuse to answer any further questions, because I want to call your attention to the crops grown there now.

The average crop in the three largest counties is 32 percent alfalfa, 10⅔ percent beets, 12.39 percent barley.

I want to add the statement that another reason we can pay for this project is because three counties in this district in the year 1936 paid a quarter of a million dollars of income taxes to this Government.

I would like to tell you more about this proposition, but, as I have stated, I am trying to confine my statement to the financial part of it, and I want to convince you that we are not asking for charity, and we are not asking for something we cannot repay, because if $175,000,000, plus 175,000 hard-working people, cannot repay $22,000,000 for irrigation, plus $7,000,000 for power, then the country is in bad shape.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Is it a fact that the water supply which you have heretofore enjoyed is being greatly diminished by natural causes?

Mr. CUMMINGS. In the last 10 years there has been a gradual reduction in the water supply, but this entire irrigation system would have paid for itself in the last 8 years if we had had it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If this additional water is given you, in order to make room for the increased population, will you have to more intensely cultivate the land and bring about greater production or change your method of crop rotation, or just how would you go about that?

Mr. CUMMINGS. The land will be more intensely cultivated. We will grow less corn and barley and raise more vegetables, and I may say that one day last August 50 percent of all the vegetables loaded in the United States were loaded in the State of Colorado, and every carload was grown by irrigation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I think that an actual view of this situation is necessary to permit this House to have a fair judgment of what it should do. There is involved in this proposition, including the complete development, approximately $44,000,000. There is, as the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. CUMMINGS] has told you, 615,000 acres of irrigable lands which is now, or has been at some date in the past, under cultivation. I think we might as well be frank about this. The reason these people want it is that formerly they used to grow, as the gentleman from Colorado has told you, corn and barley and grains of all kinds, and now they are getting into intensive cultivation. As a result of that intensive cultivation, the growth of vegetables, melons, and that sort of thing, more water is required per acre. They are unable to irrigate all of the land with the water which is available on the east side of the Rockies, so they propose to build a tunnel under the mountain, which at that point, I think, is about 12,000 feet high, about some 12 miles long, to carry the water through from the west side of the mountain to the east side of the mountain. The gentleman from Colorado tells you that it will provide homes and work for 50,000 more people in this territory. I believe that is true, because that intensive cultivation of vegetables, which go into the market and compete with other vegetables and that sort of thing, raised upon land not irrigated, would probably, with this Government subsidized land, drive out of business some of our farmers in other places. I know it would compete very seriously with those in my territory. The question is whether at this time, with the agricultural situation as it is, we should go ahead and provide additional funds to the tune of about $44,000,000 to embark upon an additional reclamation project at a time when there is other land in private ownership already available to take care of the situation.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINGS. This irrigation project, plus the first power plant, cost $29,000,000. The balance of the $44,000,000 will not be expended until such time as the Government in its wisdom proposes to expend it for the purpose of developing electrical energy, to be used for the benefit of the people.

Mr. TABER. I thank the gentleman. I hope this House will reject this motion to concur in the Senate amendment because of the fact that it is inadvisable economically to go ahead with more reclamation projects with the present agricultural situation in this country. I hope that we will consider it on the basis of what ought to be done and not because of some nice feeling we may have for someone else. I like to see everybody happy, and I like to see development of resources, but I do not believe in subsidizing with Government funds the development of land for irrigation purposes in times like these, when land already in private ownership and operated by farmers on their own land is able to supply the food demand of the people. I hope the motion will be rejected.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I find myself reluctant to take a position in opposition to the desires of the congressional contingent from Colorado. I do not believe there is in this House a delegation from any State in the Union that is collectively so affable and so temperate in its demands and which stands in such high esteem in the estimation of this House as do the four sincere, stalwart horsemen from the State of Colorado—and I refer to Mr. TAYLOR, Mr. MARTIN, Mr. LEWIS, and Mr. CUMMINGS. [Applause.] However, despite the affection which I have for them, I must oppose this proposition and the Senate amendment. I can agree with everything that Mr. CUMMINGS has said on the floor and still sincerely oppose what was written into this bill at the other end of the Capitol, and my opposition is predicated upon the fact that even though this will enrich that territory, even though it will provide work for 50,000 people, even though there is need for 300,000 acre-feet of water, there is this fact to be considered, and that is the integrity of the national-park system of this country.

The proposition, briefly, is to impound the headwaters of the Colorado in a reservoir at Granby; to pump the water into Shadow Mountain Lake, a part of Grand Lake; and then, by means of a canal and tunnel, carry the waters under the Continental Divide and there send them into reservoirs and ultimately divert them out into these irrigation purposes. The matter has been considered before the Irrigation and Reclamation Committee of the House. I take no position with respect to the power involved and the benefits involved, but I do believe that this is an essential point which the Members of the House ought to remember, and that is that, so far as we can learn from the record, no alternative proposal has been submitted which will keep intact the integrity of the national-park system. Once this Congress authorizes the beginning of commercial exploitation either of the park system or of the areas adjacent thereto it will be the beginning of the destruction of the park system of this country.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I cannot yield now.

Back in 1870 a little contingent of men went to Yellowstone Park. They for the first time appreciated the natural beauties of that country, and out of that little meeting there ultimately evolved a desire and a program for a park system. So Rocky Mountain Park, commonly known as Estes Park, was created in 1914 or 1915. Two years thereafter—bear that in mind—2 years thereafter the National Park Service was created. Consequently, there was no administrative commission to look after the parks, to inspire appreciation on the part of the public, until 2 years after this park was set up, until 2 years after that provision was put in the park act that authorized the ultilization of flowage rights in the park. But I admonish the Members of this House that once we start we never know where the end will be. I realize that this does not particularly cut right into the heart of the park. The east end of this diversion tunnel is located in Wind River Basin, which has been authorized for acquisition by the Congress, but, as I understand, has never been acquired. This tunnel goes under the Continental Divide. I am informed that there are 25,000 linear feet of brittle rock-soil structure that may be imperiled by the tunnel. There are 23 lakes adjacent to or over this tunnel that may be imperiled if the tunnel is put under the Continental Divide. Those dangers could be avoided if some alternate route had been examined and surveyed and proposed, even though it might cost more out of the Federal Treasury. I believe the Congress of the United States stands in the fiduciary relation of a trustee to the people of the 48 States of the Union, for the purpose of preserving the integrity of these parks and to resist every effort at exploitation.

In 1920, when John Barton Payne was Secretary of the Interior, a proposal was submitted to dam up Yellowstone Lake. They wanted to go into the park because of free land and lower cost. They brought almost the identical reasons to bear by saying that if they had to acquire land for the reclamation project it would be prohibitive in cost. The answer of John Barton Payne, the then Secretary of the Interior, was that if they could not make the proposition go on the basis of acquiring the land it ought to be abandoned. Since that time there have been any number of abortive attempts at commercial exploitation of our public-park system, and always they have been successfully resisted.

Let me say to you gentlemen from New York, suppose the board of aldermen had given ear to every proposal to improve Central Park, there would not be enough greensward nor enough lawn left in Central Park in New York City for a boy to stand on in order to change a bathing suit. If the park board in Chicago had given willing ear to every proposal to change Lincoln Park and to improve it, there would not be enough grass and lawn there for a child to sit down and play mumblety-peg. Once it is started you cannot stop that exploitation. Once we establish this precedent there will come a time when they will want to look into the mineral possibilities of the park. They will want to look into the grazing possibilities when a drought comes to the available grazing lands of the West. They will want to establish airplane landing fields and they will want to put in railroads. They will want to put in ski jumps and all that sort of thing. Always the argument will be made that it is not ruining the scenery; it is not marring the natural beauty; it will do no harm. But effects are cumulative and in the years to come our scenic resources will be despoiled and posterity will then lament our lack of vision.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. CUMMINGS. We already have the ski jumps.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Possibly so.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Put in by the park people.

Mr. DIRKSEN. For the comfort of the visitors in the park. Last year 500,000 people visited Rocky Mountain Park. We have $6,000,000 invested in that park at the present time. Are we this day going to make the first step that will ultimately impair the integrity of the national park system?

I say to my good friends from Colorado that I am making no commitment upon the purposes and the merits of this proposal, but let us take out this amendment. Let us vote it down. Let us send this proposition back, and let us insist that the reclamation engineer explore alternative methods and routes, even though it may cost a great deal more. Thereby Coloradoans can have their cake and the park system of the country will be preserved for the perpetual enjoyment of the people of the 48 States of the Union. Remember that we stand in a fiduciary relation to the people of the country today. Five hundred thousand people went to Estes Park in 1936. Shall we today permit exploitation either adjacent to or in the park, or take a chance on impairing some of these natural beauties? I think it can be worked out so that the people on the western slope will get their water and the park system will be preserved.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Of course the gentleman has visited the park?

Mr. DIRKSEN. No.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. The gentleman never visited Rocky Mountain National Park?

Mr. DIRKSEN. No.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Where does the gentleman get his information, may I ask?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I will say first of all that the information comes from the National Park Service, and from the hearings. Even the Secretary of the Interior has not yet passed on the matter. He was in the hospital when this controversy was going on.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Read the Secretary's statement on page 9 of the hearings, in which he says a twofold duty of looking after the Reclamation Service which is in the Department of the Interior, and also preserving the integrity of our National Park System, which is in the Department of the Interior. According to this letter, which is dated June 24, 1937, addressed to Mr. CARL HAYDEN, United States Senate, the matter has not been passed upon by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Does the gentleman believe that a tunnel 9 feet in diameter, the nearest point of which is 400 feet from the surface, varying from that to 8,000 feet below the surface, would permit water to seep down into it?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I think there is always that possibility, especially in the case of this tunnel, for it goes through very brittle rock, and must be provided with surface vents.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Possibility! Water does not seep into the East River Tunnel in New York.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Maybe not. This is not East River.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. There is not any chance.

Mr. DIRKSEN. They will have to bore vents in order to drive that tunnel, as I understand, and then there will be the question of the disposition of the debris. I was a contractor for a number of years in the dirt game and I know a little something about what happens when tunnels are drilled and dirt removed. You have to deposit the excavated materials somewhere. Provision must be made for construction rigs, for debris, for canals, for power lines, and what not. So, in my opinion, you are taking a chance upon impairing this park. We ought to send this project back by voting the Senate amendment down and insist that the proponents come in here with an alternate proposition whereby our friends from Colorado can be taken care of and our park system preserved. [Applause.]

Since Thursday last, when discussion on this conference report was suspended, I have heard much about this project. I have read much about it. There has been the usual bogey man cry that opposition to this amendment was being inspired by the power interests. There has been the contention that the arguments of those who are opposed to this amendment are silly and ridiculous. Doubtless, those same things will be said in the course of the discussion this afternoon. Let us see, therefore, just how silly they are.

If any single person should have expert knowledge on this subject and if any single person should be able to see both sides of this picture without prejudice or rancor, that person would be Mr. A. E. Demaray, Associate Director of the National Park Service in the Department of Interior. He works for Secretary Ickes.

If Mr. Demaray was found within shouting distance of a power lobbyist, how long would he keep his job? If he showed an interest in the park service that would lead him to distort the facts or becloud the truth, how long could he remain in the Interior Department. With this qualification of the witness, I suggest that every Member of the House examine his testimony as it appears on pages 42, 43, and 44 of the hearings on the bill S. 2681 which authorizes this project.

Mr. Demaray acknowledges the right to use flowage in the national parks under the act of 1915 and then points out that it was 2 years later before the National Park Service was created.

He points out that alternate routes are available for this project and that they have not been explored. Nowhere is this statement controverted so far as I can find in the hearings.

He points out that the eastern portal of the tunnel lies in an area that has been authorized by Congress for acquisition and annexation to the park.

He points out that the debris will be deposited within this area that has been authorized for annexation to the park.

He points out that a portion of Grand Lake has been authorized for addition to the park, and that Grand Lake, or a portion thereof, will be flooded and become an artificial reservoir.

He points out that 6,900 feet of bad ground and 17,500 feet of ground that must be shored up will be encountered in driving the tunnel.

He points out that there is a shearing and breakage of the rock structure on both sides of the Continental Divide in close proximity to this proposed tunnel.

He points out that nobody can state with certainty what the effect of this construction work will have on the 23 adjacent lakes which are integral elements in the scenic beauty of this park.

He points out that the approach roads will be paralleled by canals, power lines, towers, and other incidents of construction.

And finally, when quizzed about other routes, he stated:

> I do not think there have been other surveys. I think Mr. Page (referring to John C. Page, Commissioner of the Bureau of Reclamation) can answer that. I think they have dismissed the possibility of making detail surveys because of the evident advantage of the route which was selected for a complete survey.

Nowhere do I find an answer from Mr. Page respecting other surveys and so the record must stand that the first advantageous route surveyed was adopted, irrespective of what it might do to our park system. Studies were made but no surveys on the ground that it would be too expensive. What justification can there be for withholding these surveys when $44,000,000 is involved in this project.

This should be answer enough to those legislative engineers who may characterize these contentions against this proposal as silly and ridiculous.

Now, then, for the other witnesses who can be marshalled in opposition to this proposal. Will anyone say that the testimony of Robert Sterling Yard, of the Wilderness Society, who appeared in opposition, is ridiculous or lacking in substance. Will anybody believe that the opposition of Mr. Frederick Delano, chairman of the National Resources Committee, is lacking in substance.

Will anybody believe that the opposition of the Izaak Walton League of America, as expressed by its vice president, Mr. D'Arcy Magee, is capricious or silly. Will anybody believe that the opposition of Mr. C. H. Collingwood, forester of the American Forestry Association, was for light or transient reasons. Here are the people whose genuine interest in the outdoors and in the preservation of our exhaustible scenic and natural resources has never been questioned. They speak as experts and here they are marshalled against this proposal. Perhaps all argument is ridiculous. Who knows?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, on my way over to the House this morning it recurred to me that I had the privilege of witnessing the opening of the first reclamation project constructed by the Government of the United States, which involved the construction of a tunnel. That was the Gunnison tunnel project by means of which, by the boring of a tunnel 6 miles long through a mountain range, the waters of the Gunnison River were diverted to the Uncompahgre Valley on the western slope of the State of Colorado to irrigate the land of that valley. That was in 1910. That project was dedicated by William H. Taft, President of the United States, not down here in the White House but in person on the ground. That is of how much importance that project was thought to be.

I had the honor of being at that time a Member of this body and of traveling with President Taft to the project on his private car. I can recall that scene at this moment. President Taft stated to me afterward that he was positively electrified by the two local speeches that were made at the dedication, one of them by Hon. John Calhoun Bell, a Member of this body for 10 years, from the Fifty-third to the Fifty-eighth Congresses, and the other by State Senator Horace T. DeLong, of Grand Junction, a brilliant lawyer, the one a Democrat, the other a Republican, who made two of the most powerful 10- or 15-minute speeches I ever listened to.

I want to remind our Republican friends that reclamation was established by their party as a part of a great national program of conservation of the natural resources of the Western States of the Union. It was established under a Republican President, Theodore Roosevelt, and a Republican Congress. In my judgment, the great contribution of Theodore Roosevelt to the welfare of America was the conservation policy.

I want to say to my Democratic friends that while that section of the country is at this time largely represented by Democrats in the House of Representatives, there is no politics over reclamation in the West. Everybody in the West is for reclamation as essential to the very future existence, progress, and welfare of that country; and regardless of politics they have no place in their calculations for the representatives of any party which would seek to obstruct or destroy this policy.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I have only a few minutes; I am sorry, but I cannot yield.

Mr. Speaker, I have no reclamation project in my district, although it is located wholly in the Rocky Mountain and irrigation region, but I hope some day to have a comparable project in my district. Mr. Speaker, this is not a congressional district question; it is not a State question; this is a question vital to the welfare of at least one-half the geographical area of the United States. I doubt whether Members from the South and East fully realize that one-half of the geographical area of the United States, embracing all or parts of 15 large States, is dependent for its agricultural, domestic, and industrial water supply on reclamation and irrigation, on the storing and distribution of water—not water that falls from the clouds, but water that is gathered out of the rivers and streams and stored and distributed, and mostly by direct distribution.

I have stated before when kindred matters were up in the House that not only water but irrigation water is the lifeblood of the West. To withhold from that great area aid for the development of systems for the storage and distribution of water is to deny it the development of the two great indispensable bases of life—land and water.

A lesson as to the value of water in the West may be drawn from the very fights, such as the Gila project fight, which have occurred on this floor between western Representatives. These fights, it is true, have been used to discredit reclamation, but they were fights for life. Water in the West is real estate, conveyed by deed separately from the land. The use of irrigation water is rigidly regulated by State laws and court decrees. State irrigation superintendents and commissioners oversee its distribution. Armed ditch riders patrol the ditches, strictly enforcing the law and seeing that each user gets only what is his. Men are shot down in the West for unlocking a small sluice box out of turn to let a little water run on their soil. Men are brought into court and sent to jail for running a little extra water on their crops, of which they must rob their neighbor. Larceny of water is punishable by fine and imprisonment in Colorado, and I presume in all the irrigation States.

For 30 years Colorado and Kansas have been in the Supreme Court of the United States over the water of the Arkansas River. All western States are in court with each other all the time over the waters of their rivers, because that water is life. These controversies reach down to the individual farmer, the individual ditch, and the different sections of a State. So it is that the farmers of the Platte Valley in Colorado are willing, under the reclamation law, to mortgage their lands to the Government to get the water which in the eastern and southern sections of the country falls freely from the heavens. When they get it, they will be in their fields at all hours of the night in gum boots and with shovels, letting the life-giving fluid down the crop rows. Irrigation farming is hard labor.

In Colorado nature has furnished us with a special problem. As shown on the national map, Colorado is bisected from north to south by the main range of the Rocky Mountains, known as the Continental Divide. The waters falling on one slope find their way to the Pacific and on the other slope to the Atlantic, and it gives rise to what we in Colorado call the western and eastern slopes. But this Divide lies, as the map shows, closest to the western boundaries of the State, with the result that the western slope has the greater part of the water and the eastern slope the greater part of the land. The western slope also enjoys the heavier rainfall, so that where many parts of the eastern slope are nearly bare the other side is heavily timbered. This project represents a practical effort, now agreed upon by the people of both slopes after a generation of controversy, to get the landless water to the waterless land. The water is certainly there, the land is certainly there, and it can be done.

Mr. Speaker, the main objection, apparently, to this project is not its cost, is not its practicability; apparently the main objection is the alleged injury to Grand Lake and the surrounding area. Grand Lake means more to the city of Denver than it means to all the rest of the country. Grand Lake and its surrounding area was the playground of the city of Denver long before it was ever heard of or visited by the people of any other State, and it is the playground of Denver today. Denver is behind this project, and I know as well as I am standing here that if the area were endangered by this project, as gentlemen claim it is, Denver would be down here fighting it if it dried up every farm in the Platte Valley in Colorado. Leave it to Denver to determine whether this project will injure Grand Lake and the surrounding national-park area.

As shown by the very excellent model prepared by the Bureau of Reclamation, instead of damaging Grand Lake, the project will result in the creation of two additional and much larger lakes. If the man who makes two blades of grass grow where one grew before is a benefactor of mankind, in the semiarid western half of the United States he is no less a benefactor who makes two drops of water grow where one grew before. The creation of these additional lakes will not only guarantee an additional permanent water supply to both the eastern and western slopes, but they will reinforce Grand Lake itself.

Mr. Speaker, there is one other objection raised to this legislation which I am at a loss to understand, and that is that it may injure the wildlife of the area. A few days ago in conversation with a former Member of this body who lives in St. Louis, I asked him, without disclosing the object of my question, about reports that the Keokuk Dam across the Mississippi had injured the wildlife in that area. On the contrary, he said there were various kinds of wildlife there now that had never been seen before, and he followed up by saying that the same thing was true of the great lake constructed a few years ago in Missouri, having a circumference of something like 150 miles. I am at a loss to understand how it could be otherwise. The very jewels of my district—they always look to me like miracles on the face of Nature—are a few lakes a few miles in extent. I only wish there were 10 times as many.

As for the cost, it will be a lien on the Platte Valley, one of the two great agricultural valleys in Colorado. It claims to be the greatest, and for the sake of the argument on this appropriation I will concede it, notwithstanding many people think I live in the greatest agricultural valley in Colorado. The other day in the other body an appropriation was thrown into a House bill for a water project of the estimated cost of $112,000,000. No battle was waged over that. When you leave out of the picture the power feature of reclamation projects, the reclamation cost of all the projects the Government has ever financed from the beginning would hardly exceed the rivers and harbors appropriation of the Seventy-fourth Congress, not one penny of which will ever directly return to the Treasury of the United States. This project must be paid for by the beneficiaries.

Mr. Speaker, it is my philosophy that every section of this country ought to be encouraged and aided according to the nature of its resources, whether its resources are cotton-fields or mines, whether they are harbors or reservoirs. The West must augment its water supply by storing and using its surplus waters running away to the seas or it must suffer arrested development and decline. Our natural river runs of water no longer suffice. We must store and we must divert. Hence this project. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, as has been said this morning here on the floor of the House, the Members from Colorado certainly are putting up a big fight for this project.

When we have a nice model or design set up here in the hall adjoining the House it is hard to do anything other than help get votes, because they are all good fellows; but this is not a question of good fellowship. I would like to do anything I could for my friends from Colorado. We have to consider this on its merits. We have to consider the merits of the project and whether we can afford to go ahead this year and do something in this respect now contrary to the policy of the Department of Agriculture.

We are asked to appropriate $900,000 and eventually we must spend $44,000,000 to complete this project. Remember, it will cost $900,000 to get your nose under the tent, then $44,000,000 to complete the project. This is something the Members want to give consideration to, especially when economy has been pleaded so hard this year and when you on the Democratic side are talking about reducing Government expenses. The President has asked you to cut down expenses. Will you do it?

During this session of Congress we have appropriated over $10,000,000,000. Let me refer to the statement of July 17, which shows you have spent $214,380,486 more than you received since July 1. Compare that with the first 17 days of the last fiscal year. You will find you have spent over $10,400,000 a day more this year than you did last year, a startling revelation.

This Big Thompson project in Colorado has never been authorized by Congress. Its sponsors have never brought it on the floor of the House, where we could have an opportunity to discuss the project. They hooked it on in the Senate as an amendment and then come over here and ask us to pass it without consideration. We should not permit the Senate to do that. The Members of the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives all through the hearings never had an opportunity to discuss this matter or consider it.

There are 7 projects on the Colorado River and 10 projects on the Eastern Slope, making 17 major projects in this bill. I am going to insert in the RECORD the names of these various projects, together with the expenditures called for.

Estimated cost chargeable to irrigation feature

Willow Creek feeder canal		$733,203
Granby Reservoir		2,813,703
Granby pumping plant		1,250,000
Granby pump canal		417,553
North Fork diversion dam		483,928
Continental Divide tunnel		7,271,371
Carter Lake supply canal		710,629
Horsetooth supply canal		1,208,391
St. Vrain feeder canal		368,951
Big Thompson feeder canal		155,246
Poudre feeder canal		632,843
Poudre Valley feeder canal		11,436
North Poudre feeder canal		128,889
North Poudre pumping plant		200,000
Horsetooth Reservoir		3,625,021
Arkins Reservoir		1,859,323
Carter Lake Reservoir		1,925,253
Green Mountain Reservoir (52,000 acre-feet replacement) (100,000 acre-feet for power)		3,776,032
Improvement of Colorado River above Kremmling to maintain fishing and to adjust the present irrigation system to the altered conditions		300,000
		27,871,772
Less the following items tentatively chargeable to power:
One-half cost of Arkins Reservoir	$929,661
Portion of cost of Green Mountain Reservoir for 100,000 acre-feet	2,276,032
Cost of irrigation features		24,666,079

Power plant no. 1 construction costs

Power plant no. 1 near Estes Park	$1,778,000
Conduit from east portal Continental Divide tunnel to power plant no. 1	1,101,000
Transmission lines connecting power plant no. 1 with Granby pumping plant—with Valmont and line to North Poudre pumping plant	440,000
Commercial substation (30,000 kilowatts)	300,000
Headquarters at power plant no. 1 for operation of power system	100,000
Subtotal	3,719,000
Interest during construction, 3 percent	112,000
Total repayable in 50 years with interest	3,831,000
One-half cost of Arkins Reservoir	929,661
Portion of cost Green Mountain Reservoir, for 100,000 acre-feet allocated to power	2,276,032
Payable on 40-year basis without interest	3,205,693
Total cost power plant no. 1, including other items that are required to be accomplished with the initial development	7,036,693

Full power development

The following is an estimate of the cost of the additional power plants that may be constructed in the future, but are not a part of the initial development:

Power plant no. 5	$1,190,000
Green Mountain-Ka Rose transmission line	130,000
Operators' quarters	60,000
Substation (20,000 kilowatts)	200,000
Subtotal	1,580,000
Interest during construction, 3 percent	47,400

The above plant, together with plant no. 1, will produce: 113,000,000 kilowatt-hours firm power annually; 92,000,000 kilowatt-hours secondary power annually.

The following are the construction costs of developing power plants nos. 2, 3, 4, and 4–A with appurtenant structures:

Power plant no. 2	$2,325,000
Power plant no. 3	665,000
Power plant no. 4	760,000
Power plant no. 4–A	420,000
Power canal no. 2	2,444,000
Power canal no. 3	493,000
Power canal no. 3–A	113,000
Power canal no. 4	1,194,000
Operators' quarters	150,000
Substations (90,000 kilowatt-hours)	900,000
Additional transmission lines	311,000
Subtotal	9,775,000
Interest during construction, 3 percent	293,250
Total repayable in 50 years with interest	10,068,250
Arkins Canal feeder, payable in 40 years without interest	351,000
Total power plants nos. 2, 3, 4, and 4–A	10,419,250
Total power plant no. 5	1,627,400
Total second-stage development	12,046,650
Primary development plant no. 1	7,036,693
Cost of full power development	19,083,243

It would be a revelation if you would but read and study the above figures. The only time we have had on this side to study it has been during the past week. We asked for and received the reports that were given to the Senate. There has not been a Member of the House who has had the opportunity to discuss this matter; neither has the committee. It is not right. It is not a sound way to legislate.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I cannot yield at this time. The gentleman talks about increasing the production of sugar beets in this territory. They are trying to increase the production of sugar beets in Colorado, when the Department of Agriculture is trying to curtail the production of sugar beets. If you are going to permit sugar to come in from foreign countries and spend $44,000,000 to increase production, I say it is inconsistent. One department curtailing and paying farmers to reduce crops and Congress spending the money to increase production.

Mr. CUMMINGS. The gentleman wants to be fair. That is wrong.

Mr. RICH. I want to be fair.

Mr. CUMMINGS. That is why I want to tell the gentleman something.

Mr. RICH. The cost of the irrigation feature alone is $24,650,000.

Mr. CUMMINGS. That is right.

Mr. RICH. The cost of the power for this project is $19,083,240.

Mr. CUMMINGS. And all the power belongs to the Government.

Mr. RICH. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINGS. We are giving it to the Government.

Mr. RICH. But you are spending more money to get it, and the Government will not get the money back.

Mr. CUMMINGS. We are giving you the use of the tunnel and the reservoir.

Mr. RICH. You are spending more money on this project than you will get back in the next 50 years. This is the time for economy and not the time for additional expenditures. All you know is spend, spend, spend.

Mr. CUMMINGS. We are giving you money.

Mr. RICH. That is what we in this body ought to give consideration to; that is, stop needless spending and pay some more attention to getting in revenues if we want to keep from wrecking our country.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ZIMMERMAN].

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I hope a spirit of fair play will prevail in the consideration of this measure. I come from a State in which our problem is to get the water off of the land rather than put it on.

The Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation held hearings on this bill, and as a member of that committee I am frank to say that I began the consideration of this bill with some prejudice; but after I had heard the various witnesses may I say to you that I could not find one single valid reason or objection why this bill should not be enacted into law. [Applause.]

My colleague the gentleman from Pennsylvania talks about economy. Why, the reclamation fund is made up by the sale of land, oil, and minerals in the Rocky Mountain States. It does not come from the taxpayers of this country.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I decline to yield.

One-third of the land in Colorado belongs to the Government. The reclamation fund belongs to the people of Colorado and the other Western States. I say in a spirit of fairness we should permit these people to enjoy the benefits of that fund. [Applause.] It is the equitable and right thing to do.

The engineers for the Reclamation Department told us that it was economically sound and was justified from an engineering standpoint. Why, they surveyed for 2 years locating this route, and it was their final determination that it was sound as an engineering proposition.

Mr. Speaker, as a member of that committee, may I say that the committee sought to find out what opposition there was to this bill, and the only opposition came from certain organizations throughout the country that wanted to act as godfathers for the people of Colorado and other Western States in looking after our national parks. We asked them in what way this would injure the Rocky Mountain State Park. The only answer was, "It might injure this park."

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 additional minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time is under the control of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the gentleman's request if it does not come out of the 1 hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rules, the gentleman from Oklahoma controls the time.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 additional minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I think sufficient explanation has been made to dispose of any apprehension of danger coming from water flowing hundreds of feet under the ground. Some of these same guardians who are voicing their sentiments here today stated they might object to an airplane flying over this park, because it might destroy the serenity of the guests in the park. Proceeding under the old common-law principle that the owner of land owned it adcaelum ad avernum, from "heaven to hell", they believed this park should extend not only to heaven but to hell also. They did not even want any disturbance hundreds of feet under the surface. The beginning of this tunnel under the ground starts outside of the park, on the west side, comes out on the eastern side outside of the park, and does not touch the Rocky Mountain State Park in any place. As my colleague the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] has stated, if there were any danger of marring the beauty of this park the people of Denver and the people of Colorado would be down here fighting for the park. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. ROBINSON].

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Speaker, this subject cannot be covered in 2 minutes or 2 hours, but I may point out to the Members one or two matters which influence my judgment.

We held hearings on this project, and when the hearings were started I believe the committee was almost unanimously prejudiced against this project. After 2 or 3 days of hearings the committee unanimously reported this project favorably for the consideration of the House.

The Izaak Walton League objected because they claimed this project would destroy some of the beauties of the park. However, the President of the league, before the hearings were ended, arose in the committee room and said his objections had all been answered. I understand he has since telegraphed the committee that this bill should be passed and that his league was for the project. The Park Service has made some feeble effort to show the project interferes with the best interest of the Rocky Mountain National Park, but no one has been able to point out one item, one single thing, which would in any way interfere with the scenic beauties of the park. The argument about money of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] is absolutely fallacious. Not one dollar of this money comes from the Federal Treasury. That argument is just a smoke screen. The money comes from the Reclamation Fund.

You people from the Eastern States must realize that after engineers designated by you to find the facts have passed favorably on this project, and the Bureau of Reclamation, after years of study, comes back and recommends that this project be approved, the project is a worthy one and should have your approval.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not feel that the Chair should entertain that request, the time being fixed under the rules of the House.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. The time being fixed, I should have to object if it comes out of my time, but I have no objection to the gentleman's getting the unanimous consent of the House to proceed for 2 minutes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I want to proceed in an orderly way.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I do not understand time can be extended by unanimous consent under the circumstances.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Speaker, if there is any objection or any question about it, I shall yield the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

Mr. SNELL. It is against the rules of the House, that is the only thing I care about. I think the rules ought to be observed occasionally.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. LEWIS].

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, in all earnestness, I say to those who do not live in the West that water is life to us. We Representatives from Colorado are fighting here for existence of a large part of our State. In this vote today there is involved the future existence of northeastern Colorado.

Our entire delegation in the Congress, in both the Senate and the House, is unanimously and earnestly asking for the approval of the Colorado-Big Thompson project. The beloved dean of the Colorado delegation [Mr. TAYLOR], who for a time and for good and sufficient reasons was objecting to some details of this project, has had all his objections met. I would not give my active support to this project until the grounds for Mr. TAYLOR's objections were removed. As you know, he is now rapidly recuperating from a recent illness and is resting in a suburb of Washington. A few days ago he wrote me a letter, which reads as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS,
Washington, D. C., July 13, 1937.

HON. LAWRENCE LEWIS, M. C.,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR LAWRENCE: Inasmuch as all differences concerning the Colorado-Big Thompson reclamation project have recently been adjusted between the representatives of the eastern slope and the western slope of Colorado and in a manner satisfactory to my constituents, I sincerely hope the House will concur in the Senate amendment to the Interior Department appropriation bill which provides $900,000 for beginning construction of this project.

Very cordially yours,

EDWARD T. TAYLOR, Chairman.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. I am sorry, but I shall yield later.

This is the first time the Colorado delegation has ever come to the Congress of the United States asking for an appropriation for any reclamation project for that part of our State lying east of the main range of the Rocky Mountains, where a million people live. The Colorado delegation today is not asking for an ordinary thing—we are asking for a chance for those million people to continue to live there. But, actually, we speak for a million and a quarter people, because all the people of Colorado unanimously urge this project now. And we speak for a State which has helped all the others, a State which furnishes 60 percent of the water which goes into Lake Mead behind Boulder Dam, and which helped to save our friends in southern California from a similar water shortage. I know they will help us. I know all others who are familiar with our problems will help us.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. COLDEN. Will not the artificial lakes in that project add to the beauty of the Rocky Mountain area as well as add to the value of this land?

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Absolutely.

We have heard much from nonresident and self-constituted guardians of the State of Colorado and of our natural scenic beauties and of our national parks. Doubtless they are sincere, but they have been misinformed. They have been flooding Members of the House with misleading propaganda. They came before the Irrigation and Reclamation Committee of the House during the 2 days of hearings and admitted—as did one of my good friends a few minutes ago in this debate, who also has been misinformed—and admitted that they had never been in Rocky Mountain National Park. Senator ADAMS and Senator JOHNSON, Mr. TAYLOR, Mr. CUMMINGS, Mr. MARTIN, and I have lived all, or practically all, of our lives in Colorado. In the Sixty-third Congress, Mr. TAYLOR, who was then serving his third term as Congressman at Large from Colorado, sponsored and secured the passage through the House on January 18, 1915, of the bill establishing Rocky Mountain National Park. We have visited it in spring, summer, autumn, and winter. We know it and love it well. Do you think we would be such fools, do you think we would be so silly, as to do or suffer to be done anything that would impair the beauty or attractiveness of Rocky Mountain National Park? We regard it is a priceless heritage of indescribable beauty and grandeur that has come down to us from primeval times. We are far more jealous than any nonresident could be to preserve it unimpaired for the enjoyment and inspiration of future generations. We Coloradans are not idiots; we are not fools. Apart from the fact that Rocky Mountain National Park is of rare beauty and grandeur, it is an economic asset to our State in that hundreds of thousands of people from all parts of the world come to visit it. And most of them, in so coming, visit my city of Denver.

Mr. GREEVER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. GREEVER. Is it not a fact that the act constituting the Rocky Mountain National Park contained a provision that a trans-mountain diversion could occur there?

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Absolutely; that is in the act of Congress creating the park. I know considerable about that because my family had something to do with interesting the people of our State in urging our Senators and Representatives then in the Congress to secure the passage of the act creating this and other national parks in Colorado. Both parents of Senator ADAMS—and his father served two terms as Governor of Colorado—had something to do with urging the creation of national parks in our State. In the act of Congress creating this park there is an express reservation of the right to have this reclamation project established.

Now, I ask, is the Congress of the United States going to break faith with the State of Colorado by refusing to approve this project? Furthermore, when the question later came up in the Colorado Legislature with respect to ceding jurisdiction of this park, Senator ADAMS and I helped and solicited the help of others to secure passage by a reluctant Colorado Legislature of the State statute ceding jurisdiction to the United States. That cession would not have been made if that condition had not been in the act of Congress creating the park. The act of Congress authorizing the creation of Rocky Mountain National Park reserved the right for the Bureau of Reclamation to survey and construct an irrigation project within the boundaries of the park. No part of the present project, except the tunnel far underground, will be within the boundaries of the park. Those of us who are familiar with the proceedings in the Colorado Legislature at the time the State statute ceding jurisdiction was enacted are confident this cession of jurisdiction would not have been made if the act of Congress had not contained the reservation to the Bureau of Reclamation.

The act of Congress creating the Rocky Mountain National Park, enacted January 26, 1915, and being chapter 19, section 1, volume 38, statutes 798 (title 16, sec. 191, U. S. C.), contains the following provision:

> United States Reclamation Service may enter upon and utilize for flowage or other purposes any area within said park which may be necessary for the development and maintenance of a Government reclamation project.

The Colorado statute ceding jurisdiction over park area is found in Colorado Session Laws, 1929, page 475.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time has been fixed and is in control of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I include the following letter from the Colorado delegation sent to each Member of the House:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., July 14, 1937.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: The entire Colorado congressional delegation earnestly urge that you support the Senate amendment to the Interior Department appropriation bill which provides $900,000 from the reclamation fund for beginning the construction of the Colorado-Big Thompson reclamation project.

No one has greater interest in the welfare of Colorado than the Senators and Representatives from Colorado or would oppose more bitterly any project which would impair the scenic attractions of their State which they recognize are among the greatest resources of Colorado.

From personal knowledge, the Colorado delegation wish to assure you that fears that the project will impair or damage the Rocky Mountain National Park or commercialize it, or set a precedent for the commercialization of other parks are entirely unfounded. Those who have protested against the project doubtless are sincere, but their objections are based upon misinformation.

The Honorable EDWARD T. TAYLOR, chairman of the House Committee on Appropriations, who is now recuperating from a recent illness, wrote to a member of the delegation the following letter:

"Inasmuch as all differences concerning the Colorado-Big Thompson reclamation project have recently been adjusted between the representatives of the Eastern Slope and the Western Slope of Colorado and in a manner satisfactory to my constituents, I sincerely hope the House will concur in the Senate amendment to the Interior Department appropriation bill which provides $900,000 for beginning construction of this project."

The act of Congress creating Rocky Mountain National Park recognized the advisability of this project and specifically reserved the right to the Reclamation Service to enter the park for its construction.

The request for the appropriation was presented first to the Senate because an agreement essential to settlement of differences between eastern and western sections of Colorado was not concluded until after the Interior Department appropriation bill had passed the House.

The amendment made by the Senate is supported by a bill (S. 2681) authorizing the construction, which has passed the Senate and has been reported favorably by unanimous vote of the House Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation after full hearings.

Very truly yours,

ALVA B. ADAMS.
EDWIN C. JOHNSON.
LAWRENCE LEWIS.
FRED CUMMINGS.
JOHN A. MARTIN.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have a ruling on the question of whether it is proper to extend the time of each speaker by unanimous consent. I am not opposed to it, but I think we should follow the usual procedure of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that time can be extended by unanimous consent, but that is contrary to the practice of the House.

Mr. SNELL. I know it is contrary to the practice of the House and I object to time being extended in that way. If we want to follow the regular procedure and extend the time beyond the 1 hour of debate, we should do so.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. SNELL. I object to that procedure, because it is not in accordance with the usual procedure of the House.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SWOPE].

Mr. SWOPE. Mr. Speaker, this project affects two factors—what will happen to our national-park system and how it affects the expenditures of the Federal Government.

Let me say first of all that I have not been in the Rocky Mountain National Park, so that if anyone wants to ask me the question, it is now answered, but we come here from every section of the United States to exercise our judgment upon legislation that affects many sections that we have not seen and we are therefore forced to get our information from such sources as may be available.

So far as the effect upon the beauties of the national-park system is concerned, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], I think, has presented the problem in a very fine manner. In my city of Harrisburg, Pa., there resides Mr. J. Horace McFarland, former chairman of the Board of the American Planning and Civic Association. Over that board now presides Mr. Frederic A. Delano. Mr. McFarland has informed me that his association and seven kindred associations have expressed apprehension and objection to this project and to projects of a similar character.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWOPE. I have only a few minutes, and this is my first offense. I will yield next year. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I will wait.

Mr. SWOPE. When we want to know something about dentistry, we consult a dentist; when we want to know something about engineering, we consult an engineer; and when we want to know something about the beauties of our national-park system we consult people who have made a study of the scenic beauty of our national-park system.

So far as the Budget is concerned, it is acknowledged that this will cost probably $44,000,000, and it is alleged by many it will cost $60,000,000. It was stated on the floor here that if this project had been in effect some years ago, the cost of it would have been returned within the last 8 years. Let me say to the Members of the House that in the State of Pennsylvania we have a device which would take care of such a situation by the State of Pennsylvania. In the State of Pennsylvania we have erected a State authority, and the State authority is empowered to issue bonds for the consummation of projects which are for the good of the State. These bonds are sold to the investing public and the bonds stand upon their own bottom. If the project is good the bonds can be sold and the project returns the cost thereof and the bonds are retired, and let me say, Mr. Speaker, it is time we were returning to principles of this kind. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. O'NEAL].

Mr. O'NEAL of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, in view of the short time allotted me, I shall not be able to answer any questions. I had not intended to mention the merits of the bill, but statements have been made here which should be cleared up, to show the fallacy of the claim that this is necessarily self-sustaining. It is possible, but I do not think that fact is established, and in support of my opinion I shall read a statement by Commissioner Page in the hearings, on page 149:

Appropriations for continuation of construction of certain reclamation projects amounting to $10,860,000 were made from the reclamation fund; continuation of construction of the Central Valley project in California, the Grand Coulee Dam project in Washington, and the Boulder Canyon project, including the All-American Canal, was provided for by appropriations from the general fund of the Treasury.

That means that because the reclamation fund had become so reduced they were required on new projects to raise the money by getting it from the Treasury. Commissioner Page also testified that the reclamation fund income was being seriously reduced because of the lack of sale of public lands. There are many other things that he would like to go into. Mr. Page stated:

Salable public lands have been exhausted. The remaining public domain has been withdrawn, and a new policy has been established with regard to it.

The only revenue to the reclamation fund which can be called stable at this time is that received from the repayment of project construction costs by those benefiting.

I want you now to listen to this statement from Mr. Page:

A moratorium granted and extended by Congress has postponed or curtailed these repayments for a space of 6 years.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to go into that more at length, but it is a fact that no one knows whether or not these projects are going to be good, or whether there will be money enough in the reclamation fund to lend to these projects to carry on with. In fact the statement made by Commissioner Page indicates that there will not be any money in the reclamation fund, and the next thing that will happen will be a request that the Treasury put up the money and they will not take any from the reclamation fund, but from the general fund. My chief objection, Mr. Speaker, to this bill, is one that I think the House should very seriously consider. This same thing came up last year in the Interior appropriation bill. We declined to authorize it. They had their opportunity then to go before the House committee and present the facts and have the House go into it, but they did not go there. They did not go to the Budget. It appeared in the Senate, although we had taken no action on it. Not one word, as far as I can find, was said on the floor of the Senate about this proposition, a project involving $900,000 this year, and $44,000,000 eventually, but it passed without argument, without explanation, without anything except the inferential statement that "I would like to have it." What does this House know about it? What do you know about it? If you were on a board of directors and you were asked to endorse a proposition involving millions and millions of dollars of the money of the company, is there a man here who would consider for one moment putting his o. k. on such a proposal when all he had heard had been statements that are exparte, from people who are interested in the section of the country which is to be benefited? I hope the House will not recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I just want to ask my colleague from Colorado one question. I have received some protests concerning this proposed project from certain associations, and I want to know whether or not the construction and completion of this project will in any way interfere with or mar or deface or take away from the attractiveness of the park in Colorado?

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. It will not.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. FORD].

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Speaker, in the first place, I am in favor of this amendment for the reason that it is going to create national wealth. It will create that wealth by stimulating agricultural and commercial activity in eastern Colorado. In the second place, I call the attention of my distinguished friend from Kentucky [Mr. O'NEAL] to the fact that the Boulder Dam project is a self-liquidating project, and that, before a spadeful of dirt was turned, the city of Los Angeles, the Metropolitan Water District, and three private power companies had to sign contracts with the Government guaranteeing that every dollar spent on Boulder Dam would be paid back to the Treasury in 50 years. The project under discussion can be made a self-liquidating project in the same manner if given the machinery for power production at the dam to be built. By distributing this power to the people of Colorado who need it, the whole proposition can easily be paid for, dollar for dollar, with interest. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZPATRICK].

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, two arguments have been made against the bill here today, one by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], also the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SWOPE], in respect to the money end of it and what it will cost the Government. I will read to you the following part of the amendment, which will prove to you that there will be no cost to the Government:

That no construction thereof shall be commenced until the payment of all the costs of the project shall, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, be assured by appropriate contracts with the water-conservancy districts.

That proves my argument. It will not cost the taxpayers $1. It is a self-liquidating project. The argument presented by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] about the park being damaged is the most ridiculous argument I have ever heard.

The nearest this tunnel will be to the surface of the park will be from 800 to 4,000 feet. Just think of water seeping down 800 or 4,000 feet into a concrete tunnel 9 or 10 feet in diameter! There has been no argument given here today that is substantiated by any kind of facts or reason. My argument today is to give relief to the 175,000 farmers on the east side of the Rockies. This 13-mile tunnel will bring that relief without any financial cost to the Government or any destruction of our national parks.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The gentleman would not yield to me, but I yield to him.

Mr. RICH. Did you ever hear of this project, as a member of the committee, before it was tacked on over in the Senate?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I told you last Thursday when this bill was before the House that it had been discussed for the last 3 or 4 years. As the previous speaker, who is opposed to the amendment, said, it was in the Interior Department bill last year. It was reported out unanimously by the Senate this year. If the Colorado delegation had been united, they would have had this project years ago. [Applause.] They are united today. I represent an eastern district, but I am in favor of this, in order to bring water to 175,000 distressed farmers whose crops today are being ruined on account of lack of water. [Applause.]

I ask you to vote for this amendment, because it is a real deserving amendment for the benefit of the farmers east of the Rocky Mountains. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

All time has expired.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi makes the point of order that a quorum is not present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and twenty Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON] to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma) there were ayes 101 and noes 97.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 174, nays 154, not voting 103, as follows:

Mr. BEITER changed his vote from "no" to "aye."

Mr. NICHOLS changed his vote from "no" to "aye."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

Amendment no. 93: Page 88, after line 9, insert:
"For administrative expenses on account of the above projects, including personal services and other expenses in the District of Columbia and in the field $750,000, in addition to and for the same objects of expenditure as are hereinbefore enumerated in paragraphs 2 and 3 under the caption 'Bureau of Reclamation'; in all, $10,535,000: Provided, That of this amount not to exceed $75,000 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion of the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate No. 93 and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In line 6 in said amendment strike out "$10,535,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$9,150,000."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, this amendment appropriates $750,000 for administrative expenses in connection with the construction of 16 reclamation projects. It is absolutely essential that this sum be provided if the necessary administrative supervision is to be made available. To deny this sum would have the effect of withdrawing engineering and administrative supervision, which might well cause an ultimate loss of millions of dollars, due to the inefficient and faulty construction of reservoirs, power plants, and other reclamation structures.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 94: Page 88, after amendment no. 93, insert: "The unexpended balances of the amounts appropriated from the reclamation fund, special fund, under the caption 'Bureau of Reclamation, construction', in the Interior Department Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1937, shall remain available for the same purposes for the fiscal year 1938."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. TABER. This is the same item that the House voted down on a roll call?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. That is correct.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 95: Page 88, line 24, after the word "fund", strike out "$9,416,600" and insert in lieu thereof "$11,701,600."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 95, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:
"In lieu of the sum proposed, insert '$10,316,600.'"

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 97: Page 91, after line 21, insert:
"For general investigations, $300,000 to enable the Secretary of the Interior, through the Bureau of Reclamation, to carry on engineering and economic investigations of proposed Federal reclamation projects, surveys for reconstruction, rehabilitation, or extension of existing projects and studies of water conservation and development plans, such investigations, surveys, and studies to be carried on by said Bureau either independently, or, if deemed advisable by the Secretary of the Interior, in cooperation with State agencies and other Federal agencies, including the Corps of Engineers, National Resources Committee, and the Federal Power Commission."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 97 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:
"In lieu of the sum named in said amendment, insert '$2,000.'"

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 98: Page 92, in line 15, strike out "$26,250,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$26,550,000."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. JOHNSON moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 98 and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$26,450,000."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 121: On page 111, in line 18, insert:
"Fish hatchery for Glacier National Park: For acquisition, by the Secretary of the Interior, of such real property and rights therein in T. 28 N., R. 20 W., Montana meridian, as may be necessary for the establishment and operation of a fish hatchery for Glacier National Park, $16,500."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist upon its disagreement for the reason that it has recently developed that the Public Works Administration has made an allocation for this purpose, and this would simply be a duplication. I hold in my hand a letter from the administrative assistant to the Secretary, Mr. Burlew, saying that this appropriation is not now necessary.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Oklahoma that the House insist upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 121.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 123: Page 119, after line 21, insert:
"Appropriations herein made for the national parks, national monuments, and other reservations under the jurisdiction of the National Park Service, shall be available for the giving of educational lectures therein and for the services of field employees in cooperation with such nonprofit scientific and historical societies engaged in educational work in the various parks and monuments as the Secretary, in his discretion, may designate."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 123 and agree to the same.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Has the gentleman or any member of his committee given thorough study to know what they are going to do through these lectures? Is the gentleman sure that this is not more Government propaganda for the Interior Department, an effort on their part to create sentiment in order to help them build up their organization even larger than it now is? Each year it requires more and more to conduct this Department of Government.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Answering my distinguished colleague, a member of the committee, I may say that this item has been carried in the bill for several years. This educational program is a very important one. The public appreciates it. It is not a propaganda program but one strictly of education, and I think it is very essential that it be continued.

Mr. RICH. Has the gentleman listened to some of the programs over the radio lately in reference to the national parks and reclamation?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I do not know that I have listened in the last few days but I have listened to some of them, and in my opinion they are very splendid, interesting, and educational programs.

Mr. RICH. Some are, I agree; but a great many seem to me to be building up the Department of the Interior in order to create sympathy for the work they are doing. In other words, propaganda. Some day it is going to cost this country millions of dollars to put through the program they have in mind in the Park Service and in the Interior Department.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I may say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that their program is a very splendid, constructive, and educational program, one that will be for the benefit of the people of the United States who visit the national parks. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. RICH. I am not going to object, for objection from this side seems futile, but I say to the gentleman that the present administration of the Interior Department seems inclined to want more play and less work. This is a time when we need to get some work done in this country. The time has come when we should stop a lot of this playing. The time is here now when we must teach the people to work more and play less. This administration seems to think that the people should be kept by the Government instead of them supporting the Government. All play and no work will lead to ruin.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. May I say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that I doubt whether we have Federal employees who are more faithful to their work than are the employees of the National Park Service, and if the gentleman will visit the national parks he will see how they work.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman wants me to go out and play in the National Park Service?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It is not play. It is work. I went into the national parks, not as a Member of the House, and they did not know who I was for 4 or 5 days. I saw their work going on and it is a credit to the country.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON].

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next Senate amendment in disagreement.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House consider Senate amendment no. 125 before considering amendment no. 124 for the reason that the vote on amendment no. 125 might affect the amount as carried in amendment no. 124.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this will not interfere with our right to have an hour on the Natchez Trace Parkway?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. No.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report Senate amendment no. 125 in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 125: Page 121, line 20, strike out "Provided, That not exceeding $500,000 of this appropriation shall be available for construction of the Natchez Parkway", and insert in lieu thereof: "Provided, That $2,700,000 and any other sums received from other sources for said Natchez Trace Parkway shall be allotted and expended ratably between the States of Mississippi, Alabama, and Tennessee according to mileage of said parkway in each respective State."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 125, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: "In lieu of the sum named in said amendment, insert '$1,500,000'."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LAMBERTSON].

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, may I answer the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] and say that not one mile of the Natchez Trace has ever been started. The gentleman says it has been going on for years, but not one mile has been started.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Yes; if the gentleman will tell me of a mile that has been completed.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. The gentleman said none of it had been started. May I correct the gentleman by stating they are working on it right now.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Where?

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Between Jackson, Miss., and Kosciusko.

Mr. RANKIN. Between Jackson and Natchez.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Between Jackson and Natchez; yes. The gentleman should take a trip down there and see for himself.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. I have information from the Park Service that they did not know of even one mile that has been started. I got it this week from the Park Service. If the gentleman has more information than they have, he is ahead of them.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. I may tell the gentleman positively it has been started.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Several miles have been constructed on the other road, but nothing in the Park Service records shows that even one mile of the Natchez Trace is under construction.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Yes; briefly.

Mr. RANKIN. They told the gentleman they had been getting this right-of-way all this time, did they not?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Yes; but that is your State's concern. All you furnish is this cheap land.

Mr. RANKIN. The right-of-way; they had deeds to it.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Yes; but the gentleman from Mississippi said it had been going on for a long while.

Mr. RANKIN. I said getting the right-of-way and getting ready for this highway.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Oh, all right; getting it ready.

Mr. Speaker, the important thing about this matter is that it is an innovation. The $6,000,000 appropriated in this provision is nothing. The important thing is the innovation of having the Government furnish 100 percent of the funds for road construction. The principle is absolutely new. It is the first time in our history this has happened. The Skyline Drive and the Natchez Trace are the first instances of this kind, and they were authorized only last year. Emergency moneys gave birth to both of these propositions. The gentleman speaks about the National Park Service having started them. The Park Service had nothing to do with starting these projects, because they were started with emergency money, and then got their authorization afterward, a year ago. We never gave birth to them. The National Park Service never asked for either one of them. They were handed to the National Park Service and paid for out of emergency funds, which somebody was influential in having allotted.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Yes; briefly.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Is it not true the Government has built the highways in all the parks west of the Mississippi?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. In the parks.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Yes; and connected with the parks.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. In the parks. However, here the innovation is in building the highways outside the parks for the first time. While there is some justification under the pretext of connecting the Shenandoah Park with the Big Smoky Park in North Carolina, there is no scintilla of an excuse for building the Natchez Trace, because there is nothing at either end of the Natchez Trace—that is, a national park.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Yes; I will yield briefly.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. In all fairness, now, have not the entrances to the national parks been constructed in the West at the expense of the Federal Government, which enables the very thing we are doing here?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Only at entrances in a few instances and for short distances.

It will take $23,000,000 to finish this Trace road, but that is not the half of it. It will be that amount, all right. It will take $34,000,000 to finish this other drive. This highway is 430 miles long and this 490 miles long, or 950 miles altogether, which for the first time will have 100-percent Federal construction. What I am emphasizing is the innovation of putting the Government into the construction of highways on a 100-percent basis on the flimsy excuse of connecting national parks, when the last one does not even connect any two national parks.

Mr. BEVERLY M. VINCENT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Yes.

Mr. BEVERLY M. VINCENT. If this is an innovation, the appropriation to the gentleman's State for relief from grasshoppers is also an innovation.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. That is not only for my State, and it is not new. It is for the Nation. There is nothing in my district or in my State of this kind which I have favored or for which I have ever gone before any committee. I have been on the Committee on Appropriations for 4 years, but I am not here to sell my self-respect or violate my oath for somebody's schemes just because I love him. We love the great chairman of the Ways and Means Committee whose business it is to start to raise the money for this Government, yet he fathers that great scheme, along with a very important member of the Appropriations Committee from Virginia, of putting us into an expenditure of $57,000,000 which this Congress did not authorize in either instance until after the project was started. Both of these projects were started with emergency funds. They are both illegitimate babies.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Does not the gentleman know that this Congress, on June 2, 1936——

Mr. LAMBERTSON. 1936; yes.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. By a vote of 238 to 99, authorized this project, and is the gentleman going to set himself up in an arbitrary manner because he is a member of the Appropriations Committee and deny an expenditure which the Congress has authorized?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. If we spent money for all the things that are authorized, we would not be doing our duty over there, and if the gentleman were a member of the Appropriations Committee he would not vote for everything that is authorized.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Does not the gentleman realize that an authorization of Congress should mean something to him in connection with these matters?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. No one pays much attention to authorizations. If they did, there would be no use for appropriation committees. I want to say to the gentleman that you got your first money from emergency funds before you got the authorization.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Nevertheless, we got the authorization just the same.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. But you got your money from emergency funds before you got the authorization.

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, no.

Mr. LAMBERTON. Yes; you did. You had your emergency money from the President before you ever had any authorization. Then you came along and got your authorization and now you come back here and ask the Congress to finish this proposition that puts the Government into 100-percent road construction with an expenditure now of $23,000,000, with no parks at either end of the road. This shows how quickly you can forsake the pretense of a parkway, which was put into the Road Act of 1936 that authorized the parkway for the first time. This was put in by the other body, and it is just like a lot of other things started at the other end of the Capitol. This was started over there and the authorization in the Road Act for parkways started over there and came back here for a vote, and it was stated that there had to be a parkway at each end, but on the second jump you leave the parkway clear out of it and build the Natchez Trace without even a skunk run at either end of it.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman states that this was started without any authorization when, as a matter of fact, the bill was passed in 1934 authorizing the original survey.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. What became of that bill?

Mr. RANKIN. The bill passed and the President signed it. They went ahead and made a survey then and since that time, under that representation, these people have been giving deeds to the right-of-way.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. The survey did not pledge us. What was the authorization last year?

Mr. RANKIN. The authorization last year was for an appropriation, but the authorization for a survey was passed in 1934.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. FORD] was not talking about an appropriation; he was talking about an authorization; and if you got it before, why did you need a second authorization?

Mr. RANKIN. The authorization and the money appropriated for the survey were in 1934. They made the survey and these people have given title to their land for this right-of-way.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. That was your State's business solely. You got the money from emergency funds, before there was ever any authorization, and so did the Skyline Drive.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. I am making my own speech now. The gentleman has made his speech.

Another thing I want to impress upon you is with respect to the approach roads. There is an endless amount of approach roads authorized under these acts that can lead up to this particular road—the Skyline Drive. There is no limit, within 100 miles, with respect to any one of these approach roads. If you can get the money, you can do anything along this line with respect to the Skyline Drive. There is no limit to how many approach roads you can build, and they can all be built with 100 percent Federal money.

I notice this afternoon, and I say this with a kindly feeling, that every man in the South interested in these two propositions voted for the Big Thompson project out West, and everybody out there is going to vote for the Natchez Trace and the Skyline Drive this afternoon. All the Pacific coast boys are for it, and whenever we get into a big pork-barrel proposition like this we might as well throw the door of the Treasury open, kiss economy good-bye, and go home. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEAVY].

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, I want for the next 5 minutes to discuss this matter in a dispassionate manner and clearly upon its merits. I have the highest regard and greatest respect for my colleague on the other side who has just preceded me, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LAMBERTSON]. I have worked with him on this subcommittee for a month, and we have learned to know one another and, I think, to respect one another's ideas. I cannot, however, agree with his conclusions.

Naturally, coming from the West, and as far Northwest as I could, from the State of Washington, I see merit in Western projects. Probably I am somewhat prejudiced in favor of them, but I think I can make this assertion: Every man who voted for the Colorado project will have reason to be proud of it 5 or 10 years from now, and not to be ashamed of it. I am supporting the South in this project, and I am proud to support them. It has passed the point where it is a matter of policy with this Congress or with our committee as to whether we are going to proceed. The House expressed itself that it was going to spend $4,500,000 for the Blue Ridge Highway. The House excluded the Natchez Trace, and the Senate wrote in $2,700,000, and in conference we cut it to $1,500,000.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVY. Yes.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. The House agreed on $500,000 for the Natchez Trace.

Mr. LEAVY. I appreciate the correction. It is asserted that there is no reason to build a parkway in a region where you do not actually have a park, and it is asserted that this is an innovation. Until 1916 we had no National Park Service in this country. We have expanded that Service until now it costs millions of dollars, and most of the money goes to our West. We are glad that you gave the parks to us, but if we were not here to represent the West, and you people knew what we have there, you would still insist on maintaining and preserving our parks just as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] indicated here this afternoon. In the East you do not have the natural scenic beauty that we have, and I mean no disrespect when I say that. You have a historical background that puts our country in the shadow. You have places that are more charming and attractive than those in this city if you will make the most of them. This program is just the beginning of giving to the people of the East, in a smaller way than we have it, the advantage of enjoying the natural beauty of this region and making for better American citizenship.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVY. Yes.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Is it not true, so far as the national parks and the Grand Canyon are concerned, that for many miles roadways have been built entering them, at the expense of the Federal Government?

Mr. LEAVY. I am not in a position to answer that question.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Those facts were developed in the hearings.

Mr. LEAVY. But I know that building this parkway is something that the people in the South and the East want, and to which they are entitled. This undertaking should be placed on a plane higher than the monetary return which it will produce tomorrow or next year or in future years.

This parkway will produce a better citizenship and result in human dividends that cannot be measured in dollars and cents. The crowded East is entitled to have some place to go and enjoy the greatest scenic beauty it affords, particularly the poorer people who cannot afford to travel across this Nation to our beautiful western parks. There is a historical background that goes with the territory traversed by this parkway that should be preserved and made available to all the people. Therefore, as a Representative from the far Northwest, I am glad to join with my friends from the South and the East, and to urge those from the North and the central part of the country to join with us and give the South this highway. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I am very much interested in the speech of my genial colleague from the State of Washington [Mr. LEAVY]. I have not known anything that he has started after since he has been a Member of Congress that he did not get. He is the best politician in the House of Representatives. Just watch my colleague from the State of Washington and see if within the next year he is not here trying to get a parkway constructed between some park in the State of Washington or Oregon down into California, 800 feet wide, a beautiful parkway drive.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I shall have to.

Mr. LEAVY. First I want to ask the gentleman if he will not give me just an iota of credit for having some semblance of a statesman about me as well as a politician.

Mr. RICH. And no better fellow there is in the House of Representatives—a politician and statesman.

Mr. LEAVY. I say to the gentleman that if we were not blessed by Nature with the parks that we have and the roads we have, I would be asking—just as these gentlemen are and as the gentleman ought to in Pennsylvania—for an outlet for my people to enjoy Nature. [Applause.]

Mr. RICH. If we had nothing else to consider but to go out and spend public money and run the Treasury further into debt just to do something that the Members of Congress think would be nice, in order to beautify this country, I would say, "Yes; I think that is fine." I would not object to it at all. But I am telling you, you must use a little bit of common sense in our expenditure of Government funds.

DO NOT TRY TO DO EVERYTHING AT ONE TIME

When you remember that we are establishing a precedent in these two projects, of building a parkway from Mississippi up to Virginia that is going to cost over $100,000,000, and you are building this parkway 800 feet wide, you will come in here year after year asking the Federal Government not only to spend money on the upkeep of this parkway, but you will ask them to spend more money to beautify it according to the ideas of the members of the Park Service and Members of Congress. Now, there is nothing wrong about that, but how in the world are you going to finance all this? Where will you get the money?

Not only that, but you will find that the gentleman from Washington and the gentlemen from these other States are going to ask you to put into effect a park system of highways, get it entirely away from the Highway Department in this country, and that is the point I make. If you have a system of highways in this country under supervision of Highway Department and then permit the Park Service to come in and have the highways traverse the other highways, eventually this thing will be so complicated that it will be very difficult to administer. It will be top heavy. It will be hard to administer. You will have too many bureaus, and we should not permit that. You said you would not, so why do it?

That is the most important point about this whole business of national-park highways. We started this Doughton Highway from North Carolina up to Virginia. God bless Mr. DOUGHTON. There is not a finer fellow in the House. [Applause.] If it had not been for him you would not have built that highway. Now come FORD and RANKIN and HARRISON and a few of these men who are trying to run opposition and see who they will name this highway after from North Carolina to Mississippi. You cannot dislike them for that either, but if you start in there you will get the Park Service to construct highways between the different parks, and eventually we are going to be highway top-heavy. We should be careful. I think you should vote down this amendment this year, because you have said you are for economy, and yet are just voting every minute of the day millions of dollars. Here is a million and a half dollars you can save if you will vote right. Will you do it?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. I understand this is part of an ultimate highway from Buena Vista to Bennington, Vt.

Mr. RICH. I do not care whether it is from Buena Vista to Bennington or whether it is from Denver, Colo., to San Francisco and then back to New York. That is what I am afraid of. It is all wrong. The principle is wrong.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Does not the gentleman think it would be of advantage to the whole Nation to have a good trunk highway built across the State of Pennsylvania so we could go through there without having accidents?

Mr. RICH. Oh, we have got three or four trunk highways now. It would be utter foolishness to build another one. We have good highways and we are building a system of highways by the highway department, but now you are coming in here and trying to take it away from the highway system and put it into the Park Service. It is entirely wrong. I tried to drive that into the gentleman's head awhile ago. I am sorry I could not do it. [Laughter and applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] such time as he may desire.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include some excerpts from the hearing on the bill S. 2681.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. McGEHEE].

Mr. McGEHEE. Mr. Speaker, my good friends from Kansas and Pennsylvania seem very much perturbed about a little appropriation that the States of Mississippi, Alabama, and Tennessee will participate in, in the event the House sees fit to pass this amendment.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGEHEE. Yes; I yield.

Mr. RICH. I will say that this amount of money we are spending in Mississippi is more than the State of Mississippi pays in Federal taxes.

Mr. McGEHEE. That may be true; but will the gentleman give the House information as to how much money his State of Pennsylvania has received in the past 4 years in proportion to what the State of Mississippi has received?

Mr. RICH. In proportion to population we have not received one-fiftieth as much as the State of Mississippi.

Mr. McGEHEE. I understand that one project in the gentleman's State has cost more than the amount received by two or three Southern States in the past 4 years.

I want to say, however, just what my State has done so far in carrying out the recommendation of this Congress when the authorization was made by it in 1934. It has been stated that this is the first appropriation asked for. In 1803 the Congress of the United States appropriated and spent several thousand dollars on the Natchez Trace. In 1806 they appropriated several thousand dollars more, which was spent in widening and blazing this trail from Nashville to Natchez so as to permit the people from the eastern part of this country to travel overland into the southern part of it. This Congress in 1934, as stated by my colleague from Mississippi, made an appropriation of some $50,000 to make a survey of this trace.

That survey was made, and when it was completed a report made, upon which the Congress, during the past session, authorized this appropriation for 1938–39.

What has my State done under and acting upon the authorization made by Congress? Last year the legislature voted that bonds be issued in the sum of several hundred thousands of dollars. These bonds have been sold and with the proceeds the rights-of-way have been purchased along this trace for several of its units. Some few weeks ago three contracts were let. I do not know that they have actually started work under the contracts as yet, but they have been let and work orders will be released at once by the Bureau of Roads, under whose supervision the trace will be constructed.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGEHEE. I yield.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Can the gentleman advise the House what proportion of the cost of constructing this highway is borne by the State of Mississippi?

Mr. McGEHEE. Nothing, only the furnishing of the right-of-way, as required by the authorization in the bill providing for the construction of the Natchez Trace Highway.

Mr. WOLCOTT. As a matter of fact, according to the original bill, this appropriation is for the purpose of giving the State of Mississippi this highway free without the State of Mississippi having to put up a cent, which is in contradistinction to the highway system which compels every State in the Union to put up dollar for dollar the money the Federal Government gives.

Mr. McGEHEE. It is not. This is a Federal parkway, established under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior. It will be constructed by the Federal Government, as is every other highway between parks.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. McGEHEE. I have not the time.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I just wanted to find out how long this highway was.

Mr. McGEHEE. Opponents of this plan are trying to prejudice your minds against appropriating this money, saying the road will be 800 feet wide. The right-of-way has been secured for miles and miles already through my State for this parkway. It is true that the deeds call for an 800-foot right-of-way, but the roadway is being constructed only about the same width of other highways throughout this country. The owners of the land through which this parkway traverses reserve the right in their right-of-way conveyances of the use of the lands up to the drainage on each side of the roadbed for pasturing or otherwise. Insofar as the right-of-way proper is concerned, the usual width that is required in the construction of our highways would be all that is necessary, but in the construction of this parkway, the Government desires control and jurisdiction over the 800 feet required in the Department of the Interior for the purpose of keeping signs, advertisements, and other unsightly structures from being placed along it, thereby making the parkway attractive and alluring to the hundreds of thousands of people who will travel over it when completed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT].

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, it will be recalled that we had a very bitter fight on the floor of this House last year, or year before last, in which we brought out the real purpose of these two parkways. Now, it is just nonsensical to imagine a parkway 977 miles long. That is the aggregate distance of these two parkways, one 500 miles and the other 477 miles. If you can imagine driving along a highway landscaped for 400 feet on either side for a distance of 977 miles, you have some conception of what this parkway is.

I charged at that time and I want to reiterate that the only purpose of establishing this so-called parkway was to get 977 miles of free highway for the States of North Carolina, Virginia, and Mississippi. I said at that time that I would not contribute to it and I did not think that any fair-minded Member of this House should contribute to it. I believe so now.

It has been stated that Pennsylvania has received a great deal of money for relief, but let me tell you this, that under the Highway Act, under which these trunk lines should be built, the State of Pennsylvania, as well as every other State in the Union, has to put up $1 for every dollar which is allocated to it for highway purposes by the Federal Government.

Let us be fair and honest about this situation. This appropriation is not for the creation of a parkway except as a subterfuge to get 977 miles of free highway in these States; and you Members who represent States in which you taxpayers have to put up dollar for dollar to match the Federal contribution cannot go back to your States with clear consciences after giving to the States of Mississippi, North Carolina, and Virginia, not $100,000,000, but an estimated one-third of all the money that was raised under the emergency tax bill of last year, or $200,000,000 to build 977 miles of free highway.

The inconsistency of this thing appeals to you undoubtedly. Last year we desired to raise $600,000,000 to balance the Federal Budget. In the same week that we passed the bill raising $600,000,000 through the corporate surplus tax, if you will remember, we started these two projects, eating up one-third of the money it was designed to raise under the tax bill to balance the Budget. How can you with a clear conscience go back to your taxpayers in Michigan, New York, California, and the other States and tell them we voted to give these States a free highway when your citizens have to match dollar for dollar the Federal contribution for road construction?

Mr. LEAVY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. LEAVY. It is a fact, is it not, that this highway will cross five States instead of three?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Make it 10 States. Make it any number of States.

Mr. LEAVY. The record of the hearings discloses that instead of being a highway 570 miles long it is a 550-mile highway that will cost a total of $60,000,000 instead of $200,000,000.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The gentleman does not infer, of course, knowing roadbuilding as he does, that we can build 977 miles of highway and parkway for that figure. The figure will be closer to $200,000,000.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. There is no estimate given at all as to the approach roads which may be built without limit. Is it not true that hearings were had by the House committee a year ago and the committee turned this down after full hearing and this was put on over in the Senate?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I hope you will believe me when I say this, because it is the truth: The only justification there is for building this Natchez Trace Highway is to commemorate the march of Andrew Jackson down to New Orleans. If you want to spend $100,000,000 of the people's money building a memorial to Andrew Jackson in this way, that is your responsibility.

Mr. RANKIN. Does not the gentleman think he is entitled to a memorial?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER].

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Speaker, I admire the candor that prevails here this afternoon; in fact, I admire the brazenness with which the cooperation between the South and the West is admitted by the distinguished gentleman from Washington. It is a game of "You pat me and I'll pat you." I think he inquired when he was paid a compliment about the matter of being an adroit politician whether he might not be known also as a statesman. I want to remind him that in another body just recently some one said that a politician was a live one and that they were dead when they became statesmen.

May I say to the gentleman from Washington he is very much alive. He is much alive in the matter of admitting that he wanted that project in the West and by reason of the support that he received for that project in the West he was going to support this project in the South. "You give me and I will give you."

Mr. LEAVY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DITTER. I referred to the gentleman and must of necessity yield to him.

Mr. LEAVY. I want to take the gentleman at his word in connection with the definition of "politician" and "statesman." May I ask the gentleman if his party does not represent a lot of statesmen at this time?

Mr. DITTER. I answer the gentleman by saying that the reference I just made came from one of the very distinguished, one of the liberal and one of the independent leaders of the gentleman's party, who bewailed the fact that probably there would be some dead statesmen in the offing in another body because of the threat of the present administration to punish those who refused to do its bidding.

Mr. Speaker, I have a distinct admiration for my friend the gentleman from Mississippi, who delights in telling us about electric rates. He always throws in the face of those who represent Pennsylvania the challenge to go back and tell the people how much they are paying for electricity. I want him when he goes into Pennsylvania next time bearing that banner about electricity and cheap power rates to tell the people of Pennsylvania how much they are paying for this free highway down in Mississippi. I want the gentleman to give us credit that while we probably pay some money for electricity we get something for it, and we do not get anything for this contribution, this benefaction, that we Pennsylvanians are giving to Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DITTER. In just a moment. I want to cite some figures. Someone said a moment ago, and I believe it was the gentleman's colleague from Mississippi, that we were getting a great deal in Pennsylvania, and that we received a great deal last year from the Federal Government.

Let us look at the figures. Let us look at the record. According to the record, Pennsylvania paid into the Federal Treasury last year $302,376,636.25. Pennsylvania got back $189,492,591.59.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield? He wants to be fair.

Mr. DITTER. I want to give the figures for Mississippi first. You will notice the fine balance in our favor. There is no deficit at all so far as Pennsylvania is concerned.

May I call the gentleman's attention to the condition that prevails, so far as the State of Mississippi is concerned, as shown by the Federal records? Mississippi paid in $2,630,483.48 and out of this all-bountiful Federal Treasury, out of this more abundant life, out of this combination between the splendid West, with its Rockies and all the other scenic beauties, and the grand and glorious South, you received $18,799,796.84. In other words, we are in the red, so far as Mississippi goes, to the extent of $16,000,000.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DITTER. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. I will tell the gentleman from Pennsylvania where Pennsylvania got her money. She sold her iron, her steel, her coal, and aluminum to the rest of the country, and the rest of the country paid what the gentleman is claiming Pennsylvania paid into the Treasury.

Mr. DITTER. I did not yield for a speech. The gentleman is too eloquent for me to yield to him for a speech.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman suggested that I go back into Pennsylvania and investigate the power rates later. Thank God, you at last have a utilities commission in Pennsylvania under a Democratic administration that is trying to give the people of that State justice so far as electric-power rates are concerned. [Applause.]

Mr. DITTER. The newly created commission has just been born. It has hardly started to breathe. Many glittering promises have been made of what it will accomplish. We have heard a lot of Democratic promises. You have been long on promises but woefully lacking in performances. This grab which you are making on the Federal Treasury today is just another example of your glittering promises. Do you recall the promise of economy made just a few months ago by your party, a promise with so much supposed reality about it that several of your leaders contended with each as to the character of slashes that should be made in appropriations? I recall one of your distinguished members expressed fear that an economy hysteria might take hold here.

The country need not be alarmed that an economy hysteria will be present in this Congress. You men have the spending habit too well ingrained. You thrive on the philosophy of spendthrifts. It would appear that your chief purpose, your aim in life, is to emulate that prodigal son of the Biblical narrative, to spend your substance—no; not yours, but the taxpayers'—in a wild, riotous orgy of spending. And still you make promises of economy—promises to save.

I fear it will be much the same with this new commission. It can be said with certainty that if the general policies of the administration now in power in Pennsylvania are to be taken as a criterion, then I feel confident the people of Pennsylvania will find a most expensive, a most costly, a most extravagant commission on their hands. One thing can be promised with reasonable certainty: If this commission runs true to form, true to the form of the other agencies operating in Pennsylvania under State and Federal control, there will be plenty of jobs, plenty of sinecures, plenty of "pork" for the faithful.

Suggestion has been made that we enjoy in Pennsylvania the fruits of tariff protection given to the industries of the country in times past. That is a splendid tribute to the philosophy of a protective tariff. It is a rather severe indictment against the free-traders. Mark you, Pennsylvania is able to pay these magnificent sums into the Federal Treasury because of the industries of the Keystone State, which provide not only funds for the Federal Treasury but employment for thousands of workmen. And more important in this present issue these industries, the industries of Pennsylvania provide the funds for this gift which you are seeking for the benefit of Mississippi.

On behalf of the taxpayers of Pennsylvania, on behalf of the workingmen of that State whose taxes come from the sweat of their brow, I voice a vehement objection to this pork-barrel program for the South.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, we are faced with the question of whether or not the United States Congress will today go on record for the continuation of a program of taking funds out of the Federal Treasury to pay the entire cost of highways in one part of the country and in another part of the country pay at least half the cost.

I know we all like to get things for our part of the country. I know we like to have things in our own part of the country. But let us be fair. Let us be fair with our own taxpayers and let us be fair with the taxpayers of other States, and do to them what we would want to have done to us.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Does the gentleman oppose the $3,000,000 appropriation for the New York World's Fair?

Mr. TABER. Certainly.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. I did not hear the gentleman on the floor opposing it.

Mr. TABER. Perhaps not; but that does not mean I was not opposed to it. The matter has not gone through. There has been no appropriation, and there has been no estimate from the Budget. If there were to be $3,000,000 appropriated for the New York World's Fair, it would be just the same thing that has been done for Texas, for California, for Philadelphia, and for other parts of the country, and the same thing that has been done with respect to many large items in the State of Mississippi.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. With reference to these parkways, does not the gentleman know many miles of the parkway have been constructed in many other States of the country besides these for which we are now seeking an appropriation?

Mr. TABER. None at all outside the national parks. These two items are the first. They are the trail blazers. We ought to put our stamp of disapproval upon appropriating Federal funds beyond the Budget for this sort of thing. I do not believe it will be possible for this country ever to work out of the present financial situation if we continue to make such appropriations.

Let me give just a figure or two. The expenditures of the Federal Government last year were $9,100,000,000, $200,000,000 more than they were in 1936, when we paid the bonus. Appropriations of money to be spent in 1938, including what is in this bill, already run $9,300,000,000, and before we adjourn this Congress it will be $9,500,000,000. We must stop this policy of paying out money for things which are unusual and on which the Government has not heretofore embarked. I hope the House will today set its face in the right direction and refuse to go ahead and appropriate money beyond and without Budget estimates for items which are of an unusual and unprecedented character. If we do not begin to economize, we shall never get anywhere.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. May I say to the gentleman from New York that I voted for his appropriation for the world's fair, and I would do the same thing again under the same circumstances. But now, while the gentleman is making a mountain out of a molehill——

Mr. TABER. Is it a molehill to establish the precedent of appropriating $100,000,000 for something, and starting along a path down which we have never before traveled?

Mr. RANKIN. I was talking about the world's fair.

Mr. TABER. If we get into this sort of thing and go along with it, it is a pretty good-sized molehill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. FORD].

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, the Congress of the United States during the month of June in 1936 authorized the appropriation of $10,000,000 to be used in the construction of the Blue Ridge Parkway in the States of Virginia and North Carolina and the Natchez Trace Parkway in the States of Mississippi, Alabama, and Tennessee. The House approved the authorization on June 2 by a record vote of 238 to 99. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] at that time opposed it very strenuously. He now would have you say, "Although Congress has heretofore taken favorable action on this proposition, we are going to deny you the sum you seek because he does not believe in it."

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. I decline to yield at this time.

Mr. Speaker, the people of Mississippi, Alabama, and Tennessee have not had as large a relief load as States like Pennsylvania, Michigan, and many other States have had, and they have not had the benefit of the great amounts which have been poured into such States for that purpose. The Natchez Trace Parkway is worthy of your sympathetic consideration. The Congress believed in it in 1936. The only monument we will have, when this spending spree is over, to show the people of the country that we have something worth while out of the relief appropriations is this one. We secured an allotment of $1,500,000 last year from the relief appropriation. Three contracts have been let to begin the construction work on this great project. When the Committee on Appropriations had this bill under consideration there was testimony before the committee that we actually needed $3,000,000 to go ahead with the construction work. The State of Mississippi is doing its part by furnishing the necessary rights-of-way.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, will my colleague yield?

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. I am pleased to yield to my colleague from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. May I remind the gentleman that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LAMBERTSON] made the statement that no Federal highways had been constructed outside of national parks, and he declined to be corrected. I have just called the Assistant Director of the National Park Service, and he has given me the information that the Federal Government has constructed, at Federal expense, approximately 100 miles of highway outside Yellowstone Park, 83 miles outside the Grand Canyon Park, 60 miles between Fresno and the Yosemite National Park, and some 8.72 miles outside of the Wind Cave Park, S. Dak., said roads having been constructed as entrances to said parks. They are outside the parks and do not connect national parks. It is my recollection that other roads as entrances to other parks have been constructed by the Federal Government.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. I thank my colleague.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. May I say to the gentleman that as a member of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations which has to do with appropriations for the National Park Service, I have never heard of a mile of such roads.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. That is not my responsibility. The National Park Service advised the Committee on Roads, of which I am a member, as shown by the published hearings at the time the Blue Ridge and Natchez Trace authorizations were passed, that such roads as entrances had been constructed, and then I corrected the gentleman's erroneous statement that no roads outside of parks had been constructed by the Government.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. It was absolutely without any authorization.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. I yield.

Mr. HOUSTON. Was not the first authorization for a project outside of national parks authorized in 1931?

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. The first authorization was in 1934 for a survey.

Mr. HOUSTON. I understand that, but a similar project outside of a national park was authorized first in 1931.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. And prior thereto and since then many miles of roads have been built outside of parks.

Mr. HOUSTON. If the gentleman will yield for a further question, I am a little bit bothered and would like to know if the two Senators from Mississippi are together on this proposition.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. I think I can assure the gentleman of that.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. SPARKMAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LAMBERTSON] stated that the Park Service has said nothing had been done on this project. I simply want to call the gentleman's attention to the testimony of Mr. Demaray of the National Park Service, given on June 22, before the Senate subcommittee, in which he stated that contracts had been let on two parks, and the third contract was advertised on June 19, and was ready for letting, and that the three contracts amounted to $936,000 in the State of Mississippi.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. And I may say to my colleague from Alabama that the third contract has been let. This contract was let on the 19th day of June, since Mr. Demaray testified before the Senate committee.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. I do not have the time.

Mr. Speaker, since the testimony before the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee of the House clearly shows that Mississippi had gone forward and secured the necessary rights-of-way for the construction of this highway, and that the State of Alabama and the State of Tennessee have taken proper steps to begin securing the necessary rights-of-way, I hope the membership of this House will vote for this appropriation. There was ample testimony that we could spend much more than $1,500,000 to carry on the construction work for the next fiscal year and this amendment only calls for $1,500,000. Surely, this Congress will not let two or three men who are opposed to this proposition set themselves up higher than the House or the Congress when the project has been authorized and authorized by a record vote of this Congress last year. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS].

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I asked for this time in order to answer as best I may, the repeated assertion, which has been voiced here in this debate by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER]. He is a fine Representative, a perfectly honorable man who no doubt has quoted correctly the figures. But the fallacy at the root of his argument completely overturns the honest figures which he gave.

I wonder if the gentleman from the State which "Pittsburgh stogies" have partially made famous, or infamous, realizes that the people of Mississippi smoke those stogies and pay the tax, the stamps for which are bought in Pennsylvania? Pennsylvanians buy those stamps with money furnished in large part by all the rest of us, and yet claim to have paid the total tax into the Federal Treasury. We smoke a darned sight more of them than BILL DITTER ever did!

We folk down our way cannot afford the rich cigars which the gentleman from Pennsylvania or his friends mouth so tastefully.

Similarly, the income-tax payments of Pennsylvania are high because of the iniquitous protective-tariff wall, behind which they do business and prosper. The tariff has always operated like a vacuum cleaner, sucking every dollar we could get down our way out of our pockets and into theirs; and as long as they have that protection and the intelligence to operate the system, God bless them, they will continue to pay a preponderant income tax when compared to Mississippi. [Applause.]

The old "Pittsburgh plus" racket gave Pennsylvania the steel capital of the Nation and levied streams of tribute from every other State to enrich her favored citizens. The unfair preference given "official territory", of which Pennsylvania is a part, has enriched her by millions more.

Illustrations of the fallacious character of any argument based on such figures might be multiplied, but "A word to the wise is sufficient." No one, not even the eloquent and persuasive gentleman from Pennsylvania, can get credit here or elsewhere, if people think, for tax payments made with other people's money. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Oklahoma to recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TABER) there were—ayes 117, noes 61.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and ninety-two Members are present, not a quorum.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 204, nays 137, not voting 90, as follows:

The doors were opened.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 124: Page 121, line 18, after the word "expended", strike out "$5,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$7,200,000."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 124 and concur in the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$6,000,000."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 129: Page 124, after line 21, insert "per-diem employees at rates of pay approved by the Director not exceeding current rates for similar services in the District of Columbia, the hire of draft animals with or without drivers at local rates approved by the Director, traveling expenses and carfare, and leather and rubber articles for the protection of public property and employees."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 132: Page 135, after line 18, insert:
"For defraying the deficits in the treasuries of the municipal governments because of the excess of current expenses over current revenues for the fiscal year 1938, municipality of St. Thomas and St. John, $60,000, and municipality of St. Croix, $50,000; in all, $110,000, to be paid to the said treasuries in monthly installments."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I recall that when this matter was presented to the House in the House bill, a point of order was sustained to it upon the ground that there is no authority in law for the payment by the Federal Government of the United States of municipal deficits of the cities in the Virgin Islands. What authority is there for such an appropriation and what reason is there for such an appropriation any more than for a Federal appropriation to meet a deficit in a municipality within our own borders?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. The gentleman is correct in that there is no specific authority for this appropriation, but these islands are our possessions and we are morally responsible for the general welfare of the people who inhabit them. The gentleman, of course, knows their desperate financial situation, and I say to the gentleman that this appropriation is much less than it has been in the past. Mr. Burlew, Administrative Assistant to the Secretary of the Interior, appeared before the Senate committee and made a very illuminating statement with reference to the matter, which I should be glad to read into the RECORD, if necessary, and he assured the committee that within a reasonably short time, I believe he said a year, it would be possible to eliminate this appropriation.

Mr. LANHAM. Does the gentleman think that by reason of the fact that a municipality either within or without our continental borders is in serious financial straits is any reason for the Congress of the United States, without legislative authority, to appropriate the money of the taxpayers to pay its deficits?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. This territorial possession is in a somewhat different status than the average municipality in that its geographical location makes it impossible for the residents to engage in a variety of business activities which would enable them to take care of themselves.

Mr. LANHAM. What is the reason for their financial straits? Of course other cities in the United States proper are in financial straits, and are in receipt of relief appropriations, and they cannot match the money that is furnished by the Federal Government. They are not sui generis in these municipalities in the Virgin Islands from the standpoint of being in sore financial straits; so why should we, without legislative authority, appropriate for deficits for those municipalities any more than we should appropriate for the deficits of municipalities within 1 of the 48 States?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the force of the gentleman's argument. Possibly the acquisition of the islands was not good financial investment for the United States; but we have them, and they are several hundred miles away from any business activity. They do not have the opportunity to engage in business that other cities have, and it is absolutely necessary for us to provide this appropriation for them.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. RICH. I might say to my colleague from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] that we expended from P. W. A. funds in the Virgin Islands last year $562,000, $22.50 per capita. The Federal Government spent for a Federal hotel $91,000—putting the Government into the hotel business.

The Federal Government spent last year for P. W. A. over $2,000,000 for the Virgin Island Co., and it spent under F. E. R. A. over $350,000 for the same company. It loaned to them $170,000 for a rum plant, with the stockholders being the Federal Government. All you have got down there for your money is 200,000 gallons of rum. You have 3,800 tons of sugar. They are spending money down there for these people to manufacture rum, but this is the worst part of it: You are paying the people of the Virgin Islands 60 cents a day for labor during the cultivating season and you are paying the same people 80 cents a day during the grinding season for the manufacture of rum to compete with our distillers, and you expect them to pay four or five dollars a day. Somebody is crazy, who is operating a plant like that. Think of trying to run our own distillers out of business.

Mr. Speaker, I think if we are to get these municipalities on their feet, we should see that they are paying wages that would compare with the wages that are being paid to American laborers, American men who have to pay these taxes. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] is right. It is ridiculous to think that the Federal Government would go down there and pay the deficit. There is no rhyme or reason to that kind of a proposition.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. Yes; I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I thought I had the floor.

Mr. LANHAM. Passing aside the rum part of it, because I am also interested in economy in these expenditures——

Mr. RICH. And you are interested in making rum, too. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. LANHAM. Then for what purpose was the deficit incurred?

Mr. RICH. That is what I want to know. [Laughter.] I want to know that, too. They ought to have a surplus. They ought to be able to conduct the affairs of their country.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Can the gentleman from Oklahoma tell the House whether or not the Secretary of the Interior exercises complete control over the municipalities in the Virgin Islands, or is there an element of self-government there?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. It is my understanding that the Secretary of the Interior, through the Governor, has general control over the islands.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. And therefore the indebtedness is chargeable to him, under his supervision?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Of course, they have their own local municipal self-government.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman advise the House why we should appropriate money to pay the deficit of a city in the Virgin Islands?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I attempted to answer that question when the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] asked it. The people of the Virgin Islands are not in good financial circumstances. The fact the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] recited that the Federal Government had to spend so much money down there for relief is additional evidence of the poor financial condition of the islands.

Mr. McCORMACK. Is there any reason aside from that? My city has a tax allowance of $38.70.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Congress has been appropriating funds for defraying the deficits in the municipal governments of the Virgin Islands ever since they were taken over by this country in 1917. In 1933 the deficits amounted to $236,000. As the islands have become more prosperous the deficits have decreased and the pending amendment proposes an appropriation of $110,000. The statement is made in the Senate hearings, page 33, by Mr. Burlew that there will be no deficits there in a year or so. I hope that statement is correct.

Mr. McCORMACK. But I would like to know.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. COLLINS. The budget for these municipalities in the Virgin Islands is made up prior to the beginning of the fiscal year. Estimates of expenditures as well as of taxes from all sources are made. After that is completed it is estimated as to what would be necessary for the Federal contribution. In this particular case, as I understand, it is estimated to be at this time about $110,000. If some person dies and leaves a large estate, that tax will be applied and will be taken off of the estimated $110,000 appropriated in this instance. In other words, every penny of taxes that it is possible to collect will be collected and applied upon the administration of the municipalities. Whatever deficit there is, and it is usually small and it is going down all the time, is made up by the Federal Government.

Mr. McCORMACK. Has this been the general practice?

Mr. COLLINS. This has been the practice ever since we have been in possession of the Virgin Islands. The municipalities cannot operate unless the Federal Government contributes a small amount.

Mr. McCORMACK. In other words, what we are doing is not establishing a precedent?

Mr. COLLINS. No.

Mr. McCORMACK. I have great respect for the views of the gentleman from Mississippi on matters of this kind by reason of his many years on the Appropriations Committee. The gentleman from Mississippi is satisfied that this is all right?

Mr. COLLINS. Absolutely. These islands cannot operate unless the municipalities of St. Thomas and St. Croix have the right to expend a certain amount of Federal funds to supplement the funds which they receive by taxation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I might also add that the deficit is gradually being diminished. As I have said, in 1933 it was $236,000.

Mr. COLLINS. Now it is around $110,000.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recede and concur.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SNELL) there were—ayes 101, noes 21.

So the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 133: Page 142, after line 3, insert:
"SEC. 3. The appropriations and authority with respect to appropriations contained herein shall be available from and including July 1, 1937, for the purposes respectively provided in such appropriations and authority. All obligations incurred during the period between July 1, 1937, and the date of the enactment of this act in anticipation of such appropriations and authority are hereby ratified and confirmed if in accordance with the terms thereof."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 133 and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In line 5 of said amendment, strike out the date "July 1" and insert "June 30."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this amendment is obvious. As is very well known, this bill should have been passed and signed before July 1, but because of some unfortunate circumstances we were unable to do so. This simply makes it retroactive to July 1.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 134: Page 142, line 12, change the section figure "3" to figure "4."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 134 and agree to the same.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote by which action was taken on the several amendments in disagreement and lay that motion on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House request a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill H. R. 6958, the Interior Department appropriation bill, 1938.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the following conferees: Messrs. JOHNSON of Oklahoma, SCRUGHAM, O'NEAL of Kentucky, FITZPATRICK, LEAVY, RICH, and LAMBERTSON.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate having proceeded to reconsider the bill, H. R. 6763, "An act to extend for 1 additional year the 3½-percent interest rate on certain Federal land-bank loans, to provide a 4-percent interest rate on such loans for the period July 1, 1938, to June 30, 1939, and to provide for a 4-percent interest rate on land-bank commissioner's loans for a period of 2 years", returned by the President of the United States to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, with his objections, and passed by the House on a reconsideration of the same, it was,

Resolved, That the said bill pass, two-thirds of the Senators present having voted in the affirmative.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 455) entitled "An act for the relief of J. R. Collie and Eleanor Y. Collie."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 1067. An act for the relief of Asa J. Hunter; and

S. 1284. An act to change the name of the Chemical Warfare Service.

CIVIL WAR PENSIONS

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 7896) granting pensions to certain soldiers of the Civil War.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws—

The name of William H. Jones, late of Capt. John R. Curry's Company D, South Cumberland Battalion Kentucky State Troops, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

The name of Alfred Daugherty, late of Capt. Richard F. Taylor's Company C, Middle Green River Battalion Kentucky State Troops, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

The name of Milton McNabb, alias Milton McNab, late of Capt. Henry Bucksath's Company G, Thirty-fifth Regiment Enrolled Missouri Militia, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

The name of Joseph Thompson, late of Capt. Isaac D. Hon's Company K, Sixty-ninth Regiment Enrolled Missouri Militia, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

The name of Jesse E. Lampkin, late of Capt. James M. Dennis' company of Osage and Maries Counties Volunteer Missouri Militia, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise the remarks I made today and to extend the same by including two letters.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. DORSEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a speech which I recently delivered in Philadelphia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

(Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana asked and was given permission to extend her own remarks in the RECORD.)

WIDOW OF THE LATE WILLIAM J. COCKE

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committe on Claims be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 931) for the relief of the widow of the late William J. Cocke and that the bill be referred to the Committee on War Claims.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under a special order, the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE] is recognized for 20 minutes.

UTILITY TAXES AND UTILITY RATES IN WASHINGTON, D. C.—SOURCES OF POSSIBLE REVENUE

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, Congress has just refused to pass a bill providing for a loan to the District. It is freely prophesied that the local tax bill will fail. A morning paper calls upon Congress to save "the helpless Capital City from bankruptcy" and speaks of a real crisis which impends. Recently we have read press headlines telling of the aged and destitute facing privation in the District because of delayed appropriations. The local Real Estate Board circulated a letter voicing its objections to any increase in real-estate tax in the District, stating that real-estate owners now produce approximately 60 percent of the total tax funds. Members have also received a circular letter from the Federation of Citizens' Associations setting forth the present dilemma of the District and urging passage of a tax bill which will distribute the tax burden equitably. I am heartened to learn of such an organization, and of a desire to distribute the tax burden equitably in the District. Those who think the District is oppressed because it must pay 3-percent interest on funds borrowed from the Federal Government air their grievances in the local papers. Rents and hotel rates are sky high and mounting to the stratosphere. This is a serious condition and I, for one, am willing to accept some responsibility as a Member of Congress. I therefore propose to point out a neglected source of revenue and a method of saving large sums to the people of the District which should be effective in stopping the picking of pockets.

I do believe that Congress should help the District and I am convinced that the most effective way of giving help at this time is to point out to the responsible officials of the District and to the District Committee in Congress some of my findings in a brief excursion into the facts concerning the electric power situation in Washington, D. C. I stumbled on these facts when I was studying electric power rates throughout the country in connection with the Bonneville power project which has so absorbed my attention. I am amazed that no association and no newspaper has pointed out one simple and obvious solution of the District tax problem. I am convinced that this set-up will not be tolerated when the facts are made public. It will be like the story of the old women and the pig, in the nursery rhyme, "butcher will begin to kill cow, cow will begin to drink water, water will begin to quench fire"—all my colleagues have recited this nursery rhyme—and so on, until the objective is accomplished. Utilities will begin to pay just taxes, taxes will encourage citizens, citizens will see potentialities of electric system, electric system will become public property, and then District tax troubles, high electric-light rates, slums, a measure of the profiteering and corruption will vanish in the night; District of Columbia will be clean and free—only the best-dressed woman and her maneuvering provider will feel the pinch as plunder is forbidden.

The story I have to tell is not quite so simple as a nursery rhyme, but it has elements of interest and surprise. I feel sure you will be startled when the giant Greed appears in full array. The good fairy will enter later in the person of someone with patience, capacity for research, and a sense of justice, preferably someone on the District Committee. Someone can secure a monument here in Washington for services to our Capital City. I know that it will take some study to arrive at the actual situation in regard to District utilities. I offer this material for one of the sources of information for those who desire to become conversant with the history and present status of the matter. It is my sincere belief that some action can be taken based on the information presented herewith, but I know full well that further investigation must be made.

SOME QUESTIONS

Certain questions occur to me immediately and I propound them in the hope that Congress will demand full answers:

Have the District utilities paid all their taxes to date, including their personal taxes?

Why is the District Committee silent in the face of such an obstacle to orderly government as threatened bankruptcy?

Why does the District Utilities Commission continue to consent that the District shall be looted and its residents penalized by a private utility which is guaranteed 60½ percent interest on its real stock investment, rain or shine, good times or depressions, and has profited in the past 11 years to the extent of $60,000,000 from the funds of the people of the District?

Why is this utility, as well as other utilities in the District, practically free from just taxation, in spite of the rich pickings in which it is protected by some united action, official or unofficial?

Why is the private power utility not compelled to pay taxes approximating those paid by real estate?

My brief review of this situation seems to indicate that the District is about $2,000,000 shy each year in taxes which ought to be paid by the utilities, over $800,000 of which should justly come from the electric power company which furnishes the current. What has lulled the District Committee and the Utility Commission into acquiescence in this obvious fraud?

Who is responsible for the victimizing of these voteless people?

Who allows our Government to create here a city of slums paying tribute to a holding company, the chief beneficiary of which is Mr. Harrison Williams, lately before the Securities and Exchange Commission, fully written up in the press of the country?

Why does the District tax holders of real estate to the exclusion of holders of valuable rights which are equivalent to franchise gifts granted by Congress?

One more question, and that is, why should people in such obvious financial distress overlook a source of income which has given one man such tremendous returns, and continues to pour money into his coffers, while the District goes begging to Congress for loans freed from interest?

Why, indeed? Is it ignorance, helplessness, indifference, or some other cause?

SOME ANSWERS

I can tell you enough about this situation, and answer enough of the questions to awaken you to the fact that someone in this Congress should learn the whole story. Some committee should ferret out all the facts and should follow the trail until he finds a reason for the congressional apathy and public indifference. Any investigator will stumble upon almost unbelievable tales of the efficacy of the social lobby in promoting opportunities for vast accumulations of money and capital at the expense of the helpless people of this District. What should be the best governed city in the world will be found, upon examination, to be far from an ideal example, so far as the utility racket is concerned.

I proceed to share with my colleague the first fruits of my brief investigation in the hope that the full harvest may be garnered by the District Committee. I have taken the utmost care in this work in order to avoid error in statements of fact, nor do I make any statement which I am not satisfied is completely justified by facts easily obtainable to those who will inspect the records to which I have referred.

My first care is to point out a source of revenue for the District; second, a source of saving to the people; and third, the fallacies of the so-called Washington sliding-scale electric rate plan. The Rau report, made in 1932, provided by congressional resolution, suggested $4,000,000 a year as a possible savings to the people of the Government and the District. This amount may now be increased to $4,800,000 because of the additional use of electric current. Now, that is a very close approach to the five millions which now keeps the District from balancing its budget. Since the District is now in such a quandary over the possibility of raising the money for actual municipal expenses, it seems the most opportune time for setting forth the facts about taxes which are elsewhere paid by utilities and should be paid in Washington.

DISTRICT REVENUE FROM UTILITY TAXES

There has been a great deal said both in and out of Congress regarding the tax situation of the District of Columbia. Proposals have been made to add an additional tax load to real estate, or to legislate a sales tax which will fall on the little fellow. In my opinion, immediate attention should be given to the taxation of the utilities, more specifically to the taxation of the Potomac Electric Power Co., which earns such enormous returns on a relatively small investment. In estimating the taxes which should be paid, as well as the electric rates which should be charged, I have made the comparison between the privately owned company which operates in the District and the publicly owned power plant of Tacoma, Wash. This comparison comes naturally just at this time, as I have recently made it in connection with the rates to be charged at Bonneville, and Tacoma has one of the most successfully operated public power plants in the country. A comparison with Canadian rates would have been much more striking, but not so suited to the purpose.

The local taxes paid by the Potomac Electric Power Co. for the calendar year 1936 amounted to $597,613 according to the report of the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia to the House District Committee. This is 4.26 percent of the Company's gross earnings for the year, $14,093,989. Tacoma's public power plant pays 10.35 percent of its gross earnings for local and State taxes. If the private District company paid local taxes at the same rate paid by the Tacoma public plant, it would have paid $1,458,000 in 1936, or $860,000 more than it actually did pay. The propagandists for private power tell us that the reason Tacoma's rates are so low is that the Tacoma plant pays no taxes and has been subsidized by the taxpayer. Both of these allegations are untrue. The cited facts show that the District electric utility is not doing half as much as the Tacoma plant for State and city governmental purposes, such as schools, police, fire protection, and so forth, and has been subsidized by the people entirely for the personal gain of a Wall Street manipulator.

This is a situation Congress cannot afford to neglect after the facts have been pointed out. These facts and figures are an effective challenge to those who raise the tax and subsidy cry against the Tacoma electric plant. It should be fairly stated that the District local utility pays 2.18 percent of its gross income in Federal excise tax, and 6.23 in income, undistributed profits, and other minor, miscellaneous Federal taxes. This latter percentage is abnormally high because of the great excess profits of the company. Furthermore, the Government itself is taxed by the local utility and it contributes about 20 percent of the company's earnings. Somewhere in this discussion it should be pointed out that the Government, as a customer offers very great advantages. The Government consumes enormous and increasing quantities of power, and always pays its bills, there are no bad accounts, bookkeeping is reduced to a minimum. The addition of air-conditioning and of huge Government buildings means a gold mine to the local operating company.

Now, let the District immediately set about putting its house in order, and proceed to proper taxation of utilities, and it will find more sympathetic hearing in Congress.

THE WASHINGTON PLAN

Before entering into a discussion of electric rates charged in Washington it becomes necessary to set forth some information about the so-called Washington plan, or the "Washington sliding scale electric rate plan." There is a widespread and persistent propaganda to the effect that the Washington plan affords an ideal solution of the power question. Just now it is most unfortunately being copied elsewhere, and proposed for other cities, notably New York. It is not native to Washington, but English born, in connection with gas rates. It has been the target for many claims, most of which are false so far as the public is concerned; it is indeed a great success from the viewpoint of the private power company. Since it has produced rates somewhat lower than the American average, the claims made for it have led even well-meaning progressives mistakenly to call it a yardstick. It is assumed that it yields satisfactorily low rates and yet avoids the pitfalls of public ownership. The fact that the Power Trust everywhere is proclaiming the virtues of this plan and that it has the endorsement of certain Government officials is not without significance. I have already stated that under this plan the Pepco is not paying its just proportion of local taxes.

I propose to demonstrate from the official records and the history of the Potomac Electric Power Co., which serves the National Capital, that it is not giving true yardstick rates; that, since the inauguration of this famous plan some 10 years ago, it has extracted unconscionable profits from the consumers, and that it is no solution of the power question except from the viewpoint of utility exploiters. I propose to present comparative tables similar to those given in my speech of June 24, this session, when I compared bills paid by consumers to the private company operating in Portland, Oreg., with those paid by consumers served by the public plant at Tacoma, Wash. This time I am comparing Washington, D. C., and Tacoma in respect to costs of residential, commercial, and industrial power. The data were furnished me at my request by the Federal Power Commission, and, it will be remembered, the figures presented by the Commission in its national rate survey have not been challenged by the Power Trust, nor can they be successfully challenged. The evolution of the "Washington plan" and its jokers are fully described in a following section on the "consent decree."

COMPARATIVE ELECTRIC BILLS

I present, as an index, comparative bills between Washington, D. C., and Tacoma, Wash., for all classes of electric service directly affecting the public. In my speech of June 24 I have fully described rate classes, consumption, and the Tacoma public power plant. With this brief explanation, the bill comparisons will be self-explanatory. I urge all students of the power problem to study these tables.

Comparison of residential bills of the District of Columbia and Tacoma

City	Lighting and small appliances				Large appliances
	Minimum bill	15 kilowatt-hours	25 kilowatt-hours	40 kilowatt-hours	100 kilowatt-hours	250 kilowatt-hours	500 kilowatt-hours
Washington	$0.75	$0.75	$0.98	$1.56	$3.10	$5.65	$9.40
Tacoma	$0.50	$0.68	$1.13	$1.52	$2.12	$3.62	$6.12
Percentage above Tacoma	50	10	−15	3	46	56	54

The annual kilowatt-hour per meter consumption in the District was 965; in Tacoma, 1,560 for the year 1935. The average residential rate in cents per kilowatt-hour in the District was 3.24 cents; in Tacoma, 1.68 cents.

For purposes of further comparison, I am now using 100 kilowatt-hours a month as a base. For the range between 15 and 40 kilowatt-hours per month, District rates are reasonable. This low consumption is possible only when no appliances are used. For other parts of the residential schedule they are high. The District subcommittee of the House Appropriations Committee, in 1937, published a table showing comparative domestic electric bills in cities of 500,000 or more population. This table showed that for 100 kilowatt-hours domestic use per month, the bill would be $3.90 for the average of 17 large private utility plants. The billing range in the table was from $2.82 to $5.50 per month, and for the District $3.10; for Tacoma, Wash., $2.12. This shows that, based on this record of comparison, the domestic electric rates in the large cities of the country are 84 percent higher than a fair yardstick, and in the District, 46½ percent higher.

It is interesting to note that in this table fairly low rates exist in cities close to T. V. A. or subject to competition from public power plants. The lowest tabulated bill, $2.82, was in Cincinnati, showing that rates can be reduced without destroying the solvency of the private power companies.

Comparison of commercial light bills of the District and Tacoma

City	Billing demands (kilowatt demand) and monthly consumption (kilowatt-hours)
	0.75 kilowatt demand, 50 kilowatt-hours	1.50 kilowatt demand, 150 kilowatt-hours	3.0 kilowatt demand, 375 kilowatt-hours	6.0 kilowatt demand, 750 kilowatt-hours	12.0 kilowattt demand, 1,500 kilowatt-hours
Washington	$1.90	$5.20	$11.12	$20.50	$39.25
Tacoma	$1.75	$5.25	$11.25	$22.50	$42.00
Percentage above Tacoma	9	−1	−1	−10	−7

Both Washington and Tacoma commercial light rates are slightly higher, approximately 15 to 20 percent, than a fair yardstick for this class of service. On a strictly comparative basis, District rates are better for this class of service than Tacoma. District bills are based on Company schedule D, which gives a lower bill than their schedule E. This schedule D is evidently a "leader." This more advantageous rate for the smallest commercial consumers of light favors the owners of small stores, for their light only, not for current used for power.

Comparison of commercial power bills of the District and Tacoma

City	Billing demands (kilowatt demand) and monthly consumption kilowatt-hours
	1.5 kilowatt demand, 150 kilowatt-hours	3.0 kilowatt demand, 375 kilowatt-hours	6.0 kilowatt demand, 750 kilowatt-hours	12.0 kilowatt demand, 1,500 kilowatt-hours	30.0 kilowatt demand, 6,000 kilowatt hours
Washington	$5.20	$11.12	$20.50	$39.25	$144.50
Tacoma	$2.33	$5.03	$10.05	$20.10	$61.50
Percentage above Tacoma	123	121	104	95	136

This Washington schedule D is abnormally high for power service. This, and the industrial rate, applies for use of current for power purposes including building elevators, air-conditioning, garages, filling stations, and, in fact, all power used in the District, including the Government use.

Comparison of industrial power bills of the District and Tacoma (bills expressed to nearest dollar)

City	Schedule	Billing demands (kilowatt demand) and monthly consumption (kilowatt-hours)
		75 kilowatt demand		150 kilowatt demand		300 kilowatt demand		500 kilowatt demand		1,000 kilowatt demand
		15,000 kilowatt-hours	30,000 kilowatt-hours	30,000 kilowatt-hours	60,000 kilowatt-hours	60,000 kilowatt-hours	120,000 kilowatt-hours	100,000 kilowatt-hours	200,000 kilowatt-hours	200,000 kilowatt-hours	400,000 kilowatt-hours
Washington	E	$356	$504	$608	$828	$1,004	$1,382	$1,490	$2,110	$2,695	$3,775
Washington	L	$324	$459	$554	$760	$925	$1,285	$1,385	$1,974	$2,524	$3,524

Twenty-seven percent of all current used in the District comes under the power schedules, all of which are high.

The exclusive-dealing perpetual contract between the Potomac Electric Power Co. and the Capital Transit Co. was set out in the statement filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission on October 31, 1935, complying with the Securities Act of 1933. This filing was made by the Washington Railway & Electric Co., the parent or second-degree holding company of the local utility. This contract, amongst other things, provides for the sale of 75,000,000 kilowatt-hours annually for the flat sum of $445,000, subject to consumption and coal-cost corrections, based on $4.40 per long ton for coal. In addition, the local electric company maintains at its own expense the generating, transmission, and distribution, including substations, property of the Transit Co. The gross sale price of this current, sold to the Transit Co., is 5.94 mills per kilowatt-hour. This net contract price constitutes a burden on the other rate payers, possibly to the extent of $100,000 per year, and the net rate is practically one-half of what all other power consumers pay. This constitutes a discrimination against other power users, including the Government.

The contract with Stone & Webster should also be opened up as a possible source of burden on the rate payer.

The local utility in the year 1935 used 197,315,800 kilowatt-hours through its interchange contract with Baltimore and Safe Harbor companies, at a cost of $398,542—page 46, Public Utilities Commission, 1935—which represents a unit cost to the company of 2.02 mills per kilowatt-hour. This represents 34.5 percent of the company's steam generation at the two steam plants. It shows a sizable amount of low-priced hydropower from Safe Harbor consumed in Washington.

THE WASHINGTON RATE CONTROVERSY

In order to deal intelligently with the utility problem in the District it is necessary to survey the history of the rate controversy and the plan resulting from it.

Shortly after the passage by Congress, in 1913, of the District Utility Commission Act, the Commission was created, and it proceeded to set up an organization to carry out the rate provisions of the act. The first requisite was the determination of the rate base.

In this period the law controlling the rate base was in a state of evolution. The law then rested on the Supreme Court opinion in the Smythe-Ames decision rendered in 1898. In this decision the issue was straddled, the decree allowing the rate base value to be determined from a consideration both of historical cost and cost of reproduction. Historical cost represents the actual investment dollars going into the plant, as nearly as can be determined from the historical records of the company. The reproduction cost is a hypothetical cost of a hypethetical identical plant assumed to be built as a continuous operation and excluding the existing plant.

In the practical determination of a rate base the reproduction cost gives a padded value, as I will demonstrate later by actual results in its application to the Washington rate base. The reproduction-cost doctrine also makes what is, practically, an inflated rate. It is unsound as a matter of economics, is unfair to the interests of both investors and rate payers, and promotes horse-trading tactics, jockeying, and manipulations.

ATTEMPT AT VALUATION VIA THE COURTS

The District Utility Commission commenced valuation of Potomac Electric Power Co. July 1, 1914, and completed the same in May 1916. Hearings were held by the Commission and a valuation order finally issued. The company took exception to this order and filed an injunction suit in the District Supreme Court. The Commission then proceeded with hearings on the rate of return and followed with an order, July 1917, setting the rate of return at 7 percent and rates corresponding thereto were allowed. The company then filed another injunction in the same court against placing the rates into effect. On August 20, 1917, the court granted the injunction but required the company to impound the difference between the rates in effect and those ordered effective August 1, 1917. In March 1920, the District Supreme Court decided the valuation case, sustaining the Commission's valuation. The company then appealed to the court of appeals, being successful in an opinion rendered in November 1921, 7 years after the initiation of the valuation survey. The Commission then took an appeal to the United States Supreme Court, and the high Court refused to take jurisdiction, in an opinion rendered in April 1923. This decision threw the base and rate determination into a confused state, as the court of appeals set no formula for determining the rate base. It was then necessary for the Commission to confer with the company to reach an agreement, by negotiation, as to rate base, rate of return, electric schedules, and handling the impounded fund. The negotiations continued through 1923 and the full year of 1924. Through these processes the company succeeded in delaying the rate determination for 10 years after Congress had acted, much to the disgust of the people of Washington. It is just such delays, resulting from legal legerdemain, that have caused the people of the Nation to prefer the yardstick as the birch rod for an instrument of effective regulation.

GREAT FALLS OF THE POTOMAC

Fifteen miles above Washington, on the Potomac, is a power site of substantial possibilities. Question has been raised as to the water title at this point, and it appears that there are three claimants. The first claim descends from the Potomack Co., incorporated in 1784, George Washington being one of the organizers of this company and its president. Title of this claim passed to the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal Co. The second claim is that of the Federal Government, owner of land at the dam site. The third claimant is the Great Falls Power Co., owner of about 1,000 acres of reservoir property. The Federal Government should have no difficulty in perfecting title, if desired. The Great Falls Power Co. never developed power at this site. The Washington Railway & Electric Co., the holding company of the Potomac Electric Power Co., purchased two-thirds of the stock of the water-power company in 1902 for $425,000 and contracted to transfer these shares to the Potomac Electric Power Co. for $1,000,000 of stock of the latter company. This contract has been continued, as evidenced by the holding company's declaration filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission. These facts can be substantiated from the Securities and Exchange Commission declarations, which I advise all Members of Congress to read closely.

The Federal Government now has a dam above the Great Falls site used to furnish water to the water-supply system of the District. Further development will be necessary to protect the water supply of Washington. Evidently the Potomac Electric Power Co. contracted to give up $1,000,000 worth of stock for rate protection for the purpose of preventing the development at Great Falls.

The Federal Water Power Act was passed in 1920 during the height of this rate litigation. This act required the new Federal Power Commission to report on the practicability of power development at the Great Falls site. As a result, a report was submitted to Congress in 1920, often referred to as "the Tyler report", and printed as Senate Document No. 403. The Tyler report set out that this project was both feasible and desirable. It indicated the kilowatt-hour output capacity about equal to the present kilowatt-hour use in the District.

The Army Appropriation Act of 1921 contained a Senate amendment appropriating $200,000 for a dam at Great Falls. This amendment was stricken from the bill in the House. In 1923 Senator NORRIS offered Senate bill 746, to provide a Government-owned hydro plant at Great Falls. This bill passed the Senate, but slumbered in the House Committee on the District of Columbia.

The trend of those times was favorable to big business, as judged by the water-power licenses granted to monopoly and the lobbying methods and activities of the holding-company representatives. Nevertheless this water-power site was a potential birch rod for rate regulation. I have been told that the Norris bill, Senate bill 746, had no effect on the settlement of the Washington rate controversy. This may be correct, but it is reported to have cost $80,000 for lobbying expenses by the holding company. They did not spend this money in vain. The record shows that the House District subcommittee adjourned after an 11-day hearing until December 5, 1924. The consent decree embodying the settlement of the Washington rate controversy and setting up the "Boston sliding scale rate plan", since referred to as the "Washington plan", was handed down by the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia on December 31, 1924. The sequence of these dates is significant. Also pertinent to this situation was the passage of the amendment to the La Follette Act permitting holding companies to enter the District.

THE CONSENT DECREE

This decree, accepted by a Federal judge, was the legal basis of the settlement of the rate litigation and was the authority for the Washington plan. This decree provided the following points, which are the essentials of the so-called rate sliding-scale plan: (1) Effective date, January 1, 1925; (2) rate base; (3) depreciation reserve; (4) return and rates; (5) disposition of impounded funds.

I shall discuss each of the four latter items under a separate heading. In this study I have consulted the fundamental-source documents, reference to which is given herein. I have also had the study of the sliding-scale-rate plan by Irvin Bussing, published by the Columbia University Press. This work contains complete reference to the basic data and tabular compilations from the reports of the Public Utility Commission of the District of Columbia. This study fails to get at the meat of the problem because it ignores the increase in plant investment from public contributions.

Figures cited throughout my discussion have been given in round numbers for convenience in presentation, but they should not be construed as approximations because so presented. They are accurate.

THE RATE BASE ALLOWED MILLIONS OF WATER

The rate base set out in the consent decree, representing the court's determination of fair value, was $32,500,000. This was as of January 1, 1925, and includes the Maryland property. This was a compromise value and represents no judicial formula for rate-base determination. (See Decree Sup. Ct. D. C., Equity 35336.)

The Commission's historical value, or original cost-rate base, as of this date, was $24,400,000. This figure included all additions since 1917, and adjustments for working capital, materials, and supplies. Their similar reproduction-cost figure was $25,300,000. On this decree date the company's book balance sheet shows the following (see Public Utilities Commission of District of Columbia, 1924, p. 142):

Long-term funded debt	$15,320,000
Capital stock	6,000,000
Free surplus balance	2,125,000
Total	23,445,000

To remove any question, I have assumed that the above free surplus balance represented an obligation from the company to the common-share holder on the date of the initiation of the plan.

The valuation urged by the company throughout this controversy, as shown in the hearings, was $44,000,000. The difference between this rate base and the estimates set forth above forcibly points out how a private utility can take advantage of the chaotic law to inflate the rate base, and follow the advantage of such inflation by increasing the rates to the public. Right here it should be pointed out that the actual investment figures and the Commission's historical value are in close agreement. I have checked this again by calculating the actual cost per meter for extension in the period from 1925 to 1935, which information is available in the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia reports, 1924 to 1935. The evidence shows that the Commission's historical value adjusted to January 1, 1925, was close to a true value. To be fair and to allow for imperfections in the company's early book accounts, I have concluded that a debt-redeeming plant would have started this period with a prudent investment value of about $25,000,000. This can be substantiated from records of hearings before the Commission.

PADDED FIGURES GIVEN IMMORTAL LIFE

From the facts cited it is clearly apparent that the Washington plan started out with a padded value of $7,500,000, or an increase of 30 percent over the prudent value of the plant. This has been perpetuated.

The decree provides for an undepreciated rate base in spite of the fact that the universal rule of nature has shown that nothing is endowed with perpetual life. The rate base is never a decreasing amount. For example, this padded value is continued in the base perpetually. Fundamentally, this is the major difference between the sliding-scale plan and the debt-redeeming, publicly owned power plan.

In the period from January 1, 1925, to December 31, 1935, the number of meters in service increased from 77,100 to 182,700, or 137 percent (P. U. C., D. C., 1924, p. 154; 1935, p. 46). This is distinctly an abnormal increase, being about six times the national average. This increase was not the result of management, but resulted from the expanding activities of the Federal Government. Washington and its private utility were, therefore, immune from the depression.

CONSUMERS CONTRIBUTE TO NEW CAPITAL

It is evident that the public has contributed $34,000,000 to new capital for this utility, but it has acquired no ownership. It has been a generous banker, willing to furnish money, pay the interest on its own money, and expect no repayment. In 1926 the annual residential consumption per customer in the District was 470 kilowatt-hours. In 1935 it was 965 kilowatt-hours. The national average figures are, respectively, 414 kilowatt-hours and 660 kilowatt-hours. Again this is an abnormal increase, resulting from lowering rates, advent of electric refrigeration, and the high average income of the Washington people.

Here are the figures for the 1935 capitalization—Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia, 1935, page 39:

Dec. 31, 1935

Common stock	$6,000,000
Preferred stock	7,000,000
Long-term debt	12,934,000
Total	25,934,000

Increase over 1925, $2,489,000. The rate base January 1, 1925, was $32,500,000. As of December 31, 1935, the rate base was $68,898,000, or an increase of $36,398,000. Deducting from this latter figure the increase in capitalization of $2,489,000, we secure a net increase of $33,909,000 in cash input into the plant. From what source did this net increase come? Obviously, from the rate payer. What does this mean? It means that the public had been made the banker of the company. The public has advanced this money, which will never be repaid under the plan. In addition, the public now pays to the company in its rates over 7-percent interest, subject to depreciation-fund credit, on his own money. This is reverse banking. Ponzi, compared to this, was simple.

In this same 11-year period the company disbursed, including its share of the impounded fund, to the common-share holder $18,125,000, or 302 percent on this stock, an average of 27½-percent dividends per year—Bussing, page 155, and 1935 report, Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia, page 40.

In the Sheffield, England, plan, where the sliding scale originated, the maximum allowable dividend was 10 percent. Fairly, this amount should be deducted from the disbursed dividend to secure the excess distribution. This excess-dividend disbursement then amounts to $11,525,000.

88 PERCENT OF PRESENT RATE BASE TAKEN FROM CONSUMER

Summing up the items of (1) original rate-base padding; (2) net cash input into plant by rate payer, plus depreciation charged to operation; (3) excess dividends paid out over 10 percent on common stock, we arrive at a figure of practically $60,900,000, or 88 percent of the rate base, paid for by the public. In addition there is the net value of the reserve fund to be added. The Commission's reports do not segregate this in detail.

All this means, plainly, that in the period from 1925 to 1935, the District rate payer, under the Washington plan, contributed over 88 percent of present value of the Pepco plant, and is required to pay in his rates today, over 7 percent interest on the large sum he contributed. Thus does the District public make social royalty of its utility barons. In a debt-redeeming public plant, these sums would be used to lower the rate base. At the end of the redemption period, the public plant rate payer would have his capital rate base eliminated, and his rates would be based only on operation and depreciation costs, which, under Pepco's 1935 values, would mean a further rate reduction of at least 40 percent. If the Government operated this plant, further economies would be made, and a greater rate reduction possible.

NET PROFITS OF 60½ PERCENT ANNUALLY

The net earnings in the 11-year period, and including the impounded fund contribution, after all deductions through preferred dividends, amounted to $39,800,000 or 665 percent of the outstanding common shares, or 60½ percent per year. This can be easily verified in the balance sheets given in the reports of the Commission.

All of this shows that, under the Washington plan, the profits have been enormous, even under comparatively low rates. This is another demonstration of the cheapness of electrical manufacture and distribution. This Washington plan financial set-up points out forcibly the enormous accretion of funds, actually belonging to the people, which gravitates toward Wall Street. In 50 years the accretions of the people's money siphoned off to Wall Street will inevitably set up a financial power which will enslave our people.

The beginning was perfectly apparent during the holding-company fight in the last Congress. No wonder that the Consolidated Edison Co. recently suggested to the mayor of New York the adoption of the Washington plan, when he advocated a municipal plant for New York. I wonder what will be the result of the Massachusetts experiment under this plan, and why they have adopted it.

ENORMOUS DEPRECIATION RESERVE

The consent decree required the setting up each year of a depreciation charge which would be added to a fund to be retained and used by the company which would increase until it reached 20 percent of the rate base. At that point, the annual payments into this fund would be stopped and held in abeyance as long as the fund remained over 20 percent of the rate base. (See Equity 35336, Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.) All property retirements would be charged to this fund. The annual depreciation appropriation was set at 2.3 percent of the rate base as long as the depreciation-reserve fund was 15 percent or less of the base, and scaled down to 1.3 percent when the fund was 19 percent of the base. When the fund reached over 20 percent of the base, there would be no annual appropriation. This annual depreciation appropriation, less 4 percent interest on the accumulated fund, was charged to operation and paid for by the rate payers. The 4-percent credit represented interest on the existing fund, on the assumption that the company would invest the funds so as to yield this interest rate. If invested so as to earn in excess of 4 percent, the difference belonged to the company.

The fund, at the beginning of the plan, was close to $4,000,000 which had come from the rate payers before the decree. On December 31, 1935, it amounted to $11,458,000, of which $7,960,000 was a direct charge to operation since 1925, and thereby paid by the people. The interest accumulation amounted to $3,500,000. The part of this fund contributed by the rate payer and invested in additional plant, would yield a 7½-percent return to the company, which in turn was also paid for by rate payers, less the 4 percent normal interest deduction.

Here again we have a fund created by the rate payer on which the rate payer is charged interest if invested in plant. Naturally, part of this fund is, and should be, kept liquid by investing in bonds. For the part invested in plant, the public is again banker for the company, paying interest to the company on its own money. The decree provides for an undepreciated rate base. Any retired property, plus cost of removal and less salvage, is charged to this fund.

REDUCED RATES AND MOUNTING PROFITS

The cause of the second injunction against the commission, in 1917, was their order no. 223, setting the rate of return at 7 percent on the rate base. There are two factors which promote net earnings for the company, namely, the rate base and the rate of return. In the consent decree of 1924, the company's lawyers upped the return from 7 to 7½ percent. They did not secure all they went after in the rate base, as evidenced by the commission and court records, so the rate of return had to be raised in order to increase earnings. It is at this point that the so-called sliding scale comes in, which is theoretical sop only.

The original decree provides that "if the rates yield more than 7½-percent return, one-half of said excess shall be used in the reduction of rates thereafter, thereby providing a sliding scale." The insertion of the word "thereafter" in the decree is another joker which operates to give the company all the excess earnings in the year they accrue, say, for example, 1925. Thereafter, theoretically, the division of this excess is 50 percent to the company and 50 percent for reduction of rates. Now, the first year, 1925, assuming stationary earnings, the company keeps 100 percent of excess, the next year 50 percent, the third year 25 percent, the fourth year 12½ percent, and so on, for 20 years until the 1925 excess is completely absorbed. The accumulations of each succeeding year are added, so that in the period from 1925 to 1935 the accumulation of excess earnings over the consent decree return amounted to $10,498,700. Of this amount, $6,261,000, theoretically, went to reducing rates, and $4,237,420 was retained by the company.

Now, practically, the plan has operated to allow the company to retain all of this $10,498,700, which it did. There was no actual cash distribution to the rate payer. The amount set out for rate reductions as listed on page 32 of Public Utilities Commission, 1935, is a theoretical figure, and therefore a misnomer. The facts are that in each of the years in the period of study the actual earnings were higher than allowable under the decree, being $1,538,000 excess in 1930, resulting in a return of 10.7 percent on an investment largely paid for by consumers. This theoretical reduction became a joker due to two facts: First, the ever-increasing company's gross earnings (see p. 32, report Public Utilities Commission of District of Columbia, 1935); and, secondly, the consumer data which controls this allocation is in the hands of the company and not in the files of the Commission.

In 1925, the rate of return on the rate base was 9.59 percent and in 1930 was 10.7 percent. Remember, the rate base was largely contributed by the rate payer. In this period, the average rate charged for current dropped from 4.115 cents per kilowatt-hour to 3.312 cents per kilowatt-hour, or a reduction of about 20 percent. Herein lies a proof of the proposition that cheaper rates make for larger earnings. This proposition applied to the automobile industry was the basis of the Ford fortune. The automatic excessive accumulations of these various funds resulted in the Commission's order, no. 919, reducing the base return to 7 percent. The company again went to court, and in July 1932, Congress passed, and President Hoover approved, the bill authorizing the Rau report on a proposed municipal plant, hereinafter covered.

Another joker is what constitutes "the used and useful property account." I am firmly convinced that a thoroughgoing investigation will disclose large sums representing deadwood or unused property, not retired, on which the rate payer is assessed.

The birch rod in the shape of a threat had its effect, and a new consent decree was entered, February 8, 1933, setting the rate of return at 7 percent and retaining the old theoretical sliding scale up to an 8¼-percent return. For a return in excess of 8¼ percent, theoretically, 60 percent went to the public in rate reductions. Then, until the return exceeded 9 percent, 75 percent was to be used for rate reduction. This was only a tranquilizer.

THE PEOPLE MAKE THE GUARANTEE

In the 1924 and 1933 consent decrees, the Company is guaranteed a return. If the return drops below 6¾ percent for 2 consecutive years, the Commission is required to raise rates to restore the revenue. Therefore, the Company by legal process, has a guaranteed income. The farmers of the country would like to have the Government guarantee a fixed return to them. They would be satisfied with the 60½ percent guaranteed earnings of the Pepco on the company's actual stock investment. To allow such a set-up to continue is a rank discrimination in favor of a private utility as against the public.

The rate of return was again reduced in 1936, this time to 6½ percent. The workings of this plan have produced 60½ percent of stock earnings on an average allowable rate of return of 7.36 percent between 1925 and 1935. The rate of return should, in the mind of the public, be dissociated from the concept of dividend rate or actual earnings. This decreed rate of return is nearly double the current interest rate. The courts have established a much higher rate of return than the current pure interest rate on the theory that this extra compensation was to cover capital risk. There is no such risk under the Washington plan, as there is a guarantee on the return and the capital invested should be rightfully the property of the people.

When the decree went into operation in 1925 the electric rates in Washington were among the highest in the country with a top residential rate of 10 cents. Today the top residential rate is 3.9 cents. In spite of this reduction, the public has paid for 88 percent of the plant of this company.

Again, this shows the enormous profits in the manufacture and sale of electricity.

I will not take time to repeat the rate history under the consent decrees. Anyone interested can find this information in the reports of the Public Utility Commission of the District of Columbia. However, there have been very substantial rate reductions. The 1935 average rate for all classes of service was 47½ percent of the 1924 average rate. In spite of this sizeable reduction in rates, the gross revenue of the company increased 110 percent. In 1924 the gross annual revenue of the company was $6,236,000; in 1935 it was $13,154,000; in 1936 it was $14,093,989.

WHAT HAPPENED TO THE PEOPLE'S FUND?

It has been noted that the Commission ordered a rate reduction in 1917, which the company enjoined. Briefly, to describe this reduction order, it is sufficient to state that the top block residential price was dropped from 10 to 7.6 cents per kilowatt-hour. There was also a shortening of the top block and a reduction of the lower block. On granting the temporary injunction the court required the impounding of the difference between the billed and ordered rates. During the 8 years of litigation this impounded fund, plus interest, accumulated to $6,401,000.

Under the consent decree the rate was dropped to 7.5 cents, which was less than the ordered rate, though the top block was lengthened. This was a virtual admission of the correctness of the ordered rate. Nevertheless, the company in the consent decree secured better than 50 percent of this impounded fund, all of which rightfully belonged to the people from whom it was collected under the court's order to impound for refund.

Now, let us look at the disposition of this fund. First, $500,000 was set aside to pay the company's franchise and Federal income taxes. The balance was divided equally between the people and company, and the unclaimed refunds amounting to about $300,000 went to the company to be distributed over a 20-year period. The company, shortly thereafter, paid out practically all the amount it received ($2,880,000) as a 48-percent dividend to the common shareholder, which is entirely the holding company. Here again, it is "heads, the company wins; tails, the people lose."

PUBLIC PLANT WOULD SAVE $4,800,000 ANNUALLY

The Rau report was the birch-rod used by Congress in the last year of the Hoover administration. It covered a survey as to the feasibility of municipal operation in the District of Columbia. This report, dated December 1932, concluded: (1) Ownership and operation of the street light and signal system, now partially owned by the Government, would save $200,000 annually.

(2) A municipal plant to satisfy all the District requirements would save the Government and people of the District around $4,000,000 per year.

(3) A limited system supplying the concentrated governmental area would save the people of the District around $1,000,000 per year.

Today these savings would amount, in round numbers, respectively, to $240,000, $4,800,000, and $1,200,000.

THE CHOSEN BENEFICIARY OF THE DISTRICT

Let us now look at the principal beneficiary of this reverse banking plan. The Potomac & Electric Power Co. is controlled through 100-percent stock voting power ownership by the Washington Railway & Electric Co., which is a device to circumvent the La Follette Act. This latter company is controlled by the North American Co. through 50.02-percent voting power. (See registration certificate with Securities and Exchange Commission of W. R. & E. Co., Oct. 31, 1935.) On top of the North American is the Central States Electric Corporation, and on top of the pyramid sits a Mr. Harrison Williams. Who is Mr. Williams? The Nation and Time magazines incidentally described him during the S. E. C. investigations as the "husband of the world's best-dressed woman." To an ordinary Congressman he is the apex of the pyramid whose base consists of seven separate utility companies controlling about one-fifth of the total public-utility business of the country. His personal control is exercised through ownership of 51 percent of the stock of the Central States Electric Corporation. The latter, and Mr. Williams, were investigated by the Securities and Exchange Commission last spring.

Let us now see what this testimony brought out. Mr. Williams' original investment in Central States was $2,072,000, of which $500,000 was borrowed money. This original investment was run up to a value of $612,000,000 in 1929. During this process the North American Securities Corporation stimulated the market of the North American stock by purchase of $131,000,000 of stock, 18 percent of all its stock. The market value of the Central States stock September 30, 1929, was $680,000,000, with a stated asset value of $260,000,000. From 1922 to 1929 a share of this stock advanced from $10.50 to $5,600 per share. Before the great break of 1929, Mr. Williams had recovered his initial investment of $2,072,000 and later disposed of sufficient stock to meet the panic with $27,200,000 cash and 51 percent stock control remaining. The investing public came out differently—losing two-thirds of their cash investment. The Van Sweringen pyramid, now under investigation by Senator WHEELER'S Senate Interstate Commerce Committee, was a pigmy in comparison with this. Through this stock control, Mr. Williams influences the management of companies worth nearly three thousand million dollars (Nation, vol. 144, no. 10).

FRANCHISE OF PEPCO

Moody's Manual of Public Utilities (1935 ed., p. 671) states that the franchise of the company is perpetual. This is not the fact. The right of the company to use the boulevards, avenues, streets, and public places in the District is authorized in part or recognized by certain acts of Congress numbering 16 in all, commencing with the act of March 2, 1895 (28 Stat. 935), and ending with the act of June 26, 1912 (37 Stat. 181). Such rights are not exclusive, nor are they limited as to time. The acts recognizing certain rights of use are subject to alteration, amendment, or repeal by further acts of Congress. All the activities of the company are subject to regulation of the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia (37 Stat. 974). Because of interstate business, it is also brought under the Federal Power Act of 1920. The complete control rests with Congress.

The District officials are appealing to Congress for tax legislation and for a loan of money, even suggesting that there should be no interest. Congress should refuse financial help until the District comes before it with clean hands, offering an immediate practical solution of its utility tax and rate problems. When the District has collected proper taxes from its utilities, and has set its utility house in order, then Congress should consider its financial program. Members should inform themselves and should protect these voteless people. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Under a previous special order, the gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I waive my time and ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday next, after the reading of the Journal and disposition of matters on the Speaker's table, as well as disposition of legislative matters in order for the day, I may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday next, after the reading of the Journal, the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table, and at the conclusion of legislative matters in order for the day and after the gentleman from Massachusetts has addressed the House, I may be permitted to speak for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I have asked the indulgence of the House to make a short announcement and also some brief observations. The Democratic steering committee of the House had a rather extended meeting this week. The committee discussed informally several matters of legislation pending and proposed of vital importance to the welfare of the entire country. After considerable discussion, a motion was made and unanimously carried in the committee that it is the conviction of the Democratic steering committee of the House that it strongly favored the passage of a farm-relief program during the present session, and that it is unalterably opposed to the adjournment of this session of Congress until an adequate and practical farm bill is passed.

The steering committee did not endorse any particular farm bill pending or proposed, but it recognized the fact that prices of everything that the farmer must buy have been rising for the past several months, and that the prices of the things that the farmer has to sell have not kept pace with the things he is compelled to purchase. Members of our committee recognized, as do other Members of Congress, especially from farm sections, that if this Congress adjourns and Members return to their respective districts without passing any kind of farm legislation save a farm-tenant bill, that, I regret, was nothing more than a gesture for the first year at least, and then in case the prices of farm commodities—wheat, cotton, corn, and other farm commodities—should go down, the farmers are going to ask Members of this Congress what they did, or attempted to do, to stabilize the prices of farm commodities throughout the country.

Personally, I am not inclined to support the measure said to be prepared and sponsored by the Secretary of Agriculture, which places an unreasonable burden upon the major farm commodities. I cannot in good conscience support a bill, for example, that would penalize cotton $40 per bale, and I predict in case this Congress or any other Congress should pass such foolish and impracticable legislation that it would necessitate the Government filing almost innumerable lawsuits against the cotton farmers who, in my judgment, would refuse to cooperate with any such unreasonable program. That bill also proposes a penalty on wheat.

May I at this time call attention of Members that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES], the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, has introduced a bill that appears to be a comprehensive, reasonable, progressive, and practical farm-relief measure. It is now before the Committee on Agriculture, where I assume hearings will be held, and the committee will no doubt give very careful and intelligent consideration to the matter. It is to be hoped that the House Committee on Agriculture will be able to report out a practical, safe, and sane farm bill within the next few weeks and that Members of this House will stand by the action of the steering committee yesterday not to adjourn until action is taken upon a measure of such vital importance to the millions of worthy citizens of our Nation who till the soil.

Of course, several other farm bills have been introduced in this session that are worthy of every possible consideration. My colleague from Oklahoma [Mr. MASSINGALE] has presented what is known as the cost-of-production measure, which the Farmers Union of the Nation is loyally supporting. It occurs to me that a bill of so vital importance, that has the approval of a great farm organization, certainly should have received more consideration than this Congress has given to the cost-of-production farm measure.

Over at the other end of the Capitol a measure was recently introduced, known as the Pope-McGill farm bill, that is now pending before the Agriculture Committee of the United States Senate. It is to be hoped that that body will finally quit arguing over other matters and enact a farm bill before this session shall come to an end.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. It is not much more than 48 hours since a farm bill was introduced in this House. Personally I have voted for all farm legislation But I would like to hear what excuse there is for not offering farm legislation 6 or 7 months ago?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I may say to the distinguished gentleman from New York that I deeply regret that this House has not already passed a comprehensive and adequate farm bill. As stated before, several measures have been introduced. There has been considerable discussion on this and similar legislation in the committee. They have, in fact, been discussing farm legislation all spring.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. We are all for farm legislation, but we have been in session 7 months and for the first time this bill is introduced. I understand the hearings would take 3 or 4 weeks. I cannot feel that there is any excuse for this delay.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. May I say to the gentleman that I also feel there is no excuse for this House adjourning and going home without passing a farm bill. The farmer is going to ask those of us who represent rural districts why we adjourned without passing any legislation to protect agriculture.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that the action of the Democratic steering committee in unanimously and enthusiastically going on record favoring the enactment of farm legislation at this session of Congress and opposing any effort of adjournment without the consideration or passage of a farm-relief program is significant. Members of the steering committee represent every section of the United States. These members have discussed this all-absorbing question in their own zone meetings and I am advised that sentiment is overwhelmingly in favor of the action by the Democratic steering committee of the House.

It will be recalled that the steering committee took similar action on farm-tenant legislation at a time when it seemed hopeless. At that time the word had gone out over the country that there was not the remotest possibility of a farm-tenant bill being passed during the present session. Our committee, however, managed to get several of the farm leaders together in the Congress, including the distinguished gentleman from Texas, Mr. JONES, and the Senator from Alabama, Mr. BANKHEAD, at which time an agreement was reached that Congress would not adjourn without the passage of a farm-tenant bill. It is well known that the farm-tenant bill as finally passed was everything but satisfactory to me, but it does commit this Government to a policy and means that after the first year at least $50,000,000 will be spent by the Government in an effort to solve the farm-tenant problem.

If the action of the Democratic steering committee on yesterday also proves to be instrumental in aiding in the passage of a real farm-relief program during the present session, then I submit, Mr. Speaker and fellow Members, that it will prove to be the most important day's work of any committee during the Seventy-fifth Congress.

SENATE

FRIDAY, JULY 23, 1937

(Legislative day of Thursday, July 22, 1937)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Thursday, July 22, 1937, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States, submitting nominations, were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Megill, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 7896. An act granting pensions to certain soldiers of the Civil War;

H. R. 7897. An act granting increase of pensions to certain widows and former widows of soldiers and sailors of the Civil War;

H. R. 7898. An act granting pensions to certain widows and former widows of soldiers, sailors, and marines of the Civil War;

H. R. 7899. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain helpless and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of the Civil War; and

H. R. 7905. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain widows, former widows, and dependent children of soldiers of the Civil War.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6958) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes; that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate nos. 5, 8, 12, 24, 28, 30, 46, 54, 73, 87, 90, 94, 123, 129, 132, and 134 to the bill and concurred therein; that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate nos. 35, 37, 53, 93, 95, 97, 98, 124, 125, and 133, and concurred therein severally with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate; that the House insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate nos. 74, 89, and 121 to the bill, requested a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma, Mr. SCRUGHAM, Mr. O'NEAL of Kentucky, Mr. FITZPATRICK, Mr. LEAVY, Mr. RICH, and Mr. LAMBERTSON were appointed managers on the part of the House at the further conference.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 455. An act for the relief of J. R. Collie and Eleanor Y. Collie;

S. 1284. An act to change the name of the Chemical Warfare Service; and

S. 2086. An act to authorize the construction of a Federal reclamation project to furnish a water supply for the lands of the Arch Hurley Conservancy District in New Mexico.

LOW-COST HOUSING—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION AND LABOR

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I ask permission to report back favorably, with amendments, from the Committee on Education and Labor, the bill (S. 1685) to provide financial assistance to the States and political subdivisions thereof for the elimination of unsafe and insanitary housing conditions, for the provision of decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings for families of low income, and for the reduction of unemployment and the stimulation of business activity, to create a United States Housing Authority, and for other purposes, and I submit a tentative report (No. 933) thereon. This bill is commonly known as the low-cost housing bill. I ask leave that at a later time I may file an additional detailed report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The report will be received, and the bill will be placed on the calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. BULOW, from the Committee on Civil Service, to which was referred the bill (S. 2024) to amend the civil-service law to permit certain employees of the legislative branch of the Government to qualify for positions under the competitive classified service, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 934) thereon.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 4705) to authorize the transfer of a certain piece of land in Breckinridge County, Ky., to the Commonwealth of Kentucky, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 935) thereon.

Mr. O'MAHONEY, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the bill (S. 2682) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents to States under the provisions of section 8 of the act of June 28, 1934 (48 Stat. 1269), as amended by the act of June 26, 1936 (49 Stat. 1976), subject to prior leases issued under section 15 of the said act, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 936) thereon.

Mr. BILBO, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the bill (S. 2789) to provide for the establishment and maintenance of a regional research laboratory for the development of industrial uses for southern agricultural products; the first unit to be devoted to the development of industrial uses for cotton and cotton products; additional units to be provided for the study of other crops as additional funds are provided, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 937) thereon.

Mr. WHEELER, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 589) prohibiting the operation of motor vehicles in interstate commerce by unlicensed operators, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 938) thereon.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

H. R. 7614. A bill to amend the act entitled "An act for the establishment of marine schools, and for other purposes", approved March 4, 1911 (Rept. No. 939); and

H. R. 4676. A bill to provide for the reimbursement of certain civilian employees of the Navy for the value of personal effects destroyed in a fire at the naval air station, Hampton Roads, Va., May 15, 1936 (Rept. No. 940).

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on July 22, 1937, that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 1762. An act to add certain lands to the Rogue River National Forest in the State of Oregon;

S. 1806. An act to extend the boundaries of the Papago Indian Reservation in Arizona;

S. 1972. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to sell, loan, or give samples of supplies and equipment to prospective manufacturers;

S. 2295. An act to amend the act approved June 7, 1935 (Public, No. 116, 74th Cong., 49 Stat. 332), to provide for an additional number of cadets at the United States Military Academy, and for other purposes;

S. 2587. An act providing for the sale of the two dormitory properties belonging to the Chickasaw Nation or Tribe of Indians, in the vicinity of the Murray State School of Agriculture at Tishomingo, Okla.;

S. 2661. An act granting the consent of Congress to a compact entered into by the States of Maine and New Hampshire for the creation of the Maine-New Hampshire Interstate Bridge Authority; and

S. 2662. An act authorizing the Maine-New Hampshire Interstate Bridge Authority to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Piscataqua River at or near Portsmouth, State of New Hampshire.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SMITH:

A bill (S. 2825) to enable the Department of Agriculture to prevent the spread of pullorum and other diseases of poultry and to cooperate with official State agencies in the administration of the national poultry improvement plan, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

ESTABLISHMENT OF FAIR LABOR STANDARDS IN EMPLOYMENTS—AMENDMENTS

Mr. LODGE submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2475) to provide for the establishment of fair labor standards in employments in and affecting interstate commerce, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF RIVERS AND HARBORS—AMENDMENTS

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I am reported in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of yesterday as having submitted six amendments to the rivers and harbors bill, but the amendments are not set out. I now ask that they be set out in today's RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The amendments submitted yesterday and intended to be proposed by Mr. SHEPPARD to the bill (H. R. 7051) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, are as follows:

On page 16, line 1, strike out the following words: "First Stage."

On page 23, after line 1, insert new paragraph reading as follows:

"Goose Creek, Tex., deep-water channel and port."

On page 23, after line 1, insert new paragraph reading as follows:

"Arroyo Colorado, Tex., channel from a point at or near Mercedes, Tex., to its mouth, thence south in Laguna Madre to Port Isabel."

On page 23, after line 1, insert new paragraph reading as follows:

"Survey of channel for purposes of navigation from Jefferson, Tex., to Shreveport, La., by way of Jefferson-Shreveport Waterway, thence by way of Red River to mouth of Red River in the Mississippi River, including advisability of water-supply reservoirs in Cypress River and Black Cypress River above head of navigation."

On page 23, after line 2, insert the following:

"Colorado River, Tex., and its tributaries."

On page 23, between lines 8 and 9, insert the following:

"Aliens Creek, a tributary of the Brazos River in Austin County, Tex., in the interest of navigation and of flood control.

"Mill Creek, a tributary of the Brazos River in Austin County, Tex., in the interest of navigation and of flood control.

"Navidad River, Tex., in the interest of navigation and of flood control.

"Lavaca River, Tex., in the interest of navigation and of flood control."

Mr. SHEPPARD today submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 7051) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table, to be printed, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

On page 9, between lines 14 and 15, to insert the following:

"Texas City Channel, Tex.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 47; Seventy-fifth Congress."

On page 23, between lines 2 and 3, to insert:

"Colorado River, Tex., with a view to its improvement in the interest of navigation and flood control."

"BILLIONS OUT AND BILLIONS BACK"—ARTICLE BY JESSE H. JONES

[Mr. CONNALLY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article entitled "Billions Out and Billions Back", published in the Saturday Evening Post of June 12, 1937, which appears in the Appendix.]

THE SUGAR INDUSTRY—EDITORIAL FROM PHILADELPHIA RECORD

[Mr. O'MAHONEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial published in the Philadelphia Record of Friday, July 23, 1937, entitled "Pass the Sugar Bill", which appears in the Appendix.]

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6958) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes, which was read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, U. S.,
July 22, 1937.

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate nos. 5, 8, 12, 24, 28, 30, 46, 54, 73, 87, 90, 94, 123, 129, 132, and 134 to the bill (H. R. 6958) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes, and concur therein.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 35 to said bill and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert "$215,000."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 37 to said bill and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In line 14 of the matter proposed to be inserted by said Senate engrossed amendment strike out all after "prescribe" down to and including "expenses" in line 21 and insert: "Provided further, That not to exceed $50,000 may be advanced to the Navajo Tribe of Indians for the purchase, feeding, sale, or other disposition of sheep, goats, and other livestock belonging to the Navajo Indians."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 53 to said bill, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert "$2,169,275";

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 93 to said bill, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In line 6 of the matter proposed to be inserted by said Senate engrossed amendment, strike out "$10,535,000" and insert "$9,150,000";

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 95 to said bill, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert "$10,316,600";

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 97 to said bill, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In line 1 of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment, strike out "$300,000" and insert "$200,000";

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 98 to said bill, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert "$26,450,000";

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 124 to said bill, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert "$6,000,000";

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 125 to said bill, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In line 1 of the matter proposed to be inserted by said Senate engrossed amendment, strike out "$2,700,000" and insert "$1,500,000";

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 133 to said bill, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In line 5 of the matter proposed to be inserted by said Senate engrossed amendment, strike out "July 1" and insert "June 30"; and

That the House insists upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate nos. 74, 89, and 121 to said bill, and asks a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered that Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma, Mr. SCRUGHAM, Mr. O'NEAL of Kentucky, Mr. FITZPATRICK, Mr. LEAVY, Mr. RICH, and Mr. LAMBERTSON be the managers of the conference on the part of the House.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I move that the Senate agree to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate nos. 35, 37, 53, 97, 98, 124, 125, and 133. That is the first motion I wish to make.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, my attention was diverted. May I inquire what the motion is?

Mr. McKELLAR. I moved that the Senate agree to the amendments of the House to certain amendments of the Senate to the Interior Department appropriation bill.

I may explain as well now as at any other time that the conferees have already met and have entirely agreed on every difference between the two Houses; but, in order to make that agreement effective, it is necessary that the amendments of the House to the amendments which I have just enumerated be agreed to; and then it is also necessary that the Senate disagree to certain other amendments, to which I will call attention in a moment, and ask for a further conference. As a matter of fact, however, the conferees have already agreed and the action I am now taking is merely in furtherance of carrying out the agreement.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. KING. As I understand, there were two items in disagreement as to which some Senators have special interest. One was the so-called Gila River project. May I inquire of the Senator what disposition was made by the conferees in regard to that matter?

Mr. McKELLAR. That was agreed to. I may say that was an amendment in which the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] was greatly interested. The Senator offered an amendment, which was agreed to, appropriating $1,250,000 for the Gila River project. The House took a vote on that and disagreed to it, and that amendment, technically, is still in disagreement; but the conferees this morning agreed to an appropriation of $700,000. It is a unanimous report, and will, undoubtedly, be agreed to by the other House.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator what disposition was made of an item which was inserted in the bill, as I recall, by the Senate appropriating four or five hundred thousand dollars, to be used in exploration as to the feasibility of certain reclamation projects in the Colorado River Basin?

Mr. McKELLAR. I think the Senate amendment proposed an appropriation of $300,000. The House agreed to that item, but reduced the appropriation to $200,000, and the item is in the bill in that amount.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I regret that the Senate conferees acceded to the proposition to reduce the appropriation.

I may say in respect to the matter that the waters of the Colorado River are being appropriated more and more in Old Mexico. If the waters of the Colorado River are not appropriated in the United States by the upper-basin States and by the lower-basin States—New Mexico, California, and Arizona—a large surplus of water will pass on down into Old Mexico, and it will there be appropriated in time, so that when the upper States are ready to appropriate the water they may be confronted with a lawsuit in some international court, because under the law prevailing in the West the appropriation of water gives title.

It is very important that the Government in order to protect itself, to protect the Boulder Dam, to protect the appropriations of water in California for that matter, and to protect the upper-basin States, should determine at as early a date as possible what projects may be feasible in order that the waters of the Colorado River may be appropriated. I think there should have been an appropriation of $500,000,000 or $600,000,000 for the purpose of making a reconnaissance survey in the upper-basin States, so as to determine how and when and where we can use the waters which rise in those States, and prevent them going down to Old Mexico and there being appropriated, which would eventuate, perhaps, as I have said, in a lawsuit in some international court.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Not only that but also the waters which belong to the upper-basin States under the Boulder Dam or Colorado River compact. Neither New Mexico nor Utah nor Colorado is getting what it is entitled to under that compact. I think it is very important to have the survey made, so that we may be able to appropriate the necessary waters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I may say to the Senator from Utah and the Senator from New Mexico that the Senate conferees stood strongly for what the Senate wanted; but when it comes to a conference, there has to be some compromise. While the Senate conferees stood for the appropriation, nevertheless, it was reduced by action of the House members of the conference committee; and in order to reach an adjustment, we had to take a smaller amount. I have no doubt, if this amount is not sufficient, that Congress will appropriate a further sum in the future.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, let me conclude in a few words. Under the Colorado River compact, the upper basin is entitled to 7,500,000 acre-feet of the flow of the river. The residue is allocated to Nevada, Arizona, and California.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. This seems to be a matter which requires more than casual discussion. The question raised by the Senator from Utah seems to be, and I know it is, one which should have careful consideration. The pending matter is before the Senate by unanimous consent. I do not believe its consideration should be concluded at this time. I think we should proceed with the unfinished business, and therefore I am going to object to further consideration of anything except the unfinished business.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not do that. I think it will take but a moment to dispose of the motions in connection with the appropriation bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I make a suggestion that may obviate any further discussion? If the Senator in charge of the appropriation bill will consent to a disagreement with respect to the item to which I have referred and let it go back to conference, I should have no objection.

Mr. McKELLAR. The trouble about that is that the conferees have already agreed to the item and cannot now consent to a disagreement.

Mr. KING. I suppose the agreement of the conferees does not bind the Senate?

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no.

Mr. KING. I do not like to ask for a disagreement or rejection, but I earnestly urge my friends to disagree to the House amendment in question and let the conferees make a further exploration of the matter.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Tennessee if the conferees on the part of the Senate did any more yielding on the Natchez Trace item?

Mr. McKELLAR. None at all. The House voted on it and approved the position of the conferees with reference to an appropriation of $1,500,000.

I ask Senators to let the Senate take the action I have suggested because the Interior Department appropriation bill is a matter of great importance to all the people of the West. We had a hard time reaching an agreement, but finally reached one; and it seems to me, in the interest of good legislation, our action should be approved. The conferees on the part of the Senate did everything in the world they could. If I am in order, I should like to move to agree to certain of the amendments.

Mr. KING. As I understand, the bill will still be in conference because there are a number of items which have not been agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the motion of the Senator from Tennessee is agreed to, the item would be in disagreement, but the Senator from Tennessee stated frankly that the conferees had already agreed to it as a matter of form. It would still be in conference.

The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee to agree to the amendments of the House to certain Senate amendments enumerated by him.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. I now move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate numbered 93 and 95, and insist on the Senate amendments. These relate to reclamation projects.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Tennessee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. I now move that the Senate insist on its amendments numbered 74, 89, and 121, and agree to the further conference asked by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, Mr. ADAMS, Mr. NYE, and Mr. STEIWER conferees on the part of the Senate at the further conference.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA TAXES

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 7472) to provide additional revenue for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada desire unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that committee amendments be first considered?

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes; I do. I ask unanimous consent for that purpose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, in presenting this measure to the Senate, I wish to say that I think nothing is more important to approximately three-quarters of a million people who have no vote than a bill which presumes to tax those people. This is a bill imposing taxes on the people of the District of Columbia.

I desire to say in all frankness and fairness that I believe the bill should receive a more careful and continued study than has been possible by the Committee on the District of Columbia of the Senate. I am entirely in accord with the suggestion that the bill in its present form might well go to a joint committee composed of representatives from the House and representatives from the Senate, with the idea of working out a measure that will be equitable, reasonably just, and fair.

Controversial matters are involved in this bill. One of them is whether or not a sales tax shall be imposed on the people of the District of Columbia, that sales tax to have a limited sphere; and when I use that expression I mean that it is not to apply to food, cheaper clothing, fuel, or the other essentials of life so far as we can exempt the essentials of life of the class that has the greatest burden to bear. We have tried to eliminate such items from the burden of a sales tax.

But, Mr. President, a sales tax may be not at all agreeable even to many of us who are in the higher brackets, so to speak. I am not in favor of a sales tax, and I do not present this bill as an ideal bill. I present it only as a bill that may go to conference, where representatives of both bodies may take time to work it out. We must meet an emergency. How else can we do it? If the bill should go back to the committee of the Senate, we should have to spend perhaps weeks in working it out. Then we should have to attempt to pass it here, and a conference committee would go on with it. It seems to me the best process we can adopt now is to permit the bill to be passed and then go to conference, where it may be perfected.

I shall not now deal with another phase of the bill which perhaps is not involved.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator might state that the provision with respect to a sales tax was drafted or agreed to by the Commissioners. They themselves tendered it after full consideration; so that we are only speaking the voice of the District Commissioners, who are the representatives of the District of Columbia.

Mr. McCARRAN. The Senator correctly states the situation, but the statement does not relieve it. The Commissioners were trying to do the best they could. But, Mr. President, without any desire to criticize the Commissioners of the District because I believe they work conscientiously and carefully, and make all possible sacrifices in order to do the best they can—I think the Commissioners of the District have overlooked a most important statute dealing with the question of how much the real property of the District shall bear in the way of taxation to support the District.

I refer to section 681 of title 20 of the Code of the District of Columbia, which I beg leave to read. It is under the caption "Fixation of rates":

Assessment of taxes on real and personal property; rate of taxation: For the purpose of defraying such expenses of the District of Columbus as Congress may from time to time appropriate for, there hereby is levied for each and every fiscal year succeeding that ending June 30, 1927, a tax at such rate on the real and personal property subject to taxation in the District (the rate fixed on intangible personal property not to be made less than five-tenths of 1 percent but which may be increased by the Commissioners in their discretion to any rate not in excess of the rate imposed upon real estate) as will, when added to the other taxes and revenues of the District, produce money enough to enable the District to pay promptly and in full all sums directed by Congress to be paid by the District, and for which appropriation has been duly made; and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia hereby are empowered and directed to ascertain, determine, and fix annually such rate of taxation as will, when applied as aforesaid, produce the money needed to defray the share of the expenses of the District during the year for which the rate is fixed.

Mr. President, boiling that statute down to its essentials, it means that, whenever the necessity arises, the District Commissioners shall impose such a rate of taxation against real property and improvements within the District that the real property and the improvements attached thereto shall become the basis upon which the tax structure of the District shall rest.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Is it not a fact that unless Congress enacts an adequate tax bill for the District of Columbia the Commissioners will be faced with three possible alternatives? First, as the Senator has just indicated, they will have to raise the money by a real-estate tax; secondly, they will have to obtain authority to borrow money; or, thirdly, they will leave the District in a position where it cannot meet its bills.

Mr. McCARRAN. That is correct. The Senator has stated the situation entirely correctly. That is the reason why, notwithstanding the fact that the District Committee had the bill before it but a short time, it tried to work out as best it could, in the time that it had, the problem, which is far reaching. That is the reason why, notwithstanding the fact—I want to be frank with the Senate—that I do not adhere to the principle of taxation involved in the bill, I believe the only solution of this important problem is to pass the bill and send it to a conference committee, and let the conference committee of the two Houses work it out.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator ought to state that the committee of the House of Representatives, where all revenue bills must originate, had the measure before them for many weeks and had hearings on it and sent it to the Senate only a short time before it came to the Senate committee, so that our time was limited. It ought to be stated, furthermore, that already the District is running behind. The new fiscal year commenced the 1st of this month, and at present no revenue is coming in to operate the District of Columbia.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to take a moment to accentuate the fact, which the Senator has pointed out, that I believe it was the opinion of the committee that if we could have adopted an income tax along with the sales tax that would have been preferred; but, as the Senator has stated, from the information available we could not draft a suitable bill to do that. We had, then, to take the best course we could in order to get the bill to conference, as the Senator has pointed out, where the deficiencies may be cured.

Mr. McCARRAN. The Senator again has stated the matter correctly.

There are many phases of the bill that might be stated more at length and more in detail. It is not an ideal measure. It is not a measure that I should want to see become crystallized into law. I desire to be frank with the Senate. I believe, however, that the only avenue by which we can realize the necessary objectives is to send the bill to conference and let the conferees work it out after a study of the subject.

Mr. President, I move the adoption of the first amendment reported by the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). The first amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The first amendment of the Committee on the District of Columbia was, on page 1, line 5, after the word "Personal", in the heading to insert "Property", so as to make the heading read: "Title I—Collection of Personal Property Taxes."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Title I—Collection of Personal Taxes", on page 2, line 22, after the word "same", to strike out "when due" and insert "within 10 days after notice and demand"; on page 4, line 7, after the name "United States", to insert "to the credit of the District of Columbia"; and, in line 9, after the word "them", to insert "by the accounting officers of said District", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. If any person liable to pay any personal property tax to the District of Columbia neglects or refuses to pay the same within 10 days after notice and demand, it shall be lawful for the collector of taxes for the District of Columbia, or any person designated by him, to collect the said taxes, with interest and penalties thereon, by distraint and sale in the manner hereinafter provided, of the goods, chattels, or effects, including stocks, securities, bank accounts, evidences of debt, and credits of the person delinquent as aforesaid. In case of such neglect or refusal of the person delinquent as aforesaid the collector, or the person designated by him, may levy upon all such property and rights to such property belonging to such person for the payment of the sum due with interest and penalties thereon and the costs that may accrue and the collector of taxes shall immediately proceed to advertise the same by public notice to be posted in the office of said collector and by advertisement three times in one week in one or more daily newspapers in said District, stating the time when and the place where such property shall be sold, the last publication to be at least 6 days before the date of sale and if the said taxes, with interest and penalties thereon, and the costs and expenses which shall have accrued thereon, shall not be paid before the date fixed for such sale, which shall not be less than 10 days after said levy or taking of said property, the collector shall proceed to sell at public auction such property or interest therein or so much thereof as may be needed to pay such taxes, interest, penalties, and accrued costs and expenses of such distraint and sale. Said collector shall report in detail in writing every distraint and sale of personal property to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and his accounts in respect of every such distraint or sale shall forthwith be submitted to the auditor of the District of Columbia and shall be audited by him. Any surplus resulting from such sale over and above such taxes, interest, penalties, costs, and expenses shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the District of Columbia and upon being claimed by the owner or owners of the property aforesaid shall be paid to him or them by the accounting officers of said District upon the certificate of the collector of taxes stating in full the amount of such excess.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 14, after the word "tax", to strike out "when due" and insert "within 10 days after notice and demand", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 6. In case of the neglect or refusal of any person to pay a personal-property tax within 10 days after notice and demand, the collector of taxes, or the person designated by him, may file a certificate of such delinquent personal tax with the clerk of the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, which certificate from the date of its filing shall have the force and effect, as against the delinquent person named in such certificate, of the lien created by a judgment granted by said court, which lien shall remain in force and effect until the taxes set forth in said certificate, with interest and penalties thereon, shall be paid, and said lien may be enforced by a bill in equity filed in said court.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 13, to insert:

SEC. 8. The taxes to which this title relates shall be assessed within 4 years after such taxes became due, and no proceeding in court without assessment for the collection of such taxes shall be begun after the expiration of 5 years after such taxes became due. In the case of a false or fraudulent return with intent to evade tax, or of a failure to file a return within the time required by law, the tax may be assessed or a proceeding in court for the collection of such tax may be begun without assessment at any time. Where the assessment of any tax to which this title relates has been made within such statutory period of limitation, such tax may be collected by distraint or by a proceeding in court only if begun within 6 years after the assessment of the tax.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 2, after the word "are", to strike out "not limited as to time, irrespective of any statute of limitations, and are", so as to read:

SEC. 9. The remedies provided by this title for the collection of personal-property taxes are in addition to any other remedies available for the collection of said taxes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 5, to strike out:

TITLE II. TAXES ON INSURANCE COMPANIES

SECTION 1. On and after the 1st day of July 1937 every domestic, foreign, or alien company organized as a stock, mutual, reciprocal, Lloyd's, fraternal, or any other type of insurance company or association, before issuing contracts of insurance against loss of life or health, or by fire, marine, accident, casualty, fidelity and surety, title guaranty, or other hazard not contrary to public policy, shall obtain from the superintendent of insurance of the District of Columbia an annual license or certificate of authority, upon payment of a fee of $25 to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia. All licenses for insurance companies who may apply for permission to do business in the District of Columbia shall date from the first of the month in which application is made, and expire on the 30th day of April following, and payments shall be made in proportion.

SEC. 2. Any such company issuing contracts of insurance in the District of Columbia, without first having obtained license or certificate of authority from the superintendent of insurance so to do, shall upon conviction be subject to a fine of $100 per day for each day it shall engage in business without such license or certificate of authority.

SEC. 3. All prosecutions for violations of this title shall be in the police court of the District of Columbia by the corporation counsel of the District of Columbia or any of his assistants.

SEC. 4. Each of such companies shall file an annual statement in the form prescribed by the superintendent of insurance before March 1 of each year of its operations for the year ending December 31 immediately preceding. Such statement shall be verified by the oath of the president and secretary or in their absence by two other principal officers. The fee for filing said statement shall be $20 and payment therefor shall be made to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 5. If any such company shall fail to file the annual statement herein required, the superintendent of insurance may thereupon revoke its license or certificate of authority to transact business in the District of Columbia.

SEC. 6. All such companies shall also pay to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia a sum of money as taxes equal to 2 percent of its policy and membership fees and net premium receipts on all insurance contracts on risks in the District of Columbia, said taxes to be paid before the 1st day of March of each year on the amount of income for the year ending December 31 next preceding.

"Net premium receipts" means gross premiums received less the sum of the following:

1. Premiums returned on policies canceled or not taken;

2. Premiums paid for reinsurance where the same are paid to companies duly licensed to do business in the District; and

3. Dividends paid in cash or used by policyholders in payment of renewal premiums.

SEC. 7. If any such company shall fail to pay the tax herein required, it shall be liable to the District of Columbia for the amount thereof, and in addition thereof a penalty of 8 percent per month thereafter until paid.

SEC. 8. Nothing contained in this title shall apply to any relief association, not conducted for profit, composed solely of officers and enlisted men of the United States Army or Navy, or solely of employees of any other branch of the United States Government service or solely of employees of the District of Columbia government, or solely of employees of any individual, company, firm, or corporation or to any fraternal organization which issues contracts of insurance exclusively to its own members.

SEC. 9. All laws or parts of laws insofar as they relate to insurance companies, fraternal orders, Lloyds, reciprocals, associations, or other insurance organizations, and the conduct of such insurance business, and in conflict with any provisions of this title, are hereby repealed.

SEC. 10. Should any section or provision of this title be decided by the courts to be unconstitutional or invalid, the validity of the title as a whole or of any part thereof other than the part decided to be unconstitutional shall not be affected.

SEC. 11. This title shall become effective immediately upon passage and approval.

(i) All property and interest therein which shall pass from a decedent to the same beneficiary by one or more of the methods specified in this section, and all beneficial interests which shall accrue in the manner herein provided to such beneficiary on account of the death of such decedent, shall be united and treated as a single interest for the purpose of determining the tax hereunder.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, after line 4, to strike out:

SEC. 10. In all cases in which there shall be a grant, devise, descent, or bequest, to take effect in possession or come into actual enjoyment after the expiration of one or more life estates, the taxes thereon shall be payable by the person or persons so entitled thereto, and within 1 year after the date when the right of possession accrues to the person or persons so entitled, upon the actual value of the property or the interest of the beneficiary therein at the time when said beneficiary becomes entitled to the same in possession or enjoyment. Said tax shall be a lien for the period of 10 years on the property or interest therein from the date when said beneficiary becomes entitled to the same in possession or enjoyment.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 10. In the case of any grant, deed, devise, descent, or bequest of a life interest or term of years, the donee for life or years shall pay a tax only on the value of his interest, and the donee of the future interest shall pay his tax when his right of possession or enjoyment accrues. In the case of a devise, descent, bequest, or grant to take effect in possession or enjoyment after the expiration of one or more life estates or of a term of years, the tax shall be assessed on the value of the property or interest therein coming to the beneficiary at the time when he becomes entitled to the same in possession or enjoyment. Said tax shall be a lien for the period of 10 years on the property or interest therein from the date when said beneficiary becomes entitled to the same in possession or enjoyment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, after line 22, to strike out:

SEC. 13. In case of any failure to make or file a return within the time prescribed by this title or within such additional time as may be granted under regulations promulgated by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, the assessor shall add to the tax 25 percent of its amount. In case a false or fraudulent return is willfully made, the assessor shall add to the tax 50 percent of its amount. The amount so added to any tax shall be collected as a part of the tax and in the same manner as is herein provided for the collection of the tax: Provided, That the penalties provided in this section shall be in addition to the penalty provided in section 11 hereof.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 13. Any person required by this title to file a return who fails to file such return within the time prescribed by this title, or within such additional time as may be granted under regulations promulgated by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, shall become liable in his own person and estate to the District of Columbia in an amount equal to 25 percent of the tax found to be due. In case any person required by this title to file a return knowingly files a false or fraudulent return, he shall become liable in his own person and estate to the said District in an amount equal to 50 percent of the tax found to be due. Such amounts shall be collected in the same manner as is herein provided for the collection of the taxes levied under this title.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Article II—Estate taxes", on page 47, after line 17, to strike out:

SEC. 25. If any provision of this title, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, is held invalid, the remainder of the title, and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 48, to strike out:

TITLE VI—TAX ON PRIVILEGE OF DOING BUSINESS

SECTION 1. Where used in this title—

(a) The term "person" includes any individual, firm, copartnership, joint adventure, association, corporation (domestic or foreign), trust, estate, receiver, or any other group or combination acting as a unit, but shall not include railroad or railroad express companies which report to and are subject to regulation by the Interstate Commerce Commission under the provisions of the Interstate Commerce Act of 1887, as amended.

(b) The term "taxpayer" means any person liable for any tax hereunder.

(c) The term "Commissioners" means the Commissioners of the District of Columbia or their duly authorized representative or representatives.

(d) The term "business" shall include the carrying on or exercising for gain or economic benefit, either direct or indirect, any trade, business, profession, vocation, or commercial activity in or on privately owned property and in or on property owned by the United States Government in the District of Columbia not including, however, labor or services rendered by any individual for wage or a salary.

(e) The term "gross receipts" means the gross receipts received from any business in the District of Columbia, including cash, credits, and property of any kind or nature, without any deduction therefrom on account of the cost of the property sold, the cost of materials, labor, or services or other costs, interest, or discount paid, or any other expenses whatsoever: Provided, That the term "gross receipts" when used in connection with or in respect of financial transactions involving the loan, collection, or advance of money, discounting notes, bills, or other evidences of debt, shall be deemed to mean the gross interest, discount, commission, or other income earned by means of or resulting from said financial transactions: Provided further, That in connection with commission merchants, brokers, attorneys, or other agents, the term "gross receipts" shall be deemed to mean the gross amount of such commissions or gross fees received by them.

(f) The term "fiscal year" means a year beginning on the 1st day of July and ending on the 30th day of the June following.

SEC. 2. No person shall engage in or carry on any business in the District of Columbia after 60 days from the approval of this act without first having obtained a license so to do from the Commissioners, except no license shall be required of any person selling newspapers, magazines, or periodicals, whose sales are not made from a fixed location and which sales do not exceed the annual sum of $1,000. All licenses issued shall date from the 1st day of July in each year and expire on the 30th day of the June following, and no license may be transferred to any other person.

All licenses granted under this title must be conspicuously posted on the premises of the licensee and said license shall be accessible at all times for inspection by the police or other officers duly authorized to make such inspection. Licensees having no located place of business shall exhibit their licenses when requested to do so by any of the officers above named.

Licenses shall be good only for the location designated thereon, except in the case of licenses issued hereunder for businesses which in their nature are carried on at large and not at a fixed place of business, and no license shall be issued for more than one place of business without a payment of a separate fee for each.

The Commissioners may, after hearing, revoke any license issued hereunder for failure of the licensee to file a return or corrected return within the time required by this title or to pay any installment of tax when due.

SEC. 3. Each application for license shall be accompanied by a filing fee of $10: Provided, however, That no license fee shall be required of any person if he shall certify under oath that his gross receipts during the year immediately preceding his application, if he was engaged in business during all of such period of time, or his gross receipts as computed in the manner provided in section 5 of this title, if he was engaged in business for less than 1 year immediately preceding his application shall be not more than $1,000. Such application shall be upon a form prescribed and furnished by the Commissioners: Provided, however, That upon stores or mercantile establishments operated in the District of Columbia and belonging to a chain or group, having more than one store, an annual license fee shall be paid for each store operated in the District of Columbia, as follows:

(1) $10 for each retail store or business in excess of one but not in excess of five.

(2) $15 for each retail store or business in excess of 5 but not in excess of 10.

(3) $20 for each retail store or business in excess of 10 but not in excess of 15.

(4) $50 for each retail store or business in excess of 15 but not in excess of 25.

(5) $75 for each retail store or business in excess of 25 but not in excess of 30.

(6) $100 for each retail store or business in excess of 30 but not in excess of 50.

(7) $550 for each retail store or business in excess of 50.

It is further provided that this annual license fee shall be based on the number of stores or mercantile establishments included under the same general management, supervision, ownership, or control whether operated in the District of Columbia or not.

SEC. 4. Every person subject to the tax hereunder shall, within 30 days after the passage of this title and on or before the 1st day of July of each succeeding year, furnish to the assessor, on a form prescribed by the Commissioners, a statement under oath showing the gross receipts of the taxpayer during the preceding calendar year, which said return shall contain such other information as the Commissioners may deem necessary for the proper administration of this title.

The Commissioners for the purpose of ascertaining the correctness of any return filed hereunder, or for the purpose of making a return where none has been made, are authorized to examine any books, papers, records, or memoranda bearing upon the matters required to be included in the return and may summon any person to appear and produce books, records, papers, or memoranda bearing upon the matters required to be included in the return, and to give testimony or answer interrogatories under oath respecting the same, and the Commissioners shall have power to administer oaths to such person or persons. Such summons may be served by any member of the Metropolitan Police Department. If any person having been personally summoned shall neglect or refuse to obey the summons issued as herein provided, then, and in that event, the Commissioners may report that fact to the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, or one of the justices thereof, and said court or any justice thereof hereby is empowered to compel obedience to such summons to the same extent as witnesses may be compelled to obey the subpenas of that court.

The Commissioners are authorized and empowered to extend for cause shown the time for filing a return for a period not exceeding 30 days.

SEC. 5. For the privilege of engaging in business in the District of Columbia, each person so engaged shall pay to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1937–38 a tax equal to three-fifths of 1 percent of the gross receipts in excess of $1,000 derived from such business for the calendar year 1936 and shall, for each fiscal year thereafter, pay to the collector of taxes a similar tax measured by the gross receipts in excess of $1,000 derived from such business for the calendar year immediately preceding the beginning of such fiscal year: Provided, however, That the tax imposed by this section shall be payable only upon the gross commissions of any person engaged in the business of a broker or agent, and shall not be payable upon the funds of his principal, of which he is a mere conduit.

If a taxpayer was not engaged in business during the whole of any calendar year, he shall pay the tax imposed by this title measured by his gross receipts during the period of 1 year from the date when he became so engaged; and if such taxpayer shall not have been so engaged for an entire year prior to June 30 of any year, then the tax imposed shall be measured by his gross receipts for the period during which he was so engaged, multiplied by a fraction, the numerator of which shall be 365 and the denominator of which shall be the number of days during which he was so engaged.

If a person liable for the tax during any year or portion of a year for which the tax is computed acquires the assets or franchises of or merges or consolidates his business with the business of any other person or persons, such person liable for the tax shall report, as his gross receipts by which the tax is to be measured, the gross receipts for such year of such other person or persons together with his own gross receipts during such year.

SEC. 6. National banks and all other incorporated banks and trust companies, street railroad, gas, electric lighting and telephone companies, companies incorporated or otherwise, who guarantee the fidelity of any individual or individuals, such as bonding companies, companies who furnish abstracts of titles, savings banks, building and loan associations which pay taxes under existing laws of the District of Columbia upon gross receipts or gross earnings, and insurance companies which pay a tax upon premiums shall be exempt from the provisions of this title. Any tax levied by the District of Columbia upon tangible personal property owned by a taxpayer on July 1 of any year and paid by such taxpayer shall be credited upon the tax due under this title.

SEC. 7. The taxes imposed hereby shall be due 30 days after the approval of this act and thereafter shall be due July 1 of each fiscal year following the calendar year for which said taxes are computed, and may be paid without penalty to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia in equal semiannual installments in the months of September and March following. If either of said installments shall not be paid within the months when the same is due, said installments shall thereupon be in arrears and delinquent, and there shall be added and collected to said tax a penalty of 1 percent a month upon the amount thereof for the period of such delinquency, and said installments, with the penalties thereon, shall constitute a delinquent tax.

SEC. 8. If a return required by this title is not filed, or if a return when filed is incorrect or insufficient, and the maker fails to file a corrected or sufficient return within 20 days after the same is required by notice from the assessor, the assessor shall determine the amount of tax due from such information as he may be able to obtain and, if necessary, may estimate the tax on the basis of external indices such as number of employees of the person concerned, rentals paid by him, stock on hand, and other factors. The assessor shall give notice of such determination to the person liable for the tax. Such determination shall finally and irrevocably fix the tax, unless the person against whom it is assessed shall within 15 days after the giving of notice of such determination apply to the Board of Equalization and Review of the District for hearing and review, and the burden of proving the incorrectness of the assessor's determination shall be upon the taxpayer. After such hearing said Board shall give notice of its decision to the person liable for the tax. The decision of said Board may be reviewed by application to the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia if the said application be filed within 20 days after said notice: Provided, however, That the amount of any tax sought to be reviewed shall, with interest and penalties thereon, if any, be first deposited with the clerk of said court.

SEC. 9. Any person failing to file a return or corrected return within the time required by this title shall be subject to a penalty of 10 percent of the tax due plus 5 percent of such tax for each month of delay or fraction thereof.

SEC. 10. Any notice authorized or required under the provisions of this title may be given by mailing the same to the person for whom it is intended by registered mail addressed to such person at the address given in the return filed by him pursuant to the provisions of this title, or if no return has been filed then to his last-known address. The mailing of such notice shall be presumptive evidence of the receipt of the same by the person to whom addressed. Any period of time which must be determined under the provisions of this title by the giving of notice shall commence to run from the date of mailing such notice.

SEC. 11. The taxes levied hereunder and penalties may be collected by the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia in the manner provided by the law for the collection of taxes due the District of Columbia on personal property in force at the time of such collection.

SEC. 12. Any person engaged in or carrying on business without first having obtained a license so to do, or failing or refusing to file a sworn report as required herein, or to comply with any rule or regulation of the Commissioners for the administration and enforcement of the provisions of this title shall upon conviction thereof be fined not more than $1,000 for each and every failure, refusal, or violation, and each and every day that such failure, refusal, or violation continues shall constitute a separate and distinct offense; that all prosecutions under this title shall be brought in the police court of the District of Columbia on information by the corporation counsel or his assistant.

SEC. 13. The Commissioners are authorized to make such rules and regulations relating to the administration and enforcement of this title as may be necessary and proper.

SEC. 14. The Bureau of Internal Revenue of the Treasury Department of the United States is authorized and required to supply such information as may be requested by the Commissioners relative to any person subject to the taxes imposed under this title.

SEC. 15. Except in accordance with proper judicial order or as otherwise provided by law, it shall be unlawful for the Commissioners or any person having an administrative duty under this title to divulge or make known in any manner the receipts or any other information relating to the business of a taxpayer contained in any return required under this title. The persons charged with the custody of such returns shall not be required to produce any of them or evidence of anything contained in them in any action or proceeding in any court, except on behalf of the United States or the District of Columbia, or on behalf of any party to any action or proceeding under the provisions of this title, when the returns or facts shown thereby are directly involved in such action or proceeding, in either of which events the court may require the production of, and may admit in evidence, so much of such returns or of the facts shown thereby, as are pertinent to the action or proceeding and no more. Nothing herein shall be construed to prohibit the delivery to a taxpayer, or his duly authorized representative, of a certified copy of any return filed in connection with his tax, nor to prohibit the publication of statistics so classified as to prevent the identification of particular returns and the items thereof, or the inspection by the corporation counsel of the District of Columbia, or any of his assistants, of the return of any taxpayer who shall bring action to set aside or review the tax based thereon, or against whom an action or proceeding has been instituted for the collection of a tax or penalty. Returns shall be preserved for 3 years and thereafter until the Commissioners order them to be destroyed. Any violation of the provisions of this section shall be subject to the punishment provided by section 12 of this title.

SEC. 16. If any provision of this title, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, is held invalid, the remainder of this title, and the application of such provisions to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 17. This title shall not be deemed to repeal or in any way affect any existing act or regulation under which taxes are now levied.

SEC. 18. This title shall become effective immediately upon approval.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, after line 12, to strike out:

TITLE VII—RATE OF TAXATION ON TANGIBLE PROPERTY

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, the rate of taxation imposed for the District of Columbia on real and tangible personal property shall not be less than 1.7 percent on the assessed value of such property.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, after line 18, to insert:

TITLE V—ADDITIONAL TAX ON LAND

SECTION 1. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, there is hereby levied for the District of Columbia upon all real estate in the District of Columbia subject to taxation a tax of 1 percent upon the assessed value of the land, exclusive of any improvements thereon. Such tax shall be in addition to all other taxes upon real estate, and shall be levied and collected in the same manner as such other taxes.

SEC. 2. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized to extend for not to exceed 90 days the time for payment of all installments of real-estate taxes payable in September 1937.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 61, after line 6, to insert:

TITLE VI—LUXURIES SALES TAX

SEC. 1. When used in this title, unless the context otherwise requires:

(a) The term "District" means the District of Columbia.

(b) The term "Commissioners" means the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

(c) The term "collector" means the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia.

(d) The term "assessor" means the assessor of the District of Columbia or any of his assistants.

(e) The term "corporation counsel" means the corporation counsel of the District of Columbia or any of his assistants.

(f) The term "person" includes any individual, firm, copartnership, joint adventure, association, corporation, estate, trust, business trust, receiver, syndicate, personal representative of a decedent, or any other group or combination acting as a unit, and the plural as well as the singular number.

(g) The term "sale" means any transfer of title or possession, or both, exchange, barter, lease, or rental, conditional or otherwise, in any manner or by any means whatsoever, of tangible personal property, for a consideration, and includes the fabrication of tangible personal property for consumers who furnish either directly or indirectly the materials used in the fabrication work and the furnishing, preparing, or serving for a consideration of any tangible personal property consumed on the premises of the person furnishing, preparing, or serving such tangible personal property. A transaction whereby the possession of property is transferred but the seller retains the title as security for the payment of the price shall be deemed a sale.

(h) The terms "retail sale" or "sale at retail" mean a sale to a consumer or to any person for any purpose other than for resale in the form of tangible personal property, except that the terms "transfer of possession", "lease", and "rental" as used in subsection (g) of this section shall mean and include only such transactions as are in lieu of sales as defined in subsection (g) of this section without the words "lease or rental."

(i) The term "business" includes any activity engaged in by any person or caused to be engaged in by him with the object of gain, benefit, or advantage, either direct or indirect.

(j) The term "retailer" includes every person engaged in the business of making sales at retail, except a person selling newspapers, magazines, and periodicals, or any of them, whose sales are not made from a fixed location.

(k) The term "gross receipts" means the total amount of the sale or lease or rental price, as the case may be, of the retail sales of retailers, including any services that are a part of such sales, valued in money, whether received in money or otherwise, including all receipts, cash, credits, and property of any kind or nature, and also any amount for which credit is allowed by the seller to the purchaser, without any deduction therefrom on account of the cost of the property sold, the cost of the materials used, labor or service cost, interest paid, losses, or any other expense whatsoever: Provided, however, That cash discounts allowed and taken on sales shall not be included, and "gross receipts" shall not include the sale price of property returned by customers when the full sale price thereof is refunded either in cash or by credit, nor shall "gross receipts" include the price received for labor or services used in installing, applying, remodeling, or repairing the property sold.

(l) The term "tangible personal property" means personal property which may be seen, weighed, measured, felt, touched, or is in any other manner perceptible to the senses, and shall be taken to include also all sales of admissions to any place of amusement, including moving pictures, theaters, theatrical performances, shows, circuses, athletic events, boxing and wrestling contests, concerts, amusement parks, piers, swimming pools, bathing establishments, and fairs.

SEC. 2. For the privilege of selling tangible personal property at retail a tax is hereby imposed upon retailers at the rate of 2 percent of the gross receipts of any such retailer from sales of tangible personal property sold at retail in the District on and after the first day of the calendar month following the date of enactment of this act and prior to July 1, 1938. Such tax shall be paid at the time and in the manner hereinafter provided and shall be in addition to any and all other taxes.

SEC. 3. There are hereby specifically exempted from the provisions of this title and from the computation of the amount of tax levied, assessed, or payable under this title the following:

(a) The gross receipts from sales of tangible personal property which the District is prohibited from taxing under the Constitution or laws of the United States.

(b) The gross receipts from the sale of food products for human or animal consumption. "Food products" as used herein includes cereals and cereal products, milk and milk products, oleomargarine, meat and meat products, fish and fish products, sea food and sea food products, eggs and egg products, vegetables and vegetable products, fruit and fruit products, spices and salt, sugar and sugar products (other than candy and confectionery), coffee and coffee substitutes, tea, cocoa and cocoa products (other than candy and confectionery). "Food products" does not include spirituous, malt, or vinous liquors, soft drinks, sodas, or beverages such as are ordinarily dispensed at bars and soda fountains or in connection therewith, nor does the term "food products" include the furnishing, preparing, or serving for a consideration of any tangible personal property consumed on the premises of the person furnishing, preparing, or serving such tangible personal property.

(c) The gross receipts from the sale of all medicines.

(d) The gross receipts from the sale of wearing apparel for any part of the body.

(e) The gross receipts from the sale of motor vehicle fuels subject to taxation under the act entitled "An act to provide for a tax on motor-vehicle fuels sold within the District of Columbia, and for other purposes", approved April 23, 1924, as amended.

SEC. 4. It shall be unlawful for any retailer to advertise or hold out or state to the public or to any customer, directly or indirectly, that the tax or any part thereof imposed by this title will be assumed or absorbed by the retailer or that it will not be added to the selling price of the property sold, or if added that it or any part thereof will be refunded.

SEC. 5. The tax hereby imposed shall be collected by the retailer from the consumer insofar as the same can be done.

SEC. 6. The tax levied hereunder shall be a direct obligation of the retailer. On or before the 10th day of each month, beginning with the second calendar month after the date of enactment of this act, each retailer shall furnish to the assessor, on a form prescribed by the Commissioners, a statement under oath showing the gross receipts of the retailer during the preceding calendar month, the amount of the tax for the period covered by such return, and such information as the Commissioners may deem necessary for the proper administration of this title. The tax imposed by this title shall be paid to the collector of taxes on or before the 15th day of each month on the gross receipts of such retailer during the preceding calendar month. Returns shall be signed and verified by the retailer or his duly authorized agent. The Commissioners, if they deem it necessary to insure the collection of the tax imposed by this title, may provide by rules and regulations for the collection of said tax by the affixing and canceling of revenue stamps and may prescribe the form and method of such affixing and canceling.

SEC. 7. Any person failing to pay any tax, except taxes determined by the assessor under the provisions of sections 13 and 14 hereof, within the time required by this title shall pay in addition to the tax a penalty of 10 percent of the amount thereof, plus interest at the rate of one-half of 1 percent a month, or fraction thereof, from the date at which the tax becomes due and payable until the date of payment.

SEC. 8. The assessor for good cause may extend for not to exceed 30 days the time for making any return or payment required under the provisions of this title.

SEC. 9. After 30 days after the date of enactment of this act and until July 1, 1938, it shall be unlawful for any person to engage in or transact business as a retailer within this District, unless he is the holder of a permit issued to him as hereinafter prescribed, and which has not been revoked or suspended. Every person desiring to engage in or conduct business as a retailer within this District shall file with the assessor an application for a permit or permits. Every application for such a permit shall be made upon a form prescribed by the Commissioners and shall set forth the name under which the applicant transacts or intends to transact business, the location of his place or places of business, and such other information as the Commissioners may require. The application shall be signed by the owner if a natural person; in the case of an association or partnership, by a member or partner thereof; in the case of a corporation, by an executive officer thereof or some person specifically authorized by the corporation to sign the application, to which shall be attached the written evidence of his authority.

SEC. 10. At the time of making such application, the applicant shall pay to the collector of taxes a permit fee of $10 for each permit, and the applicant must have a permit for each place of business.

SEC. 11. Upon the payment of the permit fee or fees herein required, the assessor shall grant and issue to each applicant a permit for each place of business within the District. A permit shall not be assignable and shall be valid only for the person in whose name it is issued and for the transaction of business at the place designated therein. It shall at all times be conspicuously displayed at the place for which issued.

SEC. 12. Whenever the holder of a permit fails to comply with any of the provisions of this title or any rules or regulations made by the Commissioners hereunder, the assessor upon hearing after giving 10 days' notice in writing of the time and place of the hearing to show cause why his permit should not be revoked, may revoke or suspend the permit. In any case where a permit is revoked or suspended by the assessor the permittee may, within 5 days after the order of revocation or suspension is entered, appeal in writing to the Commissioners to review said action of the assessor, the hearings on said appeal to be submitted either orally or in writing at the discretion of the Commissioners and the Commissioners shall not be required to take evidence either orally, written, or documentary. Such appeal shall operate as a supersedeas unless the Commissioners shall otherwise order. The Commissioners may as a condition to setting aside the order of the assessor require such permittee to furnish a bond on a form to be prescribed by the Commissioners, executed by such permittee, with corporate surety approved by the Commissioners in a penal sum sufficient in the judgment of the Commissioners to insure the collection of the taxes and penalties imposed by this title, said bond to run to the District and be conditioned upon the payment by such person of any and all taxes and penalties due the District under this title.

SEC. 13. The burden of proving that a sale of tangible personal property was not a sale at retail shall be upon the person who made it, unless such person shall have taken from the purchaser a certificate signed by and bearing the name and address of the purchaser to the effect that the property was purchased for resale. For the purpose of the proper administration of this title and of preventing evasion of the tax hereby imposed it shall be presumed that all gross receipts are subject to the tax hereby imposed until the contrary is established. If the assessor is not satisfied with the return and payment of tax made by any retailer, he is hereby authorized and empowered to make an additional assessment of tax due from such retailer based upon the facts contained in the return or upon any information within his possession or that shall come into his possession. All additional assessments shall bear interest at the rate of one-half of 1 percent per month, or fraction thereof, from the fifth day after service of notice of such additional assessment. If any part of the deficiency for which the additional assessment is imposed is due to negligence or intentional disregard of the title or authorized rules and regulations, a penalty of 10 percent of the amount of the additional assessment shall be added, plus interest as above provided. If any part of the deficiency for which the additional assessment is imposed is due to fraud or an intent to evade the tax, a penalty of 25 percent of the amount of the additional assesment shall be added, plus interest as above provided. The assessor shall give to the retailer written notice of such additional assessment. Such notice may be served upon the retailer personally or by registered mail and addressed to the retailer at his address as the same appears in the records of the assessor.

SEC. 14. If a retailer neglects or refuses to make a return as required by this title, the assessor shall make an estimate based upon any information in his possession or that may come into his possession of the amount of the gross receipts of the delinquent for the month or months in respect of which he failed to make return and upon the basis of said estimated amount compute and assess the tax payable by the delinquent, adding to the sum thus arrived at a penalty equal to 10 percent thereof. If the neglect or refusal of a retailer to file a return as required by this title was due to fraud or an intent to evade the tax, there shall be added to the tax a penalty equal to 25 percent thereof in addition to the 10 percent penalty as above provided. All assessments and penalties levied under this section shall bear interest at the rate of one-half of 1 percent per month, or fraction thereof, from the fifth day after service of notice of such assessment. Promptly after assessing the tax, the assessor shall give to the delinquent written notice of such estimate, tax, and penalty, the notice to be served personally or by registered mail in the same manner as prescribed for service of notice by the provisions of the preceding section.

SEC. 15. If the assessor believes that the collection of any tax or assessment imposed by this title will be jeopardized by delay, he shall immediately levy a jeopardy assessment for the tax, interest, and penalty provided herein. The amount so assessed shall be immediately due and payable. Promptly after the levy of the assessment, the assessor shall give to the retailer written notice of such assessment, the notice to be served personally or by registered mail in the same manner as prescribed for service of notice by the provisions of section 13 hereof. If the amount of the tax, interest, and penalty specified in the jeopardy assessment is not paid within 10 days after the service upon the retailer of notice of the assessment the delinquency penalty and interest provided in section 7 hereof shall attach to the amount of the tax specified therein.

SEC. 16. (a) Any retailer against whom an assessment is made by the assessor under the provisions of section 13 or 14 hereof may petition for a reassessment thereof within 15 days after service upon the retailer of notice thereof. If a petition for reassessment is not filed within said 15-day period, the amount of the assessment becomes final at the expiration thereof.

(b) If a petition for reassessment is filed within said 15-day period, the assessor shall reconsider the assessment, and if the retailer has so requested in his petition, shall grant said retailer an oral hearing and shall give the retailer 10 days' notice of the time and place thereof. The assessor shall have power to continue the hearing from time to time as may be necessary.

(c) The action of the assessor upon a petition for reassessment shall become final 10 days after service upon the retailer of notice thereof unless the retailer files an appeal within such period to the Board of Personal Tax Appeals of the District.

(d) All the assessments made by the assessor under the provisions of section 13 or 14 hereof shall become due and payable at the time of service of notice thereof. If the amount of the tax, interest, and penalty, if any, specified in any assessment is not paid prior to the time the assessment becomes final, there shall be added thereto a penalty of 10 percent of the amount of the tax.

(e) Any notice required by this section shall be served personally or by registered mail in the same manner as prescribed for service of notice by the provisions of section 13 hereof.

SEC. 17. Except in the case of a fraudulent return, or neglect or refusal to make a return, every notice of additional tax proposed to be assessed hereunder shall be mailed to the retailer within 2 years after the return was filed.

SEC. 18. All taxes not paid by the retailer on the date when the same become due and payable shall bear interest at the rate of one-half of 1 percent per month, or fraction thereof, from and after such date until paid.

SEC. 19. (a) If the assessor determines that any tax, penalty, or interest has been paid more than once, or has been erroneously or illegally collected or computed, the same shall be credited on any taxes then due from the retailer under this title and the balance shall be refunded to the retailer, or his successors, administrators, executors, or assigns, but no such credit or refund shall be allowed after 3 years from the date of overpayment.

(b) Any refund or any portion thereof which is erroneously made and any credit or any portion thereof which is erroneously allowed, may be recovered in an action brought by the corporation counsel in a court of competent jurisdiction in the name of the District.

(c) In the event that a tax has been illegally levied against a retailer the assessor shall authorize the cancelation of the tax upon the records.

SEC. 20. The taxes levied hereunder and penalties may be collected by the collector of taxes of the District in the manner provided by the law for the collection of taxes due the District on personal property in force at the time of such collection.

SEC. 21. If any retailer liable for any tax, interest, or penalty levied hereunder shall sell out his business or stock of goods or shall quit the business, he shall make a final return and payment within 15 days after the date of selling or quitting business. His successor, successors, or assigns, if any, shall withhold sufficient of the purchase money to cover the amount of such taxes, interest, or penalties due and unpaid until such time as the former owner shall produce a receipt from the assessor showing that they have been paid, or a certificate stating that no taxes, interest, or penalties are due. If the purchaser of a business or stock of goods shall fail to withhold purchase money as above provided, he shall be personally liable for the payment of the taxes, interest, and penalties accrued and unpaid on account of the operation of the business by any former owner, owners, or assignors.

SEC. 22. The assessor or any person authorized in writing by him is hereby authorized to examine the books, papers, records, and equipment and to investigate the character of the business of any person selling tangible personal property in order to verify the accuracy of any return made, or if no return was made by such person, to ascertain and assess the tax imposed by this title.

SEC. 23. (a) Except in accordance with proper judicial order or as otherwise provided by law, it shall be unlawful for the assessor, or any person having an administrative duty under this title to divulge or to make known in any manner whatever, the business affairs, operations, or information obtained by an investigation of records and equipment of any retailer visited or examined in the discharge of official duty, or the amount or source of income, profits, losses, expenditures, or any particular thereof, set forth or disclosed in any return, or to permit any return or copy thereof or any book containing any abstract or particulars thereof to be seen or examined by any person other than an authorized representative of the District, of the United States, or of any State.

(b) Any violations of the provisions of this section shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding 1 year or both, at the discretion of the court. Prosecution under this section shall be on information filed by the corporation counsel in the Police Court in the name of the District.

SEC. 24. At any time within 3 years after the delinquency of any tax, the corporation counsel may bring an action in any court of competent jurisdiction in the name of the District to collect the amount delinquent, together with penalties. In such action a certificate by the assessor showing the delinquency shall be prima-facie evidence of the levy of the tax, of the delinquency and of compliance by the assessor with all the provisions of this title in relation to the computation and levy of the tax.

SEC. 25. Any retailer violating any of the provisions of this title or of any rules or regulations made by the Commissioners hereunder shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding $500 for each such offense. Prosecution under this section shall be on information filed by the corporation counsel in the Police Court in the name of the District.

SEC. 26. Any retailer aggrieved by any action of the assessor in levying a tax or in imposing a penalty hereunder may, within 10 days after notice of the action complained of, file an appeal to the Board of Personal Tax Appeals who shall grant said retailer an oral hearing if the same be requested and shall give the retailer 5 days' notice of the time and place thereof. The Board of Personal Tax Appeals shall review the action of the assessor and may affirm, reverse, or modify the action of the assessor and such action of the Board of Personal Tax Appeals shall become final 5 days after service upon the retailer of notice thereof given in accordance with section 13 of this title. No ground of complaint need be considered by the Board of Personal Tax Appeals not specifically set forth in the appeal.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I understand the Senate is now considering the sales-tax provision.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I desire to say a word about the sales tax. I think the District of Columbia is a very good illustration of what the United States will be in the course of a very short time if we continue our present system. We are now at the place in the history of the District where it is claimed that it is necessary to adopt a sales tax in order to keep out of a state of bankruptcy. We are approaching that point in the Nation. I am opposed to the sales tax, and I desire to state why.

I read from page 63 of the bill, subdivision (l):

The term "tangible personal property" means personal property which may be seen, weighed, measured, felt, touched, or is in any other manner perceptible to the senses, and shall be taken to include also all sales of admissions to any place of amusement, including moving pictures, theaters, theatrical performances, shows, circuses, athletic events, boxing and wrestling contests, concerts, amusement parks, piers, swimming pools, bathing establishments, and fairs.

All those are subject to the sales tax. Any tangible property which may be seen, weighed, measured, such as are described here in the way of exemptions, are subject to the sales tax.

I read further:

SEC. 2. For the privilege of selling tangible personal property at retail a tax is hereby imposed upon retailers at the rate of 2 percent of the gross receipts of any such retailer from sales of tangible personal property sold at retail in the District on and after the first day of the calendar month following the date of enactment of this act and prior to July 1, 1938. Such tax shall be paid at the time and in the manner hereinafter provided and shall be in addition to any and all other taxes.

SEC. 3. There are hereby specifically exempted from the provisions of this title and from the computation of the amount of tax levied, assessed, or payable under this title the following:

(a) The gross receipts from sales of tangible personal property which the District is prohibited from taxing under the Constitution or laws of the United States.

(b) The gross receipts from the sale of food products for human or animal consumption. "Food products" as used herein includes cereals and cereal products, milk and milk products, oleomargarine, meat and meat products, fish and fish products, sea food and sea food products, eggs and egg products, vegetables and vegetable products, fruit and fruit products, spices and salt, sugar and sugar products (other than candy and confectionery), coffee and coffee substitutes, tea, cocoa and cocoa products (other than candy and confectionery). "Food products" does not include spirituous, malt, or vinous liquors, soft drinks, sodas, or beverages such as are ordinarily dispensed at bars and soda fountains or in connection therewith, nor does the term "food products" include the furnishing, preparing, or serving for a consideration of any tangible personal property consumed on the premises of the person furnishing, preparing, or serving such tangible personal property.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. That language would exempt the purchase of food articles, but the man who went into a restaurant or a hotel would have to pay, would he not?

Mr. BORAH. I understand so.

Mr. CONNALLY. The servicing and the preparing would be exempt.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from Texas, if the Senator from Idaho will yield, that I have an amendment prepared, and now on the desk, which would exempt food served in restaurants and other eating places.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I read further from the bill:

(c) The gross receipts from the sale of all medicines.

(d) The gross receipts from the sale of wearing apparel for any part of the body.

(e) The gross receipts from the sale of motor-vehicle fuels subject to taxation under the act entitled "An act to provide for a tax on motor-vehicle fuels sold within the District of Columbia, and for other purposes", approved April 23, 1924, as amended.

SEC. 4. It shall be unlawful for any retailer to advertise or hold out or state to the public or to any customer, directly or indirectly, that the tax or any part thereof imposed by this title will be assumed or absorbed by the retailer or that it will not be added to the selling price of the property sold, or, if added, that it or any part thereof will be refunded.

SEC. 5. The tax hereby imposed shall be collected by the retailer from the consumer insofar as the same can be done.

May I ask those in charge of the bill what is the exact meaning and the supposed effect of section 4 providing that—

It shall be unlawful for any retailer to advertise or hold out or state to the public or to any customer, directly or indirectly, that the tax or any part thereof imposed by this title will be assumed or absorbed by the retailer.

What will be the effect of that provision?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, experience has demonstrated, in the places where sales taxes are in effect, that frequently the vendor, when the tax was imposed, would say to the vendee, "Do not blame me, just blame the Government for this", or he would make some representation that was unfair and unjust. It was to anticipate such things, to guard against evils which it has been disclosed exist in other places, that this provision was inserted.

Mr. BORAH. It was not hoped that it would prevent the passing on of the tax?

Mr. KING. Oh, no.

Mr. BORAH. It is rather remarkable how rapidly the sales-tax idea is spreading in this country. I will call attention to some figures. In a press dispatch from Berkeley, Calif., dated June 29, it is stated:

The sales tax is becoming an ever-increasing source of revenue in American taxation, according to a survey completed by the bureau of public administration of the University of California.

The public, the survey found, seems to prefer the sales tax to the income-tax system.

In 1930 it has been found there were only two States collecting the sales tax, but in 1935 this number had increased to 25.

General sales taxes in the United States produced $284,358,000 in 1935 as against only $1,122,000 in 1930, the survey established.

Five States alone, namely, California, Illinois, Michigan, New York, and Ohio, collected three-fourths of the sales-tax revenues in 1934 and two-thirds in 1935.

The university study showed that Indiana offers an excellent example of the superiority of the sales tax over the income tax. In the fiscal year ending June 1935, according to the survey, the gross income tax in Indiana was the third largest individual source of State revenue, but nevertheless furnished only 22 percent of the total State revenue receipts for that year.

It is also found, Mr. President, that in proportion to the spread of the sales tax there is a reduction in the income tax. That is true, apparently, the country over. The sales tax is being substituted for income tax.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. I think the Senator and myself are in entire accord, that as the sales tax increases the income tax is certain to decrease.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; and that is one of the moving forces behind the sales tax on the part of those who are interested in curtailing the income tax. That is where the great source of propaganda for the sales tax originates.

In these days we are constantly berating poor old Andrew Mellon; yet we are following, the country over, shamefacedly, but nevertheless doing it, in the very footsteps of Mr. Mellon with reference to the question of taxation. Under his dynasty it was proposed in the very beginning to reduce the upper brackets of the income tax, and all the taxes were reduced which related to those who were more able to pay taxes; and finally there came the time when he recommended a national sales tax.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Can the Senator give us the figures as to what this particular sales tax will produce?

Mr. BORAH. I have not been furnished any figures with reference to that subject, and I have not seen any such figures; but I am opposed to a sales tax on principle.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope we can have the figures. However, whatever the sales tax may produce, I am utterly opposed to it, for the reason that if the sales tax produces a small amount now, next year we shall be asked to increase the tax in one way or another, either through an increase in the rate of the tax or by applying it to other articles to which it does not apply in this bill. I think a sales tax is the poorest way in the world in which to tax people, and I do not believe the people of Washington ought to be taxed in that way.

Mr. BORAH. Neither do I.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. The sales tax, with the exemptions which are provided in the bill, would produce in the District of Columbia approximately $2,500,000.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I was about to say that the usual process by which a sales tax is established is to exempt in the first instance food and clothing, and so forth, and generally it also begins as a very small tax. Take the case of California as an illustration. In that State they started with a 2-percent sales tax. I see that the Governor has now recommended a 3-percent sales tax. They started with exemptions covering foodstuffs and clothing, and now they are including those items in the tax. Those are the gradual processes by which the sales tax is made to reach the entire consuming public.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. In order that the Senate may get the background of this proposed legislation, I wish to say that the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia voted unanimously for an income tax in place of a sales tax, and we instructed the experts to draw such an amendment for us. However, because of the peculiar condition that exists here of people working in the District and living outside the District, it was not possible to perfect that provision; and it was only when the income-tax provision could not be perfected that the sales tax was turned to, with food, clothing, and medical supplies exempted. I think the Senate ought to know that we approached the sales tax reluctantly.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator will agree with me, I think, that if we establish the sales tax this year at 2 percent, exempting food, clothing, and so forth, next year, or the year following that we will not exempt those items, and we will likely raise the tax from 2 percent to 3 percent.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, there is a great deal of force in what the Senator from Idaho has just said. However, the committee's thought was as I have stated; and the committee stipulated that this provision should apply during the coming year only, and provided for the appointment of a commission to revise the tax laws of the District of Columbia, so that when the new bill shall come before the committee, as it will have to come—because the act now proposed will expire automatically—we can drop the present provision in favor of a more studied and better thought-out system of taxation. It is only a stopgap.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. CAPPER. Many of us do not agree with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] that an income tax cannot be devised which will be suitable to the District of Columbia. I, myself, believe that in the District of Columbia we ought to have an income tax instead of a sales tax.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. KING. Supplementing what was stated by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER], I will say that the committee did have before it the question of an income tax. We took the precaution—probably that is not the right term—of inviting the representatives of the House District Committee to come before us and explain their views, and explain why an income tax was not provided for in the bill in the House. They made it very clear that it was absolutely impossible to obtain the passage of an income-tax bill in the House. As a matter of fact, they said they could get the bill on the floor for the purpose of considering it only by agreeing with the Committee on Rules that the question of an income tax should not be raised.

I may say, however, that the Commissioners, in presenting their views to the House Committee, had included this sales-tax provision. Bear in mind, as stated by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], that the provision is made for just 1 year. The tax is not to be a continuing tax. Provision is made for a study of the subject with a view to recommending a system of taxation which will be entirely just.

I will say frankly that I voted against the sales-tax provision in the committee, and many other Members of the committee voted against it. However, under all the circumstances, in view of the conditions in the District of Columbia, the District being without any money, and the fiscal year having begun on the first day of this month, it seems to me that the tax may be applied. Unless that is done, I think we shall soon have thousands of men and women here without funds, and the District government will not be able properly to function. So this is an emergency measure.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I understand; and, as usual, the emergency measure is put upon the shoulders of the man who cannot be heard. As usual, the burden is put upon the man who is least able to pay under the plea of an emergency measure. Let me say to the Senate that there is another emergency in this country, and that is that we are taxing the man down at the bottom until we are destroying the purchasing power of the great masses of the American people. That is the emergency which we are producing by our system of taxation. We are impoverishing the great body of the people, and that undermines the very foundation upon which all free institutions rest—the foundation of economic health and security.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. If it is an emergency matter, why cannot the income tax be made temporary for 1 year, just as it is said that the proposed sales tax is to be applicable only for a year? Why can we not have an income tax for 1 year, and then proceed with a studied form of taxation? I am willing to do that, but I am not willing to let the tax burden fall on the poorest class of people as against putting it on those who are better able to pay.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. As I stated before, I believe the committee was unanimously in favor of an income-tax bill. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia themselves favored it when appearing before our committee. We had experts appear before us who attempted to draft an income-tax bill. Because of the fact that there are so many people working in the District of Columbia who live in Virginia and in Maryland, it is very difficult to fix the locus of the tax.

Mr. BORAH. I understand also that another thing entered into consideration, and that was that some of the salaried officials were afraid they might have their salaries taxed.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I do not know that we heard any criticism of that kind; but I wish to say that the income tax was abandoned with reluctance by our committee when we were confronted with the difficulty of preparing in a few days an adequate income-tax bill, and it was only because of our inability to do that and because of the imminent need that this proposition was substituted.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. I wish to say that I voted against the incorporation of the sales tax in this bill. As to the emergency, I was of the opinion that since we were confronted with an emergency so far as the District of Columbia is concerned, it was best to adopt, with a few clarifying amendments if necessary, the bill as prepared by the House, and not undertake to impose an almost entirely different system of taxation.

As the Senator from Idaho well knows, the trouble about a sales tax, which contains exemptions, as this one does, is that it is very difficult of enforcement. The door is open to fraud. It costs a great deal more to make the collections, and the revenues derived from the tax are not nearly what was contemplated by the actual provisions of the measure. Besides that, it is a tax which rests upon the masses of the people, no matter what exemptions may be provided.

Mr. BORAH. Precisely. A sales tax is paid by those least able to pay.

Mr. OVERTON. I think the record shows that notwithstanding the exemptions, 40 percent of what the poor man buys will be subject to this sales tax.

Mr. BORAH. Is it not also true that a plan for an income tax was presented to the House?

Mr. OVERTON. That is very true.

Mr. BORAH. Now we are facing the question whether we will inconvenience ourselves a little in regard to adopting the income tax or whether we will just throw the matter over onto the shoulders of persons who cannot resist.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, in my opinion it would have been just as easy to draft an income tax as it was to draft this sales-tax provision.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. In reply to what has been observed by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], I wish to say that the question of income tax was entirely disposed of by the House, and when the committee had this problem presented to it the committee was advised that the House would not consider an income tax.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, have we surrendered, or are we a legislative body?

Mr. McCARRAN. No; we have not surrendered, but we are confronted with a situation where there must be a meeting of minds so that we can get through a tax bill which will provide for the necessary expenditures of the District. I wish to say, further, that there is not a member of the committee who is more opposed to a sales tax than am I. I have been opposed to it in the past, and I am now opposed to it. I was one of those who tried to bring the sales tax down to a point where it might not, at least by presumption, touch the little man. I realize that what the Senator from Idaho is saying is absolutely true, and that we are headed in a direction that is destructive to the lowly and the humble in this country. I am opposed to it from beginning to end. But can we work it out on some other basis? If Senators will suggest another plan whereby the emergency may be met, the members of the committee will be entirely willing to go along with it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Idaho to the fact that when this bill was originally introduced by Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland, it contained title IX, income tax, which ran from page 52 to page 79 in the original bill. It, therefore, cannot be contended that language has not been worked out to embody the principle of the income tax for the District of Columbia.

Mr. McCARRAN. That is correct.

Mr. McCARRAN, Mr. TYDINGS, and Mr. HUGHES addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. BORAH. I will begin with the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I wish to make merely one observation. My information is—and I think it is correct—that the income-tax proposal was entirely ruled out in the other body. They would not even permit it to come on the floor of the House, and it was never considered on the floor.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not contend that we cannot write an income tax law for the District of Columbia, and I do not wish my remarks to be so construed. What I was contending was that a great many of the people who make their money in the District of Columbia live in Maryland or Virginia; they reside in the suburbs; and we wanted to get a law which would include the people who live outside the District, yet who make their incomes within the District. As I understand, under the bill introduced by Mr. KENNEDY that condition would not prevail. Yet we have the spectacle of people making huge incomes from large businesses in the District of Columbia, who do not live in the District. So in the case of merchants, one doing business next door to the other, one paying a tax and the other going scot free. We tried to cure that defect, but we could not, in the short time we had, devise a plan that would be satisfactory and sound, and rather than tax merely some people and allowing others to escape we abandoned the income-tax proposal.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho yield to me?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I should like at this point to state that it seems to me a perfectly untenable position for members of a committee of the United States Senate to come here and say that this body has no responsibility, that it has got to abdicate its legislative function simply because a committee of the House of Representatives or even the House of Representatives itself has declined to consider a proposition.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield further to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. In reply to the observation of the able Senator from Wisconsin, I wish to say that the committee of the Senate of the United States having to do with District of Columbia affairs have not abdicated and have not abandoned their functions. But when a bill is held over in the other House for weeks and weeks and then sent over to the Senate, within only a few days—or, perhaps to be fair, within a week or so—of the time in which it must become effective, and we are told, "You have got to put this through now, otherwise the District of Columbia will have to borrow money", so far as the members of the District Committee are concerned, they have got to act very promptly and with the best means available.

I will speak only for myself, but I am not in favor of this phase of the bill; I never have been, and I will not be in favor of it in conference, if I should be there; but I have got to work out as best I can a tax bill that will have some degree of equity in it.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. MALONEY. I quite agree with the viewpoint of the Senator from Idaho, and I cannot bring myself to vote for a bill that taxes practically everything that those in humble circumstances have to buy. I wonder if the Senator from Idaho is in accord with the opinion of the Senator from Maryland that we cannot reach the incomes in the District of Columbia just because some people doing business there happen to reside in Maryland or Virginia.

Mr. BORAH. I have not investigated the legal proposition sufficiently close to pass on it hurriedly, but it seems to me the situation can be reached.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE and Mr. TYDINGS addressed the Chair.

Mr. BORAH. I yield first to the Senator from Wisconsin, and then I will yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. My information is that the original income-tax proposal was based upon the principle that the tax would be levied against every person deriving his income in the District of Columbia, but if any such person paid an income tax in his State or in the locality where he resided, it would be a deductible item as against the income tax levied against him in the District of Columbia.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is true.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. And such a tax was estimated to yield $5,000,000, instead of the $2,000,000 which the nefarious sales-tax provision is estimated to yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I will offer a suggestion to which I have not given much thought, but which may give those who entertain the viewpoint held by some Senators on this question a chance. Why not vote the income-tax provision into this bill without taking the sales-tax provision out of the bill, and take both to conference?

Let me say just a word as to the reason why I make that suggestion. The gross-receipts tax which the Senate voted out was, in my judgment, worse than the sales tax, because it applied to everything. It even taxed a man who lost money and did not make a penny. But if we could take all four of these propositions to conference, it might be possible there to perfect the income tax, in which event these other taxes could be eliminated. I make that suggestion in the best of faith.

Mr. BORAH. I do not feel I should want to put that burden on the conferees.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator why not substitute the income tax for the sales tax now provided for in the bill, and then let the bill go to conference in that form?

Mr. BORAH. That sounds better.

Mr. TYDINGS. The only difficulty with that is that the sales tax was not in the bill as it came from the House and the gross receipts tax was in the bill. If we should accept the income tax obviously the Senate conferees would try to have it adopted, but if we should leave the sales tax out and the income tax could not be perfected, then it would be necessary to fall back on the gross-receipts tax, which is even more vicious than the sales tax.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I am sorry to have to ask the Senator from Idaho to yield further. I am not going to interrupt him further.

Mr. BORAH. I have no objection to yielding to the Senator.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The proposition is a simple one: If we substitute section 9 of the original bill for the sales tax section, then the conferees will have an opportunity to work out any imperfections that may be in that section of the bill. I may say that the income tax proposal was not presented without consideration. It was drafted carefully, according to my information; and I would rather, so far as I am concerned, take a chance on the conferees being able to work out any inequalities or deficiencies that there may be in this draft of the income-tax provision than to see them come back here with a sales tax, which is going to fall heaviest upon those least able to pay within the District of Columbia, which has no redress and has no representation in the Congress.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I would have no objection to the sales tax going out in line with the suggestion of the Senator from Wisconsin, but this is what would happen: My recollection is that it is necessary to provide both the gross-receipts tax and the income tax in order to raise the seven or seven and a half million dollars of revenue necessary for the District. If the sales tax should go out completely, and the income tax should take its place, the sales tax would not be in conference, and as between the sales tax and the gross-receipts tax I would prefer, as the gross-receipts tax is now written, to vote for a sales tax. I do not wish to take the time now to say why; but I think the whole committee, even those who are opposed to the sales tax, would take the same position. So unless we have all these proposals in conference the conferees may be forced, because of there being no sales-tax provision in conference, to come back to the gross-receipts tax, which would impose a severe burden on every little-business man in the city of Washington.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho yield to me once more?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Has the Senator from Maryland considered the possibility of "jacking up" the rates in the upper brackets of the income tax to take up any deficiency that may be involved?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, if I may answer that question, of course, we can "jack up" the rates, and I have no objection to "jacking up" the rates fairly; but I am trying to explain to the Senator that I am not in opposition to the income tax, but I am offering a plan to get it before the conferees. I do not think, however, we ought to be caught in a position where, if the conferees cannot get it or if it would not raise the required amount, we would have to come back to the gross-receipts tax for a part of the necessary revenue. That is all.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not think that the sales tax would be in very safe hands with the conferees on this bill. I think, in the first place, they would meet the conferees from the other side, who, in all probability, would not be so interested in defeating the sales tax as they would be in defeating another tax. I am not permitted to criticize the other body, but I understand that certain reasons were assigned for not adopting an income tax; I think those reasons would still prevail; and that the sales tax would finally be accepted just as an emergency tax.

Mr. TYDINGS. That may be possible, but may I point out to the Senator that while the committee was in session a delegation of the House Members, as I recall, waited on us and served notice that they would not take either the income tax or the sales tax; that the only tax they would take was the gross-receipts tax. I think we received word that they would be more strongly against the sales tax than they would be against an income tax.

Mr. BORAH. Of course, I do not know what took place in the communications referred to by the Senator.

Mr. President, I called attention a few moments ago to the widespread growth of the sales tax and the constant decrease, accordingly, in the use of the income tax. That is the issue now before us. Here in the Capital of the Nation we will be establishing a precedent for the entire country, in that the Senate of the United States, rather than take the trouble of working out an income tax, prefers to levy a sales tax. Thus an example is set for the entire country. In other words, the Capital of the Nation has gone on record in favor of a sales tax instead of an income tax. We are not simply discussing and considering here a sales tax for 1 year. This is a part of a great program of eliminating the income tax and putting the great tax burden of the Nation upon the common people of the country. It ought not to be encouraged in the Capital of the Nation. If it requires more time, then let us take more time. The masses of the people of this city are not able to pay a sales tax. If Senators will go about over the city they will find a condition which is almost a disgrace to the Nation, and yet we are proposing to impose upon the people of the District a sales tax rather than an income tax.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. HUGHES. I am a member of the District Committee and was present at the hearings. It is not my understanding that we could not draft an income-tax provision. In fact, I understood, as has been suggested here, that a provision probably covering the subject very well was presented to the House. That is not why it was left out, as I understand, and the sales tax substituted. It was left out because of Members of the House coming to the Senate committee and informing the Senate committee that such a provision would be thrown out the window virtually as fast as it came there; that they would not touch it; that they would not have anything to do with it.

I am opposed to a sales tax just as much as is the Senator from Idaho. I have never consented to it. I do not like it at all. I do not like it in this bill. I wish it were out of the bill. But we were confronted in the District Committee by the District Commissioners and others who insisted that we must do something and do it speedily.

As has been suggested by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] the gross-receipts tax is what came to us from the House. The gross-receipts tax, to my mind, would be a great injustice to the people of the District and ought not to have been placed in the bill at all. But we either had to accept that to be in accord with the House or put something else in the bill.

The suggestion was made that, if it were necessary to obtain this additional revenue for the District of Columbia, then there was one other alternative, and only one, and that was to increase the real-estate tax, putting heavier and heavier taxes on real estate. That is what the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] and I talked about, and I think we agreed that that was a good deal better than the sales tax. I am bitterly opposed to a sales tax.

Mr. BORAH. I am delighted to find the entire committee is opposed to the sales tax, and I wonder how it got in the bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator from Idaho again?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. I think I may be guilty of repeating, but I am opposed to the pending bill. I had hoped we might be able to work out a bill under circumstances which would give us sufficient time to work it out properly. If we go into the realm of the gross-receipts tax as sent to us from the House, we will go into the question of more unjust and inequitable taxation than is embraced in the pending bill. That is the fear I have as a member of the committee.

Having reported the bill and being in charge of it on the floor of the Senate, I may say that if an amendment is offered embracing an income tax, I for one shall accept such an amendment and hope to work it out in conference, and to fight for it in the hope of finally obtaining a measure that will be more just and equitable than that which is embraced in the bill now before us.

From the very beginning I have said that this is not an equitable tax bill; that it does not place its burdens equitably upon the people of the District; that there is no tax bill that should be more carefully studied than a tax bill for the people of the District of Columbia because they have no voice, and we must therefore give such a bill more than ordinary careful consideration.

Mr. BORAH. We can adopt an income-tax amendment before we get through with the bill here. As I understand, if such an amendment is offered, the committee is willing to accept it instead of a sales tax. If that is true, the debate need not continue very long.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE and Mr. KING addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. BORAH. I yield first to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, it is my intention to offer an amendment, which will contain the original income-tax provision as offered in the House by Representative KENNEDY, as a substitute for title IV, beginning on page 61 of the bill.

Mr. BORAH. I yield now to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, there was no disposition whatever upon the part of the District Committee not to enact an income-tax law. Indeed, I think all of us favored it. We were quite satisfied—at least I was—after examining the bill, which had been prepared by the District Commissioners under the auspices of Mr. Seal, corporation counsel, to accept that bill.

The committee considered the sales tax, and I think most of the members were opposed to it. I know I was, and therefore I voted against it in the committee. The reason why I myself did not report the bill was that I was opposed to that provision of the bill. I would very much prefer an income tax. I have always been opposed to a sales tax. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] knows I have always opposed the sales tax in the Finance Committee, notwithstanding the pressure which had been brought to bear to enact a Federal sales tax. I am opposed to it now. But——

Mr. BORAH. Let us cut out the "but." [Laughter.]

Mr. KING. Wait until I get through. But I say to the Senator that we were—I will not say coerced, but we did pay some attention to the adamant position of the Members of the House who said they would be put in such an embarrassing position that it would be impossible to get an income-tax provision through, and so we reluctantly accepted their suggestion.

Mr. BORAH. It may have put us where we will accept even a sales tax or an income tax.

Mr. KING. But between the two I favor the income tax and always have. I have always been against a sales tax.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. HUGHES. May I suggest that I think a good many of us fell for one suggestion, and that was that the tax was to be imposed for a limited time; that it was an experiment, and would be rectified before the year was up?

Mr. BORAH. The Senator knows that has been the history of the sales tax in this country. It is put on for a year, food and raiment excluded, at a small rate. The next year the income-tax payers ask that it be continued, and it is continued for another year at an increased rate and covering all things that the average person has to buy. That is ordinarily the history of the sales tax.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. In keeping with what I said a few moments ago as to accepting an amendment, I urge that the amendment be offered without eliminating anything in the bill, thereby giving us a chance; otherwise we are going to conference to be confronted with another tax provision which is more obnoxious and more inequitable than either of the ones with which we are now dealing.

Mr. BORAH. If the amendment to be offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] should be adopted, the Senate conferees would go to conference confronted with the tax which they have now presented; but there would also be an income tax before the conferees for consideration. It does not seem to me that we who are opposed to the sales tax ought to be asked to leave it in the bill, because I would vote against the passage of the bill rather than have the sales tax incorporated. Therefore, I hope the Senator will be satisfied to have the amendment adopted as a substitute for the sales tax.

Mr. McCARRAN. If we can work it out, I am entirely content to do that, because I am opposed to the sales tax.

Mr. BORAH. I yield now to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] to enable him to offer his amendment.

Mr. BORAH subsequently said: Mr. President, in connection with the remarks which I made previously on this bill, I desire to have printed in the RECORD as part of my remarks a statement made by the distinguished Boston merchant, Mr. Filene, on the question of income taxes and sales taxes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

STATEMENT OF EDWARD A. FILENE BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON TAXATION, MASSACHUSETTS LEGISLATURE, MARCH 7, 1935

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, to save your time in the pressure of a busy legislative session, I have reduced my statement to writing; but at the risk of seeming, perhaps, to be wandering from the subject, I wish to urge at the outset that you approach this problem of taxation not merely with the thought of how the necessary State funds can most easily be raised, but in the light of the present great crisis in American affairs.

I have just returned from another coast-to-coast, first-hand study of conditions in our country, and I confess that I am not only alarmed but appalled. The way is still open for a solution of our economic problems, and for the achievement of such prosperity as our country has never known before. But there are attitudes, points of view—commonly accepted points of view—which are keeping us as a Nation from taking that way, and this has led to the mobilization of many millions of Americans in strange, economically unsound campaigns which if successful can lead only to the collapse of our economic system and the possible destruction of our present political system.

I am speaking in part out of a rich experience in the State of Louisiana where there is a movement which amounts virtually to war between the rich and poor. Yes; I have met Huey Long and have watched him for hours successfully dictating as to what shall be done to the legislature and the highest executives of Louisiana. Huey does not hesitate to call it war. Four and a half million Americans, he tells me, are already enrolled in his "share the wealth" campaign. Father Coughlin, of Michigan, boasts of an enrolled following of eight and a half million; and 21,000,000 Americans, including the "conservative" Governor of California, have enrolled under the leadership of Dr. Townsend in a Utopian drive to restore prosperity by paying $200 a month to everybody as a reward for becoming 60 years old.

I am not blaming Townsend, Coughlin, Long, and the others for this movement of Americans away from safe and sane economic principles. I look upon them all as results, not causes, of what is wrong with America; and what is wrong is definitely a wrong attitude, both in business and in government, toward the problem of mass misery in a Nation abundantly able to produce mass prosperity.

These movements, all told, already claim to have the balance of power in the next election. Nothing will more surely make this true than if these leaders can tell their people that we who have escaped the acute poverty of the depression now propose to reduce or do away with income taxes and, by sales taxes, make them carry the burden of government.

I shall not here enter into any criticism of organized wealth in America; but this attitude that I speak of is nowhere more apparent than in the action of many sincere, well-meaning, and patriotic legislatures in preparing what they believe to be fair bills of taxation. You gentlemen, I know, do not wish to solve the tax problem by merely "soaking the rich"; and it might appeal to your sense of justice and your economic reasoning, if I were to come before you with a plea for a reduction of income taxes, especially in the higher brackets. I might plead that I am already turning over approximately half of my annual income for the support of government, and urge you to widen the base of the tax burden so as to bring more Americans into an understanding of their responsibility as citizens and arouse their interest in the reduction of governmental expenditures.

I beg of you, however, not to be misled by such appeals; for if, in a national crisis, you have to choose between "soaking the rich" and soaking the most helpless elements of our population, I beg of you, in the name of justice and fair play to "soak the rich"—if, remember, there is no alternative than to soak the poor.

And you are in a position, gentlemen, where you will have to make some such choice. You've got to raise money. You've got to do it by one means or another; and the chances are that your choice has already narrowed down to a choice of a higher income tax or the imposition of a sales tax. I am not here in behalf of any particular bill; but if that is your dilemma, I urge you, as a businessman, to increase the income tax, especially in the higher brackets and especially on the unearned incomes.

You cannot look at this matter solely in terms of present conditions in Massachusetts. You must think of it in the light of what is happening in America at large, and which, from the present outlook, may soon infect Massachusetts. The reason that you must raise more money is because of a condition of business depression throughout our country. What caused that depression? It cannot be denied that this depression was due, and is due, to the fact that organized business in our country did not organize business, and still hesitates to organize business, in such a way as to keep everybody profitably employed.

I do not mean to scold. Let us say that we businessmen did not know how to effect such an organization of business, because such an organization of business had never been necessary before. Let us say that we could not understand the President's recovery program and that we couldn't realize the necessity for any "new deal."

Let us say that we believed that every American had a right to make all the money that he could and to keep the rewards of his industry and business enterprise. The fact remains, however, that organized business failed to cope with this crisis when it came, and millions of Americans whose very lives depended upon their being employed were thrown out of employment and, through no fault of their own, were compelled to look to government for relief.

We who had been business leaders could still live. We could still buy enough to supply all our bodily wants; but our incomes nevertheless went down and down, while the demand for relief went up and up; and it was only natural of us under the circumstances to cry for a reduction in taxes, or at least for a tax which would be spread to include the masses of our people.

Hence, many began to agitate for the sales tax. It seemed so sweetly reasonable. People would only have to pay, they said, according to their means. Those who lived in luxury would have to pay much, and those who lived in poverty would have to pay but little. And since the average American was likely to think of wealth in terms of the luxury enjoyed by the wealthy, there was never any great organized opposition to such a plan. The flaw in the argument, however, was that a man with a large income had to use but a small fraction of that income for his living expenses, whereas a man with a small income had to use it all to keep himself and his family alive.

The sales tax practically eliminates the wealthy from its taxation and places the burden of government upon those least able to bear it; and yet, from the moment that the first sales tax was introduced, there has been a definite movement everywhere to substitute the sales tax for the income tax, on the claim that the sales tax is so much more easily collected.

The Legislature of Massachusetts, like the legislatures of all the States, must face this problem. Call it "soaking the rich" if you like, to increase the income tax in the higher brackets, but will this legislature prefer to soak the poor on the ground that the poor can be soaked so much more conveniently?

There are reasons, however, and excellent business reasons, why taxation should be rated according to income rather than to the purchase of commodities, and when organized business throughout America once grasps the imminent danger of the present crisis, there will be little agitation for the sales tax as opposed to the income tax excepting on the part of those who are entrenched in special privilege and have no other thought of government excepting the desire to use it to keep their special privileges intact.

For this depression, we must recognize, was brought about by just one basic cause. That was that the masses of Americans could not buy the ever-increasing volume of American industry. Our machines had become so productive that, if the masses could not buy their products, they could not be sold at all.

How much the masses could buy, however, depended mainly upon two things. First, upon how much they received in wages. Second, upon the price demanded for the goods. The sales tax obviously increases prices to the consumer, and thus restricts the market for all legitimate business at a time when the great business necessity is for an increase of that market. I do not claim any unselfishness, then, in urging the Legislature of Massachusetts to shun the sales tax as an economic plague. You will not only be doing your duty by the consuming public of Massachusetts if you remember this but you will be serving business, in the last analysis, in the best way that business can possibly be served.

It is not necessary for me to tell you that I do not personally welcome any increase in my income tax, any more than do those who are interested in this agitation to shift the tax burden to the shoulders of the weak. I will agree, if you wish, that our present income taxes are almost unbearable, and that the base of the income tax should be made much wider. But the way to widen the base of the income tax is not to impose taxes upon those who have no income more than enough to keep their families alive. The way to broaden the base of the income tax is to provide income—taxable income—to the masses of American people; and, when American business is sufficiently alive to its business responsibilities, it will see that this is done. In the meantime, I urge upon your committee, and upon the Legislature of Massachusetts, that you do not add your contribution to the forces that are tearing America apart, and that are producing this despair—this mass sense of injuries endured, which is causing our millions to enroll in all these utterly chaotic drives. Despair, we must remember, is not a matter of logic, and there is no logical answer to it. Despair is brought about by wrong economic conditions which result from wrong economic thinking. I believe that I am playing the part of a true conservative, then, when I urge you against any step which will further increase the rapidly growing power of this organized and so dangerous wrong thinking.

Do not imagine for a moment that the evils of the sales tax can be avoided by exempting a list of articles which are supposed to be the bare necessities of life. For the sales tax, in the first place, will raise the cost of living generally. It will increase prices generally; and business, to be on the safe side, will not only pass the tax on to the consumer, but will pass the tax plus what is decided to be a safe margin on to the consumer. There are times also when those who are living close to the line of poverty need things which legislators generally would class as luxuries, but which, for the time being, become necessities as genuinely as are milk and bread. A sick child, for instance, may have to be taken to the hospital in a hurry, and may, therefore, have to be taken in a taxicab, although we are inclined to think of taxicabs as luxuries. It is the circumstance which creates necessity; and no sales tax can be devised which will not strike at the weakest and most helpless element of our population. If, on the other hand, you do impose a seemingly intolerable burden upon the rich, it will only spur them to the kind of action to which they should be spurred. It will spur them to see, for instance, that waste and graft and special privilege in government have to be paid for out of their pockets; and they will throw their influence, as they have never heretofore thrown their influence, toward really reducing taxation by the effective fighting of all tax-increasing graft and special privilege. In this way, eventually, income taxes may also be reduced.

And finally, I beg to remind you that you cannot keep the sales tax from becoming an intolerable burden upon those least able to bear it, by making the tax small and seemingly insignificant. Once let the principle be established, and legislators, under the necessity of raising more funds, will certainly increase the tax. Already, the State of California has a 2-percent sales tax, and the Governor of California is definitely proposing in his budget message to raise it to 3 percent. And already, in the same State, bills are before the legislature to abolish the income tax. Similar things are happening in other States. Within the past week, according to the newspapers, a campaign in this same direction has been launched in New York State.

That is something which is bound to happen; and the same influences which are causing it to happen in California and elsewhere will soon be hard at work in Massachusetts. I know of no other point at which the issue, which is tearing our Nation apart, is more clearly set forth than in this issue of taxation. In this crisis, I hope that Massachusetts will do her part for mass prosperity—toward healing the wounds which the masses have received and avoiding the peril inherent in these mass movements of today—by placing the burden of taxation upon those of us who are best able to bear it.

Mr. BORAH. I also ask to have printed as part of my remarks certain remarks made by me on this same subject on May 31, 1932.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not think we need be surprised that the able Secretary of the Treasury has at last openly advocated a sales tax. It was perfectly clear to me, from reading the report of the hearings before the Finance Committee, beginning weeks ago, that the Secretary was an advocate of the sales tax. The only reason why he did not recommend it in the beginning was, as I understood, that he did not think it was practical, that he could not at that time secure its adoption. Of course, I am not using his exact language; I am using what I understand clearly to be the legitimate deduction from what he did say. The Secretary has at all times, in my judgment, been an advocate of the sales tax. His theory of taxation would naturally lead him to the sales tax.

From the time the Mellon dynasty, which is being continued in the present Secretary, took charge of the finances of this country, until the present time, the fundamental principle upon which they have based their system of taxation has been to lower the taxes on the wealthier people, on the greater incomes, and place them gradually but more distinctly upon the average person or what we might call the common people. They were early after the war for cutting the higher brackets, they were for repealing the excess-profits tax, they were for everything which took the burden of the load from those most able to pay, and were disposed to place it upon those least able to pay. This bill as recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury is full of proof of this policy.

They have finally reached the culmination of their doctrine. They have finally reached the sales tax, which would be laid in violation of the most fundamental principle of taxation; that is, according to ability to pay. The sales tax, if laid, is laid not according to ability to pay, but it is exacted regardless of the ability to pay of those who are taxed. The sales tax had its origin in this country in an effort to relieve the higher incomes.

There need be no surprise at this situation. It is the logical conclusion from the tax system which was inaugurated at the close of the war, and has been carried on with remorseless purpose ever since.

It is my view, Mr. President, that the laying of a sales tax would further aggravate and accentuate the conditions now prevailing in this country. This tax would be passed fully and completely to the consuming public. The moment we could lay a sales tax we would serve notice on at least 70,000,000 of the people of the United States to curtail their purchases. They would be warned that they must do with less of the things they really need or at least desire.

It will do little good in rescuing the country from the present situation, to increase the purchasing power of the few. Before we start back on the road to prosperity we must increase the purchasing power of the masses, the millions. We must augment their purchasing power before it will have its effect upon our present situation.

The moment we lay a sales tax, that moment we would press down more heavily upon the millions of people who are now living close to the border line of denial of things they need, and notify them that if they were to get through the year, they must curtail and cut expenses still further. Instead of aiding in the present situation, instead of starting upon the road to recovery, we would be laying a tax which would sterilize the very activities which are necessary in order that we may recover.

While I do not propose at this time to enter upon a discussion, I want to say now as emphatically as I can that no arguments which the Secretary can produce, no condition which he can paint, no situation which his language could porttray would induce me for a moment to consider favorably the sales tax. It is unjust. It is economically unsound. It will retard the restoration of the purchasing power of the masses. And it is not necessary in order to balance the Budget. We can do that with other taxes. And, furthermore, it will undermine still further the basis upon which prosperity must be rebuilt.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute for title VI, which begins on page 61, line 8.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CONNALLY in the chair). The Chair suggests that the amendment being in the nature of a substitute, any other amendments would be preferential and should be offered and considered before the adoption or rejection of the proposed substitute.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I did not understand there were any amendments pending to Title IV.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is merely advising Senators of their rights. Other amendments should be considered before the proposed substitute is considered.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], who has been called from the Chamber for a moment, has an amendment which he desires to offer.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I have an amendment pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was merely calling the attention of Senators to the parliamentary situation. If the proposed substitute amendment is adopted, then all of title VI is out of the bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I think I have the floor.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] has a perfecting amendment which might be disposed of, on page 65, to strike out the words:

Nor does the term "food products" include the furnishing, preparing, or serving for a consideration of any tangible personal property consumed on the premises of the person furnishing, preparing, or serving such tangible personal property.

That amendment might be accepted, and those words eliminated, and then, if the whole provision goes out, that amendment will go with it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. May I ask the Senator from Nevada whether he feels that he is in position to accept the amendment I have offered, or whether he intends to resist it?

Mr. McCARRAN. I do not intend to resist it, because my own inclination is against the present provision.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Then, it would seem to me that if the amendment is to be accepted, it would not be necessary to perfect the part of the text which will be eliminated in case the amendment is adopted; but I am perfectly willing to withhold my amendment until the Senator's amendment shall have been disposed of.

Mr. McCARRAN. I should like to offer the amendment and have it acted upon.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Very well; I will withhold my amendment.

Mr. McCARRAN. Then, I offer my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 65, line 8, in the committee amendment, it is proposed to strike out all after the word "therewith" down to and including the word "property", in line 12, in the following words:

Nor does the term "food products" include the furnishing, preparing, or serving for a consideration of any tangible personal property consumed on the premises of the person furnishing, preparing, or serving such tangible personal property.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I now offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute for title VI. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment may be dispensed with and that it may be printed in the RECORD, because by reference to the report of Mrs. NORTON in connection with the bill in the House I can very much more briefly inform the Senate as to the general provisions of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the amendment may be considered without reading it in detail, but that it may be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE's amendment was, on page 61, beginning with line 7, to insert the following:

TITLE VI—INCOME TAXES

DEFINITIONS

SECTION 1. The following terms in this title are for the purpose hereof defined as follows:

(a) The term "taxpayer" includes any person, corporation, partnership, trust, or estate subject to a tax imposed by this title.

(b) The term "person" shall mean all natural persons, whether married or unmarried, and also all trusts, estates, and fiduciaries acting for natural persons; it does not include corporations or partnerships acting for or in their own behalf.

(c) The term "corporation" includes foreign or domestic corporations, joint-stock companies, associations, and all enterprises operated by trustees, the interest in which is evidenced by shares of stock, whether with or without par, face, or nominal value.

(d) The term "engaged in business" as applying to corporations shall mean, if the entire business of the corporation be transacted within the District, the tax imposed by this title shall be upon the entire net income of such corporation for each taxable year, subject, however, to any correction. If the business of such corporation be transacted both within and without the District, the tax imposed by this title shall be upon the portion of such entire net income for each taxable year as is derived from sales, wherever made, of goods, wares, and merchandise, manufactured, or which originated, in this District, and from other business done or property located within this District, which may be determined by an allocation and separate accounting when the books of the corporation show income derived from business done and property located within this District; otherwise the tax imposed by this title shall be on such proportion of the entire net income of such corporation as the fair market value of the real estate and other physical assets in this District on the date of the close of the taxable year and the amount of the gross receipts in this District during that year, of such corporation, bears to the total fair market value of all the real estate and other physical assets within and without this District on the date of the close of the taxable year and the amount of the total gross receipts within and without the District during that year, of such corporation. The term "gross receipts in this District" shall include all receipts from persons, firms, corporations, partnerships, and associations, who or which are in the District, wherever paid, and all receipts from sales, wherever made, of goods, wares, and merchandise manufactured, or which originated in this District.

(e) The term "partnership" includes a syndicate, group, pool, joint venture, or other incorporated organization, through or by means of which any business, financial operation, or venture is carried, and which is not, within the meaning of this title, a trust or estate or a corporation; and the term "partner" includes a member in such a syndicate, group, pool, joint venture, or organization.

(f) The term "District" means the "District of Columbia."

(g) The term "resident" in its application to individuals shall mean any natural person who is either domiciled in the District of Columbia or one who maintains a permanent place of abode within the District of Columbia and spends in the aggregate more than 3 months of the taxable year within the District of Columbia. When a person domiciled without the District of Columbia maintains a place of permanent abode within the District of Columbia, and spends more than 3 months of the taxable year within the District of Columbia, he is a resident for the entire period during which he maintains said permanent place of abode. But any person who, on or before the last day of the taxable year, changes his place of abode to a place without the District of Columbia, with bona-fide intention of continuing actually to abide permanently without the District of Columbia, shall be taxable the same as a nonresident is taxable under this law. The fact that a person who has so changed his place of abode, within 6 months from so doing, again abides within the District of Columbia, shall be prima-facie evidence that he did not intend permanently to have his place of abode without the District of Columbia.

(h) The term "gross income" wherever it appears in this title shall mean and include gains, profits, and income derived from salaries, wages, or compensation for personal service, of whatever kind and in whatever form paid, or from professions, vocations, trades, business, commerce or sales or dealings in property, whether real or personal, growing out of the ownership, or use of or interest in such property, also from interest, rent, dividends, securities, or the transaction of any business carried on for gain or profit or gains or profits, and income derived from any source whatever, unless exempt from tax by law: Provided, That if a nonresident or a partnership with nonresident members carries on business both within and without the District of Columbia, the income therefrom must be apportioned so as to allocate to the District of Columbia a proportion of such income on a fair and equitable basis, in accordance with approved methods of accounting.

SEC. 2. The term "net income" as herein used shall mean the gross income less the following deductions:

(a) All interest paid during the taxable year on indebtedness, except on indebtedness incurred or continued to purchase or carry obligations or securities the interest upon which is exempt from taxation under this title.

(b) Debts ascertained to be worthless and charged off within the taxable year.

(c) Taxes paid during the taxable year, except inheritance taxes, taxes on intangible personal propery paid the District, taxes paid under the provisions of this title, Federal taxes on income and profits, and special taxes imposed for property betterments.

(d) All ordinary and necessary expenses paid or incurred during the taxable year in carrying on business, or a profession or occupation, including a reasonable allowance for salaries of personal service actually rendered; also rentals or other payments required to be made as a condition to the continued use or possession for business purposes of property to which the taxpayer has not taken or is not taking title or in which the taxpayer has no equity: Provided, That the provisions of this subdivision shall not be construed to include payment as a premium to an occupant to vacate such property for the benefit of the taxpayer wishing possession of such premises.

(e) Losses sustained during the taxable year and not compensated for by insurance or otherwise: Provided, That no loss resulting from the operation of business conducted without the District may be allowed as a deduction unless the income derived from the operation of business without the District is subject to taxation: And provided further, That no loss may be allowed on the sale of property purchased and held for pleasure or recreation and which was not acquired or used for profit, but this proviso shall not be construed to exclude losses due to theft or to the destruction of property by fire, flood, or other casualty.

(f) A reasonable allowance for the exhaustion, wear and tear, and obsolescence of property used in the transaction of business may be deducted from gross income, provided such depreciation is actually charged off.

(g) Contributions or gifts made within the year to the United States or the District of Columbia, or to corporations operating within the District of Columbia and organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, benevolent, or educational purposes, or to societies operating within the District conducted exclusively for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals, no part of the net income of which inures to the benefit of any private stockholder or individual.

(h) Dividends or incomes received by any persons from stocks or interest in any corporation the income of which shall have been assessed under the provisions of this title: Provided, That when only part of the income of any corporation shall have been assessed under this title only a corresponding part of the dividends or income received therefrom shall be deducted.

(i) The gains and profits of a nonresident from the sale, exchange, or other disposition of stocks, bonds, and other securities, except to the extent to which the same shall be a part of the income from a business carried on in the District of Columbia.

ITEMS NOT DEDUCTIBLE

In computing net income no deduction shall in any case be allowed in respect of—

(a) Personal, living, or family expenses;

(b) Any amount paid out for new buildings or for permanent improvements or betterments made to increase the value of any property or estate;

(c) Any amount expended in restoring property for which an allowance is or has been made; or

(d) Premiums paid on any life-insurance policy covering the life of any officer or employee or of any individual financially interested in any trade or business carried on by the taxpayer, when the taxpayer is directly or indirectly a beneficiary under such policy.

TAX ON CORPORATE INCOME

SEC. 3. Upon every corporation a tax is levied upon the net income as defined by this title. The rate of taxation shall be 5 percent per annum upon the net income. The net income shall be the gross income less the following deductions:

(a) All ordinary or necessary expenses paid or incurred during the taxable year in the operation and maintenance of its business, including a reasonable allowance for the exhaustion, wear and tear, and obsolescence of property used in the transaction of its business: Provided, That such depreciation is actually charged off.

(b) All moneys disbursed within the taxable year for personal service and salaries of officers: Provided, That such disbursements shall be reasonable in amount and that such services have been actually rendered in producing the income of the taxpayer: Provided further, That there be reported to the assessor of the District the name, address, and amount paid each employee and officer who receives a compensation of $1,000 or more during the taxable year.

(c) Losses sustained during the taxable year and not compensated for by insurance or otherwise: Provided, That no loss resulting from the operation of business conducted without the District, or the ownership of property located without the District, shall be allowed as a deduction unless the income derived from the operation of business without the District is subject to taxation.

(d) Taxes paid during the taxable year, except inheritance taxes, taxes on intangible personal property paid the District, taxes paid under the provisions of this title, Federal taxes on income, and profits and special taxes imposed for property betterments.

(e) Contributions or gifts made within the year to the United States or the District of Columbia or to corporations operating within the District of Columbia and organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, benevolent, or educational purposes, or to societies operating within the District conducted exclusively for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals any part of the income of which inures to the benefit of any private stockholder or individuals.

(f) Debts ascertained to be worthless and charged off within the taxable year.

(g) Dividends or incomes received from stocks or interest in any corporation the income of which shall have been assessed under the provisions of this title: Provided, That when only part of the income of any corporation shall have been assessed under this title only a corresponding part of the dividends or income received therefrom shall be deducted.

SEC. 4. Net income shall be computed on the basis of the taxpayer's annual accounting period, fiscal or calendar year, as the case may be, in accordance with the method of accounting regularly employed in keeping the books of the taxpayer; but if no such method of accounting has been so employed, or if the method employed does not clearly reflect the income, the computation shall be made in accordance with such method, as shall, in the judgment of the assessor of the District, clearly reflect such income.

ASCERTAINMENT OF GAIN OR LOSS

SEC. 5. For the purpose of ascertaining the gain derived or loss sustained from the sale or other disposition of property, real, personal, or mixed, the basis shall be, in case of property acquired on or after January 1, 1937, the cost thereof, or the inventory value if the inventory is made in accordance with this title.

(2) In case of property acquired prior to January 1, 1937, and disposed of thereafter—

(a) No profit shall be deemed to have been derived if either the cost or the fair market price or value on January 1, 1937, exceeds the value realized.

(b) No loss shall be deemed to have been sustained if either the cost or the fair market price or value on January 1, 1937, is less than the value realized.

(c) Where both the cost and the fair market price or value on January 1, 1937, are less than the value realized, the basis for computing profit shall be the cost or the fair market price or value on January 1, 1937, whichever is higher.

(d) Where both the cost and the fair market price or value on January 1, 1937, are in excess of the value realized, the basis for computing loss shall be the cost or the fair market price or value on January 1, 1937, whichever is lower.

Whenever in the opinion of the assessor of the District the use of inventories is necessary in order to determine clearly the income of any taxpayer, inventories shall be taken by such taxpayer upon such basis as the assessor may prescribe as conforming as nearly as may be to the best accounting practice in the trade or business and as most clearly reflecting the income.

PARTNERSHIPS

SEC. 6. Individuals carrying on business in partnerships shall only be liable in their individual capacity for the income tax provided in this title. There shall be included in computing the taxable income of each partner his distributive share, whether distributed or not, of the net income of the partnership for the taxable year, or for any fractional part of a taxable year; or, if his taxable income for such taxable year is computed upon the basis of a period different from that upon the basis of which the net income of the partnership is computed, then his distributive share of the net income of the partnership for any accounting period of the partnership ending within the fiscal or calendar year upon the basis of which the partner's income is computed.

INFORMATION AT THE SOURCE

SEC. 7. Every person, corporation, or partnership, in whatever capacity acting as withholding agent, including lessees, or mortgagors of real or personal property, fiduciaries, employers, and all officers and employees of the Federal or municipal Government, having the control, receipt, custody, disposal, or payment of interest, rent, salaries, wages, premiums, annuities, compensations, remunerations, emoluments, or other fixed or determinable annual or periodical gains, profits, and income taxable under this title shall, when required by the Commissioners of the District, file with the assessor, at such time or times as the Commissioners may designate, a statement showing the amount of salaries, wages, or compensation in any form whatever, as outlined above, paid to any person during any taxable year in excess of $1,000, such statement to be in such form as the Commissioners may prescribe.

SEC. 8. The following individuals, whether residents or nonresidents, having income subject to taxation under this title, shall each make, under oath, a return stating specifically the items of his or her gross income, and the deductions and credits allowed by this title.

(a) Every individual having a net income for the taxable year of $1,000 or over, if single, or if married and not living with husband or wife;

(b) Every individual having a net income for the taxable year of $2,500 or over, if married and living with husband or wife; and

(c) If the taxpayer is a minor or a person under legal disability, the return shall be made by the guardian, committee, duly authorized agent, or other person charged with the care of the person or property of such taxpayer.

Every corporation, trust, or estate, joint-stock company, partnership, or association organized for profit (except these herein specifically exempted) shall make a return, stating specifically the items of its gross income and the deductions and credits allowed by this title. The return shall be sworn to by the president or other principal officer and by the treasurer or assistant treasurer.

The assessor of the District of Columbia may grant a reasonable extension of time for filing income-tax returns whenever in his judgment good cause exists and shall keep a record of every extension. No such extension shall be granted for more than 3 months.

If any taxpayer, subject to this title, shall fail to make and file a sworn return to the assessor's office within the time prescribed by law, unless the time for filing such return be extended by the assessor of the District of Columbia, and upon all returns filed with or assessed by the assessor of the District of Columbia after the time herein prescribed for filing returns, the assessor shall assess a penalty equal to 20 percent of the amount of the tax assessed thereon, but in no case shall such penalty be less than $2. Any penalty imposed shall be collected at the same time and in the same manner as a part of the tax, unless the tax has been paid before the discovery of the neglect, in which case the amount so added shall be collected in the same manner as the tax. When the time for payment of any tax is postponed at the request of the taxpayer interest at the rate of 6 percent per annum is added from the original due date to the date of payment, but not beyond the due date under such extension.

EXEMPTIONS

SEC. 9. The following items shall be exempt from taxation under this title:

(a) The income of a single person or a married person not living with husband or wife, up to but not in excess of $1,000; the income of a married person living with husband or wife, or a single person who is the head of a family, up to but not in excess of $2,500: Provided, That if a husband and wife make separate returns or have separate incomes the exemption for each shall be $1,000; plus $400 for each person (other than husband or wife) who is actually supported by and entirely dependent upon the taxpayer for his support.

(b) The credit for dependents shall be determined by the status of the taxpayer on the last day of his taxable year. The personal exemptions (other than those for dependents) allowed by subsection (a) of this section shall, in case the status of a taxpayer changes during his taxable year, be the sum of an amount which bears the same ratio to $1,000 as the number of months during which the taxpayer was single bears to 12 months, plus an amount which bears the same ratio to $2,500 as the number of months during which the taxpayer was a married person living with husband or wife, or was the head of a family, bears to 12 months. For the purposes of this paragraph a fractional part of a month shall be disregarded unless it amounts to more than half a month, in which case it shall be considered as a month.

(c) In the case of an individual who dies during the taxable year, the personal exemption and the credit for dependents shall be determined by his status at the time of his death, and in such case full credits shall be allowed to the surviving spouse, if any, according to his or her status at the close of the taxable year.

(d) Amounts received under a life-insurance contract paid by reason of the death of the insured, whether in a single sum or in installments (but if such amounts are held by the insurer under an agreement to pay interest thereon, the interest payments shall be included in gross income). Amounts received (other than amounts paid by reason of the death of the insured and interest payments on such amounts) under a life-insurance, endowment, or annuity contract, but if such amounts (when added to amounts received before the taxable year under such contract) exceed the aggregate premiums or consideration paid (whether or not paid during the taxable year) then the excess shall be included in gross income.

(e) The value of property acquired by gift, bequest, devise, or descent received in 1 year the aggregate of which does not exceed $5,000.

(f) Any amount received through accident or health insurance or under Workmen's Compensation Acts, as compensation for personal injuries or sickness, plus the amount of any damages received, whether by suit or agreement, on account of such injuries or sickness, or through the War Risk Insurance Act or any law for the benefit or relief of injured or disabled members of the military or naval forces of the United States.

IMPOSITION OF TAX

SEC. 10. A tax is hereby annually levied for each taxable year upon every legal resident of the District of Columbia, as herein defined, upon and with respect to his entire net income as herein defined for the purposes of taxation, at the following rates:

(a) One percent of the amount of net income not exceeding $2,000.

(b) One and one-half percent of the amount of net income in excess of $2,000 but not in excess of $5,000.

(c) Two percent of the amount of net income in excess of $5,000 but not in excess of $10,000.

(d) Two and one-half percent of the amount of net income in excess of $10,000 but not in excess of $15,000.

(e) Three percent of the amount of net income in excess of $15,000 and not in excess of $20,000.

(f) Three and one-half percent of the amount of net income in excess of $20,000 but not in excess of $30,000.

(g) Four percent of the amount of net income in excess of $30,000 but not in excess of $50,000.

(h) Five percent of the amount of net income in excess of $50,000.

(i) If, for any taxable year, it appears upon the production of evidence satisfactory to the assessor that a taxpayer has sustained a net loss, the amount thereof shall be allowed as a deduction in computing the net income of the taxpayer for the succeeding taxable year, and if such net loss is in excess of such net income (computed without such deduction), the amount of such excess shall be allowed as a deduction in computing the net income for the next succeeding taxable year, the deduction in all cases to be made under regulations prescribed by the Commissioners.

(j) A like tax is hereby imposed and shall be levied, collected, and paid annually at the rate specified in this section upon and with respect to the entire net income as herein defined, except as otherwise herein provided, from all property owned and from every business, trade, or profession carried on and salaries and wages received for services rendered in the District of Columbia by persons not residents of the District.

Whenever a nonresident taxpayer of the District of Columbia has become liable to income tax to the State where he resides upon his net income for the taxable year, derived from sources within the District of Columbia and subject to taxation under this title, the assessor shall credit the amount of income tax payable by him under this title with such proportion of the tax so payable by him to the State where he resides, as his income subject to taxation under this title bears to his entire income upon which the tax so payable to such other State was imposed: Provided, That such credit shall be allowed only if the laws of said State (1) grant a substantially similar credit to the residents of the District, subject to income tax under such laws, or (2) impose a tax upon the personal incomes of its residents derived from sources within the District, and exempt from taxation the personal incomes of residents of the District. No credit shall be allowed against the amount of the tax on any income taxable under this title which is exempt from taxation under the laws of such other State.

SEC. 11. The tax herein provided shall be computed and levied under direction of the assessor of the District of Columbia, and the collections made by the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia and the revenue derived therefrom shall be turned over to the United States Treasury for credit to the District in the same manner as other revenues are turned over to the United States Treasury for credit to the District.

TIME AND PLACE OF FILING RETURNS

SEC. 12. The tax herein provided shall be first levied, collected, and paid in the year 1938 upon and with respect to the taxable income for the calendar year 1937, or for any fiscal year ending during the year 1937. Returns of income due in the year 1938 shall be made to the assessor of the District of Columbia on or before the last day of April 1938. Thereafter annual returns of income as provided in this title shall be made to the assessor of the District of Columbia on or before the last day of April of each year. One-half of the tax computed on the net income by the taxpayer shall be paid at the time of filing the return, and the second half of the tax shall be paid in the following month of October. Blank forms of returns shall be furnished by the assessor upon application, but failure to secure the form shall not relieve any taxpayer from the obligation of making any return herein required.

SEC. 13. Upon the filing of the income-tax return provided herein, it shall be the duty of the assessor of the District to examine it, or cause it to be examined, as soon as it is practicable to do so. If upon such examination it shall be disclosed that the amount of tax is more or less than the amount shown in the return, a proper adjustment shall be made upon final payment by the person taxed.

SEC. 14. If a return required by this title is not filed or if a return when filed is incorrect or insufficient, and the maker fails to file a corrected or sufficient return within 20 days after the same is required by notice from the assessor, the assessor shall determine the amount of the tax due from such information as he may be able to obtain. The assessor shall give notice of such determination to the person liable for the tax. Such determination shall finally and irrevocably fix the tax, unless the person against whom it is assessed shall file a protest with the Board of Personal Tax Appeals in accordance with the provision of section 19 hereof.

SEC. 15. If any tax imposed by this title or any portion of such tax be not paid within the time prescribed herein or within such additional time as may be allowed by the assessor, the same shall bear interest at the rate of 1 percent per month or fraction thereof until paid. The taxes levied hereunder, together with interest and penalties thereon, may be collected by the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia in the manner provided by the law for the collection of taxes due the District of Columbia on personal property, in force at the time of such collection.

FIDUCIARIES

SEC. 16. Every person acting in a fiduciary capacity shall make, under oath, a return, during the period prescribed in this title, for the individual or estate or trust for whom he acts, of all taxable income received by him on his fiduciary capacity for the preceding taxable year, or for any fractional part thereof.

The income paid or accrued to estates of deceased persons before a fiduciary shall have been appointed for such estate, or before he has qualified to act in such capacity, shall be assessed to the estate.

If an estate has more than one fiduciary and any one of them shall be a resident of the District of Columbia such assessment shall be made to the fiduciary who is a resident of said District, and he shall be liable for that proportion of the tax on the net income as is paid to beneficiaries who are or were during the taxable period residents of the District of Columbia.

A fiduciary shall, in all cases where an estate extends over one taxable period, give the names and addresses of each beneficiary and the amount paid to each since the last return was made. Upon termination of his duties as a fiduciary he shall furnish the assessor of the District, in such form as said assessor may prescribe, a complete list of the names and addresses of the beneficiaries and the amounts paid, or ordered to be paid, by him to each beneficiary.

If an estate is to be distributed and terminated before the date set for making returns, the fiduciary may request from the assessor of the District permission to make a return for the expired portion of the taxable year and, if such request is granted, shall file with the assessor of the District a return for such unexpired portion of the taxable year. After verification as to the correctness of the return a bill may be rendered for the amount of tax due, which tax shall within 30 days after the bill is rendered be paid to the collector of taxes.

STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS

SEC. 17. Except in the case of a willfully false or fraudulent return with intent to evade the tax, the amount of tax due under any return shall be determined by the assessor within 3 years after the return was made and no proceeding in court without assessment for the collection of such taxes shall be begun after the expiration of such period. In the case of a willfully false or fraudulent return or where no return has been filed the amount of tax due may be determined and collected at any time.

If within 3 years after the payment of taxes it appears from the records of the assessor that moneys have been erroneously or illegally collected from any taxpayer or other persons, pursuant to the provisions of this title, the Commissioners shall have power upon making a record of the reasons therefor in writing, to cause such moneys to be refunded.

RECORDS OF INCOME TO BE KEPT

SEC. 18. Every person liable to any tax imposed under this title, or for the collection thereof, shall keep such records, render under oath such statements, make such returns, and comply with such rules and regulations as the Commissioners may reasonably require.

SPECIFICATION OF APPEAL PROCEDURE

SEC. 19. The Board of Personal Tax Appeals of the District of Columbia shall have power to hear and determine controversies arising in connection with taxes imposed under this title. Within 60 days after the notice of the determination of the tax liability shall have been mailed by the assessor (not counting Sunday or a legal holiday as the 60th day) the taxpayer may file a protest in writing with said Board requesting a hearing: Provided, That the grounds of the appeal must be stated in the protest. The Board of Personal Tax Appeals shall, after affording a hearing to the taxpayer, ascertain the correct tax, whether greater or less than the amount determined by the assessor. If the taxpayer is aggrieved by the decision of said Board, he may thereafter appeal to the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia.

ADMINISTRATION

SEC. 20. The Commissioners of the District shall have the power to prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the purpose of this title.

The assessor or his designated agent, or the Board of Personal Tax Appeals, or any member thereof, for the purpose of ascertaining the correctness of any return filed hereunder, or for the purpose of making a return when none has been made, is authorized to examine any books, papers, records, or memoranda bearing upon the matters required to be included in the return, and may summons any person to appear before him to produce books, records, papers, or memoranda bearing upon the matters required to be included in the return, and to give testimony or answer interrogatories under oath respecting the same, and the said assessor or his designated agent, and the Board of Personal Tax Appeals or any member thereof, shall have power to administer oaths to such person or persons. Such summons may be served by any member of the Metropolitan Police Department. If any person, having been personally summoned, shall neglect or refuse to obey the summons herein issued as provided, then, in that event, the Commissioners may report that fact to the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, or one of the justices thereof, and said court or any justice thereof is empowered to compel obedience to such summons to the same extent as witnesses may be compelled to obey the subpenas of that court.

SEC. 21. Any individual, corporation, or partnership, or any officer or employee of any corporation or member or employee of any partnership, who with intent to evade any tax or any requirement of the law, or lawful requirement of the assessor of taxes for the District of Columbia thereunder, shall fail to pay the tax, or to make, render, sign, or verify any return, or to supply any information within the time required, or with like intent shall make, render, sign, or verify any false or fraudulent return or statement, or shall supply any false or fraudulent information, shall be liable to a penalty of not more than $1,000 and shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall upon conviction be fined not to exceed $1,000 or be imprisoned not to exceed 1 year, or both, at the discretion of the court.

PENALTIES

SEC. 22. Any taxpayer as herein defined whose duty it is to file the income-tax return required hereby and who shall refuse or neglect to file such income-tax return shall be liable to a penalty of not to exceed $1,000 which may be recovered in an action brought by the corporation counsel of the District in the name of the District.

SECRECY REQUIRED OF OFFICIALS AND EMPLOYEES

SEC. 23. Except in accordance with proper judicial order or as otherwise provided by law, it shall be unlawful for the Commissioners or any person having an administrative duty under this title to divulge or make known in any manner whatever the amount or source of income, profits, losses, expenditures, or any particulars thereof set forth or disclosed in any income-tax return filed with the said assessor by any person subject to taxation under this title. The persons charged with the custody of such returns shall not be required to produce any of them or evidence of anything contained in them in any action or proceeding in any court except on behalf of the United States or the District of Columbia, or on behalf of any party to any action or proceeding under the provisions of this title when the returns or facts shown thereby are directly involved in such action or proceeding, in either of which events the court may require the production of, and may admit in evidence, so much of such returns or of the facts shown thereby as are pertinent to the action or proceeding and no more. Nothing herein shall be construed to prohibit the delivery to a taxpayer, or his duly authorized representative, of a certified copy of any return filed in connection with his tax, nor to prohibit the publication of statistics so classified as to prevent the identification of particular returns and the items thereof, or the inspection by the corporation counsel of the District or any of his assistants of the return of any taxpayer who shall bring action to set aside or review the tax based thereon, or against whom an action or proceeding has been instituted for the collection of a tax or penalty. Returns shall be preserved for 3 years and thereafter until the Commissioners order them to be destroyed. Any violation of the provisions of this section shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500 or by imprisonment for not more than 90 days, or both. This section shall not apply to any authorized representative of the United States Government or any authorized representative of any State government. Such representatives upon written request shall be permitted to examine such returns at such times as the assessor of the District may designate provided a like privilege is granted to representatives of the government of the District of Columbia.

BUREAU OF INTERNAL REVENUE AUTHORIZED TO SUPPLY INFORMATION

SEC. 24. The Bureau of Internal Revenue of the Treasury Department of the United States is authorized and required to supply such information as may be requested by the Commissioners relative to any person subject to the taxes imposed under this title.

EXEMPT CORPORATIONS

SEC. 25. All corporations or associations organized and operated exclusively for benevolent, charitable, religious, and eleemosynary purposes, mutual savings banks, building and loan associations, insurance companies, and railroad companies which report to and are subject to regulation by the Interstate Commerce Act of 1887, as amended, shall be exempt from the tax imposed under this title.

TAX ON INTANGIBLE PROPERTY CREDITED

SEC. 26. Any tax levied by the District of Columbia upon intangible personal property owned by a taxpayer on July 1 of any year and paid by such taxpayer shall be credited upon the income tax due hereunder by such taxpayer for the following year.

SAVING CLAUSE

SEC. 27. If any section or provision of this title shall be declared to be invalid or unconstitutional, such adjudication shall not affect the validity of this title as a whole or any section, provision, or part thereof not adjudged invalid or unconstitutional.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the amendment now pending provides a carefully prepared income tax for the District of Columbia. It was prepared under the direction of the Commissioners of the District, with the aid of tax experts. It is predicated upon the New York State income-tax law, which has been on the statute books for a number of years, and is, therefore, so far as its terminology, definitions, and other technical questions of drafting are concerned, a piece of legislation which is in excellent form.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. What amount of money would the amendment bring in? Would it bring in enough to take care of the local situation?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, my information is that the amendment now pending was estimated to yield more than $5,000,000 in revenue, and that it therefore would yield more than twice as much as the sales-tax provision.

The report of Mrs. NORTON, in the House of Representatives, describes this proposed income tax as follows:

Section 1 and section 2 are devoted to definitions. Section 2 defines "net income" as the gross income less certain deductions which are enumerated therein. Section 2 also indicates the items not deductible.

Section 3: Levies a tax on corporate incomes of 5 percent. The net income of corporations is defined as gross income less certain deductions enumerated therein.

Section 4: Provides that the net income shall be computed on the basis of the taxpayer's annual accounting period, fiscal or calendar year, as the case may be.

Section 5: Provides the method of ascertaining the gain derived or loss sustained from the sale or other disposition of property.

Section 6: Relates to partnerships and requires that the distributive share of the net income of a partnership be reported, and shall be included in computing the taxable net income of each partner.

Section 7: Requires that source information be given to the Commissioner showing the salaries, wages, or compensation, in whatever form paid, earned by any person during a taxable year.

Section 8: Requires a return from (a) every individual having a net income for the taxable year of $1,000, or over if single, or if married and not living with husband or wife; and (b) every individual having a net income for the taxable year of $2,500 or over, if married and living with husband or wife. If the taxpayer is a minor or a person under legal disability, the return shall be made by the guardian, committee, etc.

Section 8: Gives the assessor power to grant reasonable extension of time for the filing of income-tax returns limiting the time of extension, however, to 3 months. In case the taxpayer fails to file a sworn return within the time prescribed by law or within the time permitted by the extension the assessor must under this title assess a penalty equal to 20 percent of the amount of the tax assessed thereon, but in no case shall such penalty be less than $2.

Section 9: Sets up the exemptions permitted under this title, these exemptions being $1,000 for a single person or married person not living with husband or wife, $2,500 for the head of a family, and also provides that if the husband and wife make separate returns or have separate incomes the exemption for each shall be $1,000. This section also provides for an exemption of $400 for each person (other than husband or wife) who is actually supported by and entirely dependent upon the taxpayer for his support.

Thus far it will be observed that the pending amendment is in conformity with the Federal income tax insofar as net income and dependents are concerned.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do.

Mr. McCARRAN. The Senator has in his hand the report of the House committee. I am wondering if one living in the District, drawing a salary in the District, but a resident of another State, paying an income tax in the other State, is to be also taxed in the District.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. He would be, as I understand the draft of the amendment; but, of course, he could set up as a deduction any tax he paid, either to the Federal Government under the Federal income tax or to his State under the State laws.

Mr. McCARRAN. I am wondering whether he would not be caught with a different rate, perhaps, and therefore have to pay double taxation.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If the rate in his State were different than the one imposed under the pending amendment, the taxpayer, of course, would have to pay the tax provided in his own State law; but whatever he paid under his State law could be set up as a deduction against the tax for which he would be liable under the District law.

Mr. McCARRAN. I do not want the Senator to understand that I am opposing his amendment, but I wish to clarify the matter.

Does not the Senator see this possibility involved in his amendment? Those who are in Federal employment in this city are compelled to live in the District of Columbia; they cannot serve their Government unless they live in the District of Columbia, so any tax of that kind, if it were in excess of what is paid in the home State, as I term it, would be a penalty imposed for serving the Government where the Government actually demands that its employees live.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I cannot see any inequality in that situation. It is analogous to the situation which now confronts the taxpayer living in a State which has a State income tax in relation to the tax which he pays under the Federal income-tax law. In the case of the tax imposed by the Federal income-tax law, whether or not it is in excess of that imposed under the law of the taxpayer's own State, he has, of course, to pay to the Federal Government the full amount of the tax, although he is permitted to set up the amount of tax paid to his own State as a deduction in computing the tax paid to the Federal Government. We must not forget that the District government is in much the same situation, so far as its responsibilities and its government are concerned, as is any State or municipality. It has all the services to render that States and municipalities must perform; and therefore, it is only just that the District of Columbia should have revenue from those who live within its borders and who enjoy the services which it provides, as does every other municipality.

The report continues:

The taxpayer's status is determined on the last day of the taxable year. Amounts paid under a life-insurance contract are exempt regardless of whether this amount is paid in a lump sum or installments.

The value of property acquired by gift, bequest, devise, or descent is exempt where the gift does not exceed $5,000.

Also exempt from tax is any amount received from accident or health insurance, workmen's compensation acts, damages received by suit or agreement on account of injuries or sickness, or through the War Risk Insurance Act, or any law for the benefit or relief of injured or disabled members of the military or naval forces of the United States.

Section 10: Provides for the imposition of tax at the following rates:

(a) One percent of the amount of net income not exceeding $2,000.

(b) One and one-half percent of the amount of net income in excess of $2,000 but not in excess of $5,000.

(c) Two percent of the amount of net income in excess of $5,000 but not in excess of $10,000.

(d) Two and one-half percent of the amount of net income in excess of $10,000 but not in excess of $15,000.

(e) Three percent of the amount of net income in excess of $15,000 and not in excess of $20,000.

(f) Three and one-half percent of the amount of net income in excess of $20,000 but not in excess of $30,000.

(g) Four percent of the amount of net income in excess of $30,000 but not in excess of $50,000.

(h) Five percent of the amount of net income in excess of $50,000.

So it will be observed that the rates provided compare with those imposed by other States employing the income tax and are not onerous.

This section also imposes a tax upon the entire net income as defined by title VIII on all property owned and from every business, trade, or profession carried on and salaries and wages received for services rendered in the District of Columbia by persons not residents of the District. The assessor, however, is authorized to credit the amount of tax payable by the taxpayer under this title with such proportion of the tax so payable by him to the State where he resides, provided, however, a substantially similar credit is allowed residents of the District subject to income tax under such laws of other States.

Section 11: Provides that the tax shall be computed and levied under the direction of the assessor and that the collection shall be made by the collector of taxes.

Section 12: Provides the time and place of filing the returns.

Section 13: Requires the assessor to examine the income-tax returns for the purpose of determining whether the tax is correct.

Section 14: Permits the assessor, where no return is filed, or the return when filed is incorrect or insufficient and the maker fails to file a corrected or sufficient return, to determine the amount of tax from such information as may be obtainable. This determination becomes final unless appeal is made to the Board of Personal Tax Appeals.

Section 15: Where the tax, or any portion thereof, is not paid within the time prescribed interest of 1 percent per month or fraction thereof is added. The tax levied hereunder, and the interest and penalties thereon, may be collected by the collector of taxes in the manner provided by the law for the collection of personal-property taxes.

Section 16: Requires every fiduciary to make returns.

Section 17: Prescribes the application of the statute of limitations in all cases except where there is a willfully false or fraudulent return with intent to evade the tax.

Section 18: Requires records to be kept by the taxpayer under reasonable rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioners.

Section 19: Empowers the Board of Personal Tax Appeals to hear and determine controversies arising.

Section 20: Places the administration in the hands of the Commissioners and provides that the Commissioners may prescribe rules and regulations necessary for the carrying out of title VIII.

Section 21: Deals with the evasion of any tax as required by law and provides a penalty of $1,000.

Section 22: Deals with general penalties and limits the fine to $1,000.

Section 23: Requires that the Commissioners or any person acting under them must keep secret the information pertaining to income-tax returns.

Section 24: Authorizes the Bureau of Internal Revenue to supply the Commissioners with information relative to any person subject to the tax.

Section 25: Exempts from the title all corporations or associations organized and operated exclusively for benevolent, charitable, or religious purposes, mutual savings banks, building and loan associations, insurance companies, and railroad companies which report to and are subject to the regulations of the Interstate Commerce Commission under the provisions of the Interstate Commerce Act of 1887.

Section 26: Permits a credit to be given for any taxes paid on intangible personal property.

Section 27: Separability clause.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. As I understand, under the bill a sufficient sum would be raised in the form of additional taxes to provide for the expenses of the city.

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes; the bill would raise sufficient revenue.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The bill in its entirety, if the proposed income-tax section were included, would raise the amount estimated to be necessary to meet the deficit.

Mr. McKELLAR. Would it raise that amount if the sales-tax provision were included? The idea which occurs to me is that the income tax would result in raising $5,000,000, whereas it is estimated that the sales tax would bring in two and a half million. I thought that if two and a half million were all that was necessary, the rates might be cut in two.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is my understanding, Mr. President, that the committee amendment, providing a sales tax also, under the committee's plan eliminates another tax which was provided in the bill as it passed the House. If I am mistaken about that, the Senator from Nevada can correct me.

Mr. McCARRAN. The Senator is correct.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is my understanding that the revenue to be derived from the income tax would be required if the taxes which the committee planned to eliminate should be eliminated.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to ask the Senator in charge of the bill a question?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is $5,000,000 required? If only two and a half million dollars are required and the sales tax will bring in two and a half million; if the income tax should be substituted for the sales tax, why could not the rates be cut in two and produce the $2,500,000?

Mr. McCARRAN. The rates would undoubtedly be cut down; but there is an adjustment which will have to be worked out by the statisticians.

I now desire to read into the RECORD a statement of the taxes collected in the District.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I shall be delighted to have the information.

Mr. McCARRAN. This is a statement showing revenues of the general fund of the District of Columbia collected during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1937:

Statement showing revenues of the general fund of the District of Columbia collected during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1937

Tax on real estate (assessment $1,144,457,153)	$17,489,320
Tax on tangible personal property (assessment, $69,451,075)	1,066,686
Tax on intangible personal property (assessment, $524,977,870)	2,666,117
Tax on public utilities, banks, building associations, etc	2,024,825

Personal tax on motor vehicles	$622,437
Interest and penalties on taxes	344,454
Alcoholic beverages, tax and licenses	1,975,352
Insurance, tax and licenses	579,005
Occupational and business licenses	416,048
Police court fines	469,336

I should like to draw the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin to this, inasmuch as he is interested:

Police court fines	$469,336
Motor vehicles, registration and permits	557,665
Miscellaneous items, including rents, permits, fees, etc.	1,696,232
Total general-fund revenues collected by the District of Columbia in the fiscal year 1937	29,907,477
To which add:
Federal contribution for the fiscal year 1937	$5,000,000
Revenue surplus brought over from the fiscal year 1936	2,845,785
Revenue credits arising from unexpended balances of appropriations	850,000
	8,695,785
Total general-fund revenue availability, fiscal year 1937	38,603,262
Total appropriation charges, general fund	40,133,410

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Nevada for this statistical information. But, recurring to the point raised by the Senator from Tennessee, it seems to me—and I am sure the members of the committee will agree to the statement—that it would be very much better to let these rates remain as provided in the amendment, in order that when the conferees meet there may be a possibility of eliminating some of the other taxes which the Senate committee desired to have eliminated; and if there is any necessity for an adjustment of rates, that can be undertaken, either upward or downward, in conference, as the situation may require.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I should like to draw the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin, who has very ably presented this matter, and the Senator from Idaho to the fact that it seems to me, in view of the statute which I read at the outset, that the realty of the District of Columbia is not bearing its share of the burden necessary for the Government of the District of Columbia. I think that statute was enacted with a purpose in mind, and I think that purpose has been forgotten.

I wish to say, if I may in the time of the Senator, that I come from a State which has neither an income tax, an inheritance tax, nor a sales tax. We have a modern, progressive form of government, which compares with that of any other State in the Union, without any one of these taxes, and I believe the District of Columbia can do the same if someone will take the time to sit down and work it out; but it has not been worked out, and the Committee on the District of Columbia, in the time that was allotted to it, a week or two, could not work it out. I say frankly that I do not believe a conference committee is going to work this problem out.

Frankly, I wonder whether the Senator from Wisconsin would not rather see the bill go back to the committee and let the committee work it out through months and months of work, which it must put into it, rather than have the bill go to conference. I leave that as a suggestion.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is my understanding that the chairman of the committee believes that the bill should go to conference, and I would defer to his judgment in the matter.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, with all due deference to the suggestion made by my dear friend the Senator from Nevada, in view of the fact that the government of the District of Columbia is now without funds and that the taxing year has already commenced, it seems to me it would be rather impolitic to send the bill back, because if we sent it back we would have the question of the income tax to consider and we would have to include it in the report—and I am in favor of it, as I have been all along—and we would have to omit the sales tax. So that we would then be confronted with the alternative of an income tax or an increase in the tax upon real estate. It seems to me that the better way is to pass the bill with the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin included; and if the other House should refuse to accede to an income tax—I cannot believe it would, but if it should, and should remain adamant—the burden would rest upon the House and not upon the Senate. We should then have done our duty, and I am sure we should be vindicated by the country and vindicated by the fine people of the District of Columbia. So I should prefer to accept the amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I wish to express my gratification at the support of the able Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and the Senator in charge of the bill [Mr. McCARRAN]; and I think great credit should be given to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] because of his able speech in connection with this subject matter. I think it would be a great victory if the Senate today were to go on record and reaffirm its traditional policy that taxes should be levied in accordance with the ability of the taxpayer to pay.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, do I correctly understand that the amendment has been accepted?

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] to the amendment reported by the committee on page 61, line 7.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, in view of the fact that I have charge of the bill on the floor and that when the Senator from Wisconsin offered his amendment to the committee amendment I stated that I would accept it, I now carry out that promise and accept the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment, as amended.

The amendment as amended, was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next committee amendment will be stated.

The next amendment was, on page 77, after line 14, to insert:

TITLE VII—MISCELLANEOUS

AUTHORIZATION FOR ADVANCE OF FUNDS

SECTION 1. Until and including June 30, 1938, the Secretary of the Treasury, notwithstanding the provisions of the District of Columbia Appropriation Act, approved June 29, 1922, is authorized and directed to advance, on the requisition of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, made in the manner now prescribed by law, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary, from time to time, during said fiscal year to meet the general expenses of said District, as authorized by Congress, and such amounts so advanced shall be reimbursed by the said Commissioners to the Treasury out of the taxes and revenue collected for the support of the government of the said District of Columbia.

SURVEY OF TAX STRUCTURE OF THE DISTRICT

SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of the revenues of the District of Columbia the sum of $20,000, for a survey and study of the entire tax structure of the District of Columbia, to be made under the direction of the Commissioners of said District. Such sum shall be available for expenditure for personal services without regard to the civil-service laws or the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, and for other necessary expenses. A report of such survey, with recommendations, shall be made by the Commissioners to Congress not later than January 15, 1938.

REGULATIONS

SEC. 3. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEPARABILITY OF PROVISIONS

SEC. 4. If any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provisions to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 79, to insert:

TITLE VIII—AMENDMENT TO THE ANTITRUST LAWS

Section 1 of the act entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies", approved July 2, 1890, is amended to read as follows:

"SECTION 1. Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall render illegal contracts or agreements prescribing minimum prices for the resale of a commodity which bears, or the label or container of which bears, the trade mark, brand, or name of the producer or distributor of such commodity and which is in free and open competition with commodities of the same general class produced or distributed by others, when contracts or agreements of that description are lawful as applied to intrastate transactions, under any statute, law, or public policy now or hereafter in effect in any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia in which such resale is to be made, or to which the commodity is to be transported for such resale, and the making of such contracts or agreements shall not be an unfair method of competition under section 5, as amended and supplemented, of the act entitled 'An act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes', approved September 26, 1914. Every person who shall make any contract or engage in any combination or conspiracy hereby declared to be illegal shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding 1 year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court."

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 80, line 1, after "1914", it is proposed to insert a colon and the following:

Provided further, That the preceding proviso shall not make lawful any contract or agreement, providing for the establishment or maintenance of minimum resale prices on any commodity herein involved, between manufacturers or between producers or between wholesalers or between brokers or between factors or between retailers or between persons, firms, or corporations in competition with each other.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I am not going to make a speech now; but I should like to say that the amendment which I have just offered has been worked out by certain administration leaders and myself and is entirely satisfactory to me; and I think I am authorized to say that with that amendment the administration is not now opposed to this title of the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from Maryland for whom he speaks when he says "the administration"?

Mr. TYDINGS. The Attorney General's Department.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator explain the purpose of the amendment and its significance?

Mr. TYDINGS. In my judgment, Mr. President, the amendment is unnecessary because the provision as now found in the bill allows none of the things which the amendment specifically eliminates; but, in order that there may be no misunderstanding and that the element of competition may be kept forward throughout the process projected in this measure, the amendment has been offered. I took up the matter with the Attorney General and we worked out this amendment; and so far as I know and believe, it is an accurate statement that forces which were formerly opposed to this title of the bill have no particular objection to it at the present time.

Mr. KING addressed the Senate. After having spoken for about 20 minutes,

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. REYNOLDS in the chair). The absence of a quorum is suggested. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Borah	Capper	Ellender
Ashurst	Bridges	Caraway	Frazier
Austin	Brown, Mich.	Chavez	George
Bailey	Brown, N. H.	Clark	Gerry
Barkley	Bulkley	Connally	Gibson
Berry	Bulow	Davis	Gillette
Bilbo	Burke	Dieterich	Glass
Black	Byrd	Donahey	Green
Bone	Byrnes	Duffy	Guffey
Hale	Logan	O'Mahoney	Thomas, Okla.
Harrison	Lonergan	Overton	Thomas, Utah
Hatch	Lundeen	Pepper	Townsend
Herring	McAdoo	Pope	Truman
Hitchcock	McCarran	Radcliffe	Tydings
Holt	McGill	Reynolds	Vandenberg
Hughes	McKellar	Russell	Van Nuys
Johnson, Calif.	McNary	Schwartz	Wagner
Johnson, Colo.	Maloney	Schwellenbach	Walsh
King	Minton	Sheppard	Wheeler
La Follette	Moore	Shipstead	White
Lee	Murray	Smathers
Lewis	Neely	Smith
Lodge	Nye	Steiwer

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-nine Senators having answered to their names a quorum is present. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS].

Mr. KING resumed his speech. After having spoken for about 30 minutes, he yielded to Mr. SMITH, and the following debate ensued:

PRICES OF AGRICULTURAL COMMODITIES

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. From the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, I report favorably an original resolution which has been unanimously approved by the committee.

The resolution is a departure from the old custom. In the committee we decided that we would have hearings on the agricultural bill during the recess of Congress, but that we would have a subcommittee visit the different regions and get in contact with the actual farmers, rather than call them to Washington. For that reason I ask leave now to report this resolution, which has already been favorably acted upon by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, in order that it may go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). Without objection, the resolution will be received and read.

The resolution (S. Res. 158) was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to conduct investigations and draft legislation to maintain both parity of prices paid to farmers for agricultural commodities marketed by them for domestic consumption and export and parity of income for farmers marketing such commodities; and, without interfering with the maintenance of such parity prices, to provide an ever-normal granary for each major agricultural commodity; and to conserve national soil resources and prevent the wasteful use of soil fertility; and, in particular, so to consider S. 2787, the committee shall report to the Senate, at the earliest practicable date, the result of its investigations, together with its recommendations.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions and recesses of the Senate in the Seventy-fifth Congress, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures, as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per 100 words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $10,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I should like to ask a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BLACK. We are not to understand, are we, that the adoption of this resolution would prohibit action by the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry within the next week or 10 days if the committee should see fit to make a report on the bill?

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, this matter is of such importance that, without a single objection, the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry this morning thought it would better serve the purpose to have this matter taken directly to the farmers themselves, and have them thoroughly acquainted with all the terms of the bill, and bring back to the committee when we reconvene next January the substance of the investigation and hearings.

As to whether or not any other bill is to be introduced and considered, I am not advised; but, so far as the committee of which I am chairman is concerned, we do not anticipate trying to pass any general farm legislation at this time.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I wish to say that at the proper time I shall offer an amendment to the resolution. Is the resolution in question to be referred to some other committee?

Mr. SMITH. It is simply to be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. I think I can say without any immodesty that I have at heart the welfare of the farmers, "of which I am one of whom" [laughter], and I think other members of the committee are just as zealous as is the Senator from Alabama, and I think we have the farmers' welfare as completly at heart as he has. I do because farming is my living. I make my living out of the field and the little I get as my salary as United States Senator. I can sit on my piazza and throw a brickbat into the cottonfield. I think I know something of the needs of the farmers. I have been in the Senate for 30 years, and every year we have been legislating for the farmer, and just how far we have gotten the Senate knows. It is now time to get down to the fundamentals and accomplish something constructive and permanent. I think other members of the committee who collaborated this morning and took the major part in this proposition should have something to say about it. We, the members of the committee, are charged with this responsibility, and so long as I am chairman, we will shoulder it.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield for just a moment?

Mr. KING. I will yield for just a moment. When I yielded originally I did not know so much controversy would be involved in this matter.

Mr. BLACK. Neither did I, Mr. President. I do not intend to engage in any controversy as to the farming abilities of my friend from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], nor as to his loyalty to the farmer. I am interested not only in one farmer but in a great many of them who are not making a living. I am glad to know that my friend from South Carolina is making a good living out of farming.

Mr. SMITH. I did not say "good living", Mr. President.

Mr. BLACK. I wish to place on record at this time the belief that the Congress ought to act on farm legislation before it adjourns, and that at the proper time I shall offer an amendment to the resolution providing for action before we adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the request was simply that the resolution be received and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and it has been so ordered.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. KING. I yield, but not for any controversial discussion.

Mr. POPE. As I understand the present situation, the report of the resolution has nothing to do with the matter of time when the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry may act upon the bill which has been referred to, or any other bill. In the session of the committee this morning, no discussion was had as to the effect of this resolution upon the time when the committee may act upon any bill before it. That was my understanding all the time. In the committee there was considerable discussion as to the desirability of holding sectional meetings of the subcommittee in order to find out what the farmers in the various localities think of this particular proposed legislation; but no statement was made and no action was taken by the committee in reference to the time when action may be had upon the so-called general farm bill, except such as may be inferred from any general discussion concerning the holding of the sectional meetings.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wish to ask the Senator from Idaho whether the appointment of the subcommittee this morning was for the specific purpose of considering the bill introduced by him and by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. MCGILL].

Mr. POPE. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. And whether the regional or sectional hearings provided for are to be had upon that bill, or upon the subject covered by that bill.

Mr. POPE. Upon the subject covered by the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. The general agricultural situation with reference to legislation, I presume?

Mr. POPE. Yes; and the resolution which has been offered refers to the general subject matter covered by the bill, and has as well a specific reference to the bill itself.

Mr. BARKLEY. So that the resolution that was adopted, and the discussion that was indulged, would not preclude the consideration of legislation at this session if the subcommittee and the committee should decide to report a measure before the Congress shall have adjourned?

Mr. POPE. That is my understanding.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. KING. I will yield for a moment.

Mr. SMITH. I will take only a moment.

My clear understanding, as chairman of the committee, was that it would be better to have this matter thoroughly investigated during the recess of Congress, and a report submitted when Congress shall reconvene in January. I am not trying to block any legislation; I am trying to get good, common-sense legislation. As chairman of the committee, I have no purpose, and I do not think any other Senator has a purpose, to delay merely for the purpose of delay. We want to get good, common-sense, permanent legislation, and we are going to take our time to get it.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA TAXES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7472) to provide additional revenue for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am opposed to the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS]. Even if it possessed merit, it would have no place in the measure now under consideration. It is a rider upon a District of Columbia revenue bill, and it deals with a subject of great importance, affecting the entire Nation. It is a measure which seeks to nullify in many important respects the antitrust laws and to aid in the creation and maintenance of monopolies. I repeat that it is a rider, and riders are universally condemned. Unfortunately, efforts are not infrequently made to attach to measures of importance—measures which are absolutely necessary for the public welfare—riders, so-called, which have no relation whatever to pending legislation, or to the measures to which they are sought to be attached. Advantage is taken of a situation, which it is believed will secure legislative approval of propositions which, standing alone, would not obtain the approval of Congress. Occasionally important and necessary legislation is marred and disfigured by including therein propositions entirely foreign and alien, and which, as I have indicated, if compelled to rest solely upon their own merits, would fall.

I repeat that riders are universally condemned. They have been employed to obtain approval of unjust, unsound, and often obnoxious legislation. In some legislative bodies, amendments in the form of riders to measures under consideration, are not permitted. To be considered they must be germane, and logically connected with the bill to which they are offered as amendments. In other words, they must be legitimately connected with the subject under consideration. I need not further elaborate the point that riders are deformities which cannot be defended. They often defeat sound and wise measures, and introduce foreign and extraneous matters into the legislative arena.

We have before us a bill dealing exclusively with District of Columbia affairs. It relates solely to taxation, and its purpose is to obtain revenue to meet the expenses of the Capital of the Nation.

The Committee on the District of Columbia, after due deliberation, agreed upon a bill exclusively dealing with revenue matters. However, as an amendment to the bill the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] offered the rider which has just been read, and which everyone conceded was a rider and had no place upon the bill, and which could not be defended upon the ground that it was proper legislation. I opposed the rider, but it was adopted. I filed a minority report which dealt only with the rider, and in that report I stated that the amendment—

> • • • is wholly irrelevant and improper. It is not intended to provide revenue for the District of Columbia, or to meet the tax situation or to aid the District in meeting its deficits. It is an indefensible provision which has no place upon H. R. 7472, and should be stricken from the bill.

I further stated:

> There can be no justification in my opinion for attaching riders to revenue measures, and for that matter to any form of legislation. • • • Apparently it is thought that by attaching this rider to the bill, which must be passed within a short time to meet the imperative demands of the District of Columbia, there is a chance to secure its passage. Certainly the measure, if it has merit, can be brought before the Senate upon motion and there stand or fall according to its merits; but it is improper to take advantage of the desperate condition of the District of Columbia, which will be without funds within a few days, and employ this proposed tax bill as a vehicle to secure the passage of a measure which seeks to repeal the Sherman antitrust law and to permit price fixing in many States and thus to affect business and economic conditions throughout the United States.
> The amendment seeks to repeal the antitrust laws and so, in my opinion, by legalizing price fixing, will result in monopolistic practices.
> Under the misleading titles of a "fair-trade practice" bill, or an "enabling act" to enable the States to enact so-called State fair-trade-practice acts, but always under the representation that it is merely a measure to prevent loss-leader selling, we are now confronted with a demand that the Sherman Antitrust Act be rendered innocuous, if not repealed in part, and that certain types of trade, based upon price-fixing, be legalized in interstate commerce.

In my report I further stated that for a number of years an aggressive campaign had been waged to secure congressional legislation which would permit price fixing and material changes in the antitrust laws. I further added that these efforts had failed, but that during the past few years demand had been made by some organizations to attain the objectives which had been heretofore prevented by Congress.

I further pointed out the fact that a bill was pending before the Senate, known as S. 100, and that it had been offered as a rider to the revenue bill under consideration. In the minority report I pointed to the fact that the Sherman antitrust law declared illegal every contract, combination in the form of trust, or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations; and that this rider seeks to amend such law by providing that contracts or agreements prescribing minimum prices for the resale of certain commodities shall not be illegal.

The purpose of S. 100, as I indicated in the minority report, and the rider which is attached to the bill under consideration, was to permit price fixing in connection with the sale of various commodities. I stated that the Federal Trade Commission, and other Federal agencies, national consumers' organizations, farm and labor organizations, and economists of note understand the basic unsoundness of the rider and of the hidden attack on consumers, and have indicated their disapproval of the measure.

A number of States have enacted laws under the terms of which, as I interpret them, contracts may be made which will permit monopolies and the fixing of prices.

As stated by the Federal Trade Commission, many of these State laws are directly and irreconcilably in conflict with the present Federal laws in respect of resale-price maintenance. In other words, S. 100 and the Tydings rider permit resale-price maintenance and, as stated, the fixing of prices. If the antitrust laws are repealed, then it is believed by some manufacturers and many retailers that the way will be clear for resale-price maintenance, which, I may add, would inevitably mean that monopolistic practices would become numerous.

I am repeating when I state that the Senator from Maryland offered some time ago a measure (S. 100) which is now upon the calendar, the purpose of which was to repeal all antitrust laws insofar as they apply to price-fixing agreements in those States in which State legislation permits such agreements. That bill has not been acted upon by the Senate and it is now offered in the form of an amendment as a rider to the tax bill relating solely to the District of Columbia.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does not the amendment provide that the Sherman antitrust law and Clayton Act shall be applicable to all the rest of the country except the District of Columbia?

Mr. KING. No, Mr. President.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does not the amendment make an exception? The amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland provides—

> That the preceding proviso shall not make lawful any contract or agreement, providing for the establishment or maintenance of minimum resale prices on any commodity herein involved, between manufacturers or between producers or between wholesalers or between brokers or between factors or between retailers or between persons, firms, or corporations in competition with each other.

That does away with the Sherman antitrust law and the Clayton Act here in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Title VIII applies not merely to the District of Columbia. The provision with respect to the Sherman antitrust law applies to the whole country. The amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland, if it shall be adopted, will apply to the whole country, and not alone to the District of Columbia.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee's [Mr. McKELLAR] position, if I understand it correctly, is not correct. I think the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] has correctly stated that the amendment attached to the pending measure by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] would in effect repeal the antitrust laws in all States in which legislation had been enacted permitting agreements authorizing the fixing of prices of commodities insofar as the antitrust laws related to such agreements. In other words, in a number of States, laws have been enacted which permit contracts and agreements prescribing minimum prices for the resale of commodities. As a result of these enactments, contracts are made and prices fixed without being subject to the antitrust laws unless such contracts are entered into between corporations or individuals in different States. There has been a powerful movement, largely promoted by the National Association of Retail Druggists, to repeal the antitrust laws to the extent that price fixing might be permitted in those States which enacted laws legalizing combinations and agreements fixing minimum prices and providing for price maintenance.

As I was saying when interrupted by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] introduced S. 100—which is in effect the amendment now under consideration—and a similar bill was introduced in the House. The Senate bill has not been acted upon by the Senate, though it has been on the calendar for some time.

Mr. President, I do not agree with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] in the statement which he made a few moments ago that forces which were formerly opposed to the provisions of the amendment—being S. 100—have no particular objection to it now. As a matter of fact, I know there are strong, indeed, violent objections to this measure by consumers' organizations, agricultural and labor organizations, and many groups of our citizenship. The Senator states that the subject was taken up with the Attorney General and "we worked out the amendment which has been offered."

Mr. President, my information is not in harmony with the statements of the Senator. Even if the Attorney General had assented to the amendment I would question his right to do so; and certainly I would not feel that the Senate, or any Member of the Senate, was bound thereby. I deny the right of the Department of Justice to consent to the repeal of antitrust laws, or to adopt any course that would permit monopolistic practices. The evils of monopoly have been experienced by the American people, and years ago they determined to enact legislation to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies. The Sherman law was supplemented by the Clayton Act, and upon a number of occasions Congress has declared its purpose to prevent monopolies or monopolistic practices. I cannot believe that the Government, or any responsible officer of the Government, will approve of any measure that weakens or impairs the Federal antitrust laws. Indeed, I believe the sentiment in the executive departments, as well as throughout the country, is to strengthen such laws, to the end that there may be free competition and full opportunity for private persons and private interests to engage in trade and commerce, without apprehension that the heavy hand of monopoly will be laid upon them.

Mr. President, as I have stated, S. 100 is in substance the rider attached to this bill. With respect to S. 100 the President of the United States has expressed his disapproval of the same. On the 24th of April of this year the President sent a communication to the Vice President expressly dealing with S. 100, the so-called Tydings bill. His communication is as follows:

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

SIR: My attention was called to S. 100, which would render legal certain contracts for the maintenance of resale prices now illegal under Federal law. I requested the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission to give me a recommendation on this bill, and I attach his reply on behalf of the Commission.

The present hazard of undue advances in prices, with a resultant rise in the cost of living, makes it most untimely to legalize any competitive or marketing practice calculated to facilitate increases in the cost of numerous and important articles which American householders, and consumers generally, buy. You will note that the Federal Trade Commission has made no study of the effect of resale-price maintenance on consumers since 1929, but the Commission does mention a reputable body of informed opinion to the effect that such control of resale prices would be harmful to the consuming public. Indeed, the Commission says: "There is great probability that manufacturers and dealers may abuse the power to arbitrarily fix resale prices by unduly increasing prices, resulting in bitter resentment on the part of the consuming public, especially in this period of rising prices."

Since we seem to be in a period of rising retail prices, this bill should not, in my judgment, receive the consideration of the Congress until the whole matter can be more fully explored. Conceivably, the Congress might approve having the Commission bring down to date the study which it made 8 years ago by examining the economic effects of resale-price maintenance under the novel and rapidly changing conditions now attending business in this country.

Faithfully yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

Senators will perceive that the President refers to a report submitted by the Federal Trade Commission dealing with price fixing and cognate evils. The Chairman of the Commission addressed a communication to the President under date of April 14, 1937, in which the so-called Tydings bill, or the Tydings-Miller bill, which is the same, was reviewed. The communication is as follows:

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION,
April 14, 1937.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Receipt is hereby acknowledged of your memorandum of April 7, 1937, transmitting Secretary Morgenthau's letter of April 6, 1937, and requesting a recommendation on the Tydings-Miller bill. The Commission has not heretofore expressed an opinion as to the merits of this bill for the reason that it deemed it to be a matter of legislative policy for determination by yourself and the Congress.

The Tydings-Miller bill would amend the antitrust laws so as to legalize contracts and agreements fixing minimum resale prices for goods sold in interstate commerce and resold within the jurisdiction of any State where such contracts or agreements as to intrastate commerce have been legalized. A number of States now have such statutes.

Many of these State laws and the Tydings-Miller bill are directly and irreconcilably in conflict with the present Federal law on resale-price maintenance. Public policy since the passage of the Sherman Antitrust Act in 1890 has been opposed to resale-price maintenance. Numerous court decrees have been entered under the Sherman Act and numerous orders to cease and desist have been issued by this Commission and affirmed by the courts in conformity with the public policy expressed in the Sherman Act and in the Federal Trade Commission Act. Enactment of the Tydings-Miller bill would in its practical effect void such decrees and orders and constitute a reversal of what has been public policy for many years.

Since State laws legalizing resale-price maintenance differ in the various States, and since under the proposed Federal legislation Federal exemption from the antitrust laws would be conditioned upon the legality of similar contracts in intrastate transactions, the Tydings-Miller bill would modify the antitrust laws in differing degrees in different States. Thus not only would it leave the Federal antitrust laws in full force and effect as to those States which do not legalize resale-price maintenance, but there would be divergent policies as to those States which legalize resale-price maintenance, because of the differing terms of the different statutes in the respective States. Thus the Federal Government would be under the necessity of attempting to enforce divergent regulatory policies toward shipments made by the same manufacturer to dealers located in different States, because of the differences in the respective State statutes.

A peculiar feature of many of the State laws which would, under a recent decision of the Supreme Court, speaking through Mr. Justice Sutherland (57 S. Ct. 147), thus be made binding upon interstate commerce is that they require wholesalers and retailers to conform to the provisions of private resale price maintenance contracts to which they are not parties. Thus a private contract, the provisions of which are determined without public hearing and apart from any public supervision as to reasonableness, is made binding upon all dealers and the consuming public.

With respect to the economic phase of this matter, the Commission has not made a recent study of resale-price maintenance. However, in 1929 the Commission did undertake such a study, reporting to the Congress thereon in 1931 (H. R. 546, 70th Cong., 2d sess.). In that report the Commission said:

"The position taken by both proponents and opponents of resale-price maintenance are based on the belief that such maintenance of prices will limit retail competition. * * * The real crux of the question, therefore, is whether injury done to the consumers' interests through the elimination of dealer competition with respect to price-maintained articles would be greater than the damage now alleged to be done to the interests of manufacturers and distributors of trade-marked, nationally advertised brands when they are used as leaders. Neither injury is capable of exact measurement, but, in the opinion of the Commission, the potential damage to consumers through price fixing would be much greater than any existing damage to producers through this form of price cutting."

The general opposition of economists and consumers to this type of legislation is noteworthy. A questionnaire sent to members of the American Economic Association some years ago, by Carroll W. Doten professor at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, resulted in a vote of 401 to 87 that the manufacturer should not have the legal right to control the retail prices of his products.

There is great probability that manufacturers and dealers may abuse the power to arbitrarily fix resale prices by unduly increasing prices, resulting in a bitter resentment on the part of the consuming public, especially in this period of rising prices.

Replying to your inquiry as to the five complaints issued against certain distillers by this Commission, referred to by Secretary Morgenthau, there are enclosed herewith, for your information, copies of those complaints. In substance, these dealers are charged with maintaining uniform minimum resale prices in interstate commerce and with enforcing agreements with respect thereto by unlawful methods, such as the use of blacklists, boycott, threats of boycott, and other coercive methods incidental to the enforcement of their resale-price policies.

With great respect, I am,
Very truly yours,

W. A. AYRES, Chairman.

The President in his letter correctly appraises the purposes and the effect of this amendment, which, as I have stated, is the Tydings-Miller bill. He states that it would render legal certain contracts for the maintenance of resale prices now illegal under Federal law.

As I have indicated, the Sherman antitrust law was to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies; but it is now designed by this amendment to permit contracts and agreements which are in restraint of trade and which permit the maintenance of resale prices. Retail druggists' organizations and certain other organizations have maintained an active lobby for a number of years to secure the repeal of the antitrust laws in order that they might with impunity fix and maintain prices within their respective States. They were successful, as I have indicated, in a number of States in obtaining legislation legalizing contracts and agreements to fix prices and create monopolies. These State statutes have been effective in promoting price-fixing and monopolistic practices, so long as they were intrastate; but there was hanging over the transactions the Federal antitrust laws, which afforded some protection to the consumers in such States. It was believed by the organizations just referred to that if they could secure the enactment of a Federal statute that would lift the antitrust laws from those States in which price fixing and monopolies were legalized they would be able to carry out their purposes and fix prices and entrench themselves behind monopolistic bulwarks. If the rider is adopted and becomes law, it will permit manufacturers and distributors in New York, for instance, to enter into contracts with retailers in California, and to fix and maintain retail prices, though monopolies in the commodities referred to might result. And I might add that in California and other States it has been held that if the retail vendee gives notice to the public of his price-fixing contract with the distributor or manufacturer in New York no other person in the State may sell the commodity at a price below that fixed in such contract.

I might add, in passing, that the Federal antitrust laws would not have the same meaning in all States. In those States where laws are passed permitting resale price fixing the efficacy of the Federal statutes would be impaired, but in those States which have not legalized price fixing the antitrust laws would be effective. In the communication of the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission it is clearly indicated that the enactment of the rider would modify the antitrust laws in differing degrees in different States. It would leave such laws in full force and effect in those States which did not legalize resale-price maintenance; but there would be divergent policies in those States which legalize resale-price maintenance; and the result would be that the Federal Government would be under the necessity of attempting to enforce divergent regulatory policies toward shipments made by the same manufacturer to dealers located in different States.

Mr. President, I affirm in all seriousness that the provisions of the rider, if enacted into law, will legalize price fixing and further monopolistic practices, the consumers of the country will be penalized, and inordinate profits reaped by manufacturers and retailers.

I refer again to the communication of Commissioner Ayres to the President, in which he states that the enactment of S. 100 would, in its practical operation, modify, if not render inoperative, existing court consent decrees and orders of the Commission against price fixers, and thus practically terminate present Federal Trade Commission proceedings against a number of distillers. It would seem, Mr. President, wholly unjustifiable to repeal or modify the antitrust laws; to legalize price fixing; to make possible, indeed certain, the increase of commodity prices; to nullify court decrees entered for the protection of consumers against monopolies; and, in my view, it is more reprehensible to bring about such results without due consideration and by a rider attached to a revenue measure dealing solely with the District of Columbia.

If the antitrust laws are to be repealed or modified, if monopolies are to be validated and legalized, then there should be a searching investigation made and all available information weighed and considered in order to determine the advantages and disadvantages that would follow such legislation.

I repeat when I say that it is not fair to the residents of the District of Columbia to have their tax bill made the vehicle of general legislation which will affect the economic and industrial life of the entire country.

May I again refer to the letter of the President to the Vice President wherein he states that—

> The present hazard of undue advances in prices, with a resultant rise in the cost of living, makes it most untimely to legalize any competitive or marketing practice calculated to facilitate increases in the cost of numerous and important articles American householders and consumers generally buy.

The President further refers to the statement of the Commissioner of the Federal Trade Commission, which in substance states that the effect of resale-price maintenance would be harmful to the consuming public; and he quotes from the Federal Trade Commission report, which states that—

> There is great probability that manufacturers and dealers may abuse the power to arbitrarily fix resale prices by unduly increasing prices, resulting in bitter resentment on the part of the consuming public, especially in this period of rising prices.

Mr. President, a number of Senators who were detained from the Senate by committees have returned to the Senate Chamber, and I may, therefore, be pardoned for briefly covering a few points already discussed.

There is, as I have indicated, upon the calendar S. 100. This measure has not been acted upon, though it has been on the calendar for some time. That bill seeks to legalize price maintenance and to permit contracts and agreements which I believe to be in restraint of trade. A number of States have enacted laws under which these price-fixing agreements and contracts which are in restraint of trade are legalized, as a result of which those entering into such contracts and agreements are free from prosecution under any State laws dealing with monopolies and price-fixing agreements. I have indicated that there are groups of manufacturers and retailers who are determined to have the Federal antitrust laws repealed or modified in order that they may engage in monopolistic practices and enter into contracts which in effect constitute restraint of trade. I should state, however, that many manufacturers are opposed to the so-called Tydings bill and the amendments under consideration. They do not favor monopolistic practices or price fixing. They believe in fair and legitimate competition and look with disfavor upon State laws which legalize monopolistic practices, and, as I have stated, upon the movement to nullify Federal antitrust laws. They appreciate the fact, as indicated in the communication of the President to the Vice President, that there would be an undue advance in prices, with a resultant rise in the cost of living, if the Federal antitrust laws should be repealed or devitalized in the manner permitted by this rider.

Mr. FRAZIER. It seems to me hardly fair that the manufacturers of products should say to retailers to whom they sell their products how much the consumer must pay for the products.

Mr. KING. The Senator's view is I think generally approved by the American people, but it is the purpose of the Tydings amendment to permit that to be done. To illustrate, if a Michigan manufacturer contracts at the present time to sell his commodities in the State of North Dakota, or any other State in which price-fixing laws have been enacted, the antitrust laws would be applicable; but if the Tydings amendment is enacted into law, then the antitrust laws would not be operative to prohibit price-fixing and other monopolistic practices in such States. In that event in those States prices could be fixed so high as to be oppressive, and monopolistic practices encouraged and developed.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah if he understands that this amendment—title VIII—would allow manufacturers to fix the prices at which retailers must sell their products to consumers.

Mr. KING. In reply may I say that if this amendment shall be enacted into law, it would seriously weaken the antitrust laws in all States which have enacted laws permitting the fixing of minimum prices for the resale of commodities.

In fact, the enactment of the amendment would permit manufacturers and distributors to fix prices at which retailers must sell their products to consumers in those States which have enacted laws permitting minimum prices for the resale of commodities.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I suggest that the Senator might offer an even more fundamental complaint. Regardless of the merits of this amendment, it is perfectly obvious that not 5 percent of the membership of the Senate will know anything whatever about the amendment when the Senate votes upon it. It is perfectly obvious that the Senate has reached the point of exhaustion in respect of the consideration of legislation; and if the Senate has any prudent consideration whatever for the country, instead of trying to do some of these intricate things it will quit and go home.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think the Senator is substantially correct. The tax bill before the Senate has many important and complex features and complicated provisions, and the amendment now before the Senate is pregnant with difficulties and dangers which I fear are not comprehended by some Senators. Certainly any measure that modifies or repeals or changes the antitrust laws should receive most serious consideration at the hands of committees of the Senate, as well as the Senate itself. Too little consideration is being given to this amendment and its implications and the consequences, I again affirm, are not fully realized by many Members of this body.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Seantor yield?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. McCARRAN. Would the Senator consent to a unanimous-consent request at this time that the pending business be laid aside, and that Senate bill 69 be taken up by the Senate at this time?

Mr. KING. What is Senate bill 69?

Mr. McCARRAN. It is the car-limit bill with regard to interstate commerce. Would the Senator consent to that if a unanimous-consent agreement to that effect were asked for?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, does the Senator in charge of the bill, the Senator from Nevada, think it would be fair to the District and to the country to put aside the pending bill?

Mr. McCARRAN. I desire to say to the Senator what I really believe. I may be mistaken in my belief, but I really believe that the consideration of Senate bill 69 will not take more than a few hours.

Mr. KING. Since the Senator from Nevada has charge of the bill, I do not know whether I could properly interpose an objection, although I call his attention to the fact that it is imperative that this tax bill be enacted into law at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. TYDINGS. I call for the regular order.

Mr. KING. I have the floor, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). The regular order is called for. The Senator from Utah has the floor.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, while the Senator from Utah has the floor, out of courtesy to me I ask the privilege of saying that when this bill shall have been disposed of I shall move for the consideration by the Senate of Senate bill 69.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think it would be a mistake to lay aside the pending bill, and certainly if this were done, and intervening measures occupied the time of the Senate for several weeks, the District of Columbia would be in a most unfortunate situation. It is known that there is a large deficit and that within a few days its funds will be exhausted and current obligations will remain unpaid.

I am repeating when I protest against the amendment which is under consideration, believing as I do that it will interfere with the enactment of needed tax legislation. I again protest against it because of the impropriety and unfairness of attaching riders to appropriation bills.

Mr. McCARRAN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. In view of all the concessions that have been made here this afternoon, I desire to say with reference to this amendment that I am not in accord, and I have not been in accord, with this bill from beginning to end. I only hope we may work out a bill that will be worth while. It is unfortunate to have to work it out in a conference committee. I do not believe that is the function of a conference committee, but it looks as though we shall be forced to do it in this instance.

In order to have this matter concluded, so as to go to conference, while I do not disagree with the Senator from Utah, I believe this tax matter should be worked out for the District, and the conference committee can cut off this amendment just as well as any other. It seems to me that if we destroy this amendment now we may destroy the whole bill. Let us go to conference with the whole bill and then take out that which is objectionable.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, with all due respect to my friend, I cannot follow his conclusion.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, does the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I should like to ask whether it would be possible to reach an agreement to fix a definite time to dispose of the bill on the calendar. The trouble is that the Senator from Maryland has not had an opportunity to be heard. If there could be an understanding or agreement that the bill would be taken up at a certain time and disposed of, I myself would feel that that was the best way to dispose of it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in that connection I wish to state that it is impossible at this time to enter into any agreement as to when the bill might be taken up. Of course, we all understand that it cannot be disposed of on a call of the calendar. This sort of bill cannot be disposed of with the limited debate that is permitted when the calendar is being called. I am certain that it would be possible within the near future for the Senator from Maryland to move to proceed to the consideration of the bill, and while I am not for the bill—not that I am opposed to it, but I have never been enthusiastic about the type of legislation which it embodies—I shall be glad to cooperate with the Senator in an effort to arrange for a definite time in the near future when he may move to proceed to the consideration of the bill on the calendar, if that is any satisfaction or consolation to the Senator.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield to me while I answer?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. That would not be satisfactory to me, because the proposal is purely nebulous. For 5 or 6 months this measure has been on the calendar, and every time it has been reached the clarion voice of the Senator from Utah has said "Over." So I have been unable to secure consideration of the bill, and it is a matter of poetic justice that finally it finds itself on a bill in charge of a Senator who happens to be the Senator from Utah.

Every Member of this body knows where he stands on this bill, and if the Senator from Utah will cease filibustering and give me an opportunity to make a few remarks about the bill, I shall be glad to have a vote, and there will be no delay.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator were more accurate, his position would be more tenable. The fact is that this amendment has never been on the calendar. It is true that although the Tydings bill has been upon the calendar for some time, no motion has ever been made by the Senator to have the bill considered. He could have moved at any time to take the bill up for consideration; but he did not do so. Many measures which were placed upon the calendar subsequent to the Tydings bill being reported have been, by motion, taken from the calendar, considered, and passed by the Senate. But, as stated, the Senator has not availed himself of the opportunity to move for consideration of his measure. He has been content to remain silent. Perhaps the President's communication, dated April 24 of this year, to the President of the Senate, has deterred the Senator from making a motion to take the bill up for consideration. As I have shown, the President's letter is a powerful argument against the bill; and the report of the Federal Trade Commission constitutes an almost invincible argument against its being enacted into law. It is true that upon two or three occasions during the morning hour, and under the 5-minute rule, the Tydings bill, as well as many other bills, were reached; but as Senators know, it is an almost universal rule that important measures—measures which call for discussion and consideration—are passed over when called during the morning hour. Senators frequently object to the consideration of measures which they have introduced, and which are reached upon a call of the calendar during the morning hour, because they believe due consideration during the limited period available is not possible. Upon two or three occasions during the morning hour when the Tydings bill was reached I asked that it be passed; but, as stated, no motion was made to take the bill up for consideration, notwithstanding the request made. May I say that I will join with the Senator in requesting that the so-called Tydings bill now on the calendar be taken up for consideration at an early date. While I am opposed to the bill, I shall not object to its being brought before the Senate at a time when it can be fully and adequately considered. I am objecting, however, to its being considered as an amendment to a revenue bill vital to the District of Columbia, and which must be passed within the next few days if the officials of the District of Columbia shall have funds with which to meet current obligations.

Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. TYDINGS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. KING. I yield first to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Time and time again the argument is made that it is unwise to attach substantive legislation such as the bill of the Senator from Maryland to a tax bill or some other bill. I am not out of harmony with the Senator from Utah on this question. But the bill is here, it is a part of the measure now before us, and we have to vote on it before the tax bill can be disposed of, because I take it that it will be impossible to eliminate it by unanimous consent, or by any other method except by a vote. That being true, and the proposal in title 8 being well understood, I express the hope that we may arrive at a vote on it without unnecessary delay, so that Senators may express their feelings about it. If it is stricken out on a vote, that will eliminate it and simplify the bill, and if it is left in the bill by a vote, it will then go to conference, where it can be disposed of.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I have no objection to the conferees taking such action as the conferees may deem wise, but if I may make an observation——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator from Utah in the committee made the same objections to the bill being attached as an amendment that he is now making on the floor of the Senate. The vote was 11 to 1 in favor of putting it on the bill. The only vote against it in the committee was that of the Senator from Utah, who was present either in person or by proxy. With that overwhelming majority in the committee the Senator from Maryland thinks he is well within his rights in insisting that the Senate vote the amendment up or down. If the Senator from Utah had not objected so many times when the bill was reached on the calendar, it would not now be here in the shape against which he complains.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I regret that the Senator is not accurate in the statement just made. I say again that I objected two or three times only and then during the morning hour, as we all object to bills, even our own measures, when we know it is impossible to consider proposed legislation of great importance during the morning hour. I suggest now that I shall be glad to join with the Senator in having the bill taken up at as early a day as possible, to be fixed by the leader and by the Senator.

My protest is first against the bill itself. I think the President was right in pointing out its evils, and the Federal Trade Commission was right in its objections, as stated in the letter to the President. Farm organizations of the country and many of the consumers' leagues are right in protesting against it, because they perceive its effects in increasing prices because of the virtual repeal of antitrust laws and the fixing of prices by manufacturers and retailers.

Legislation of this kind, to my mind, is inherently wrong. But the Senator from Maryland, or any other Senator, has the right, of course, to have the bill considered on its merits, under proper auspices and at a proper time, when debate upon it may reveal its virtues and disclose its vices.

Mr. President, I have evidence to show unjustifiable increase in prices which have taken place in those States which have by their laws made inoperative the antitrust laws. I desire, however, to call attention to the report made by Professor Grether, who made a careful study of the effect of the minimum-price law enacted in California. Professor Grether is connected with one of the universities of California. His report, made after extensive research and study, may be found in the California Law Review for December 1936. In his report he refers to a survey made by him showing the prices of 134 advertised drug items. I may say in passing that the protagonists of the Tydings amendment are some of the drug manufacturers and retail druggists. For a number of years they have carried on an aggressive campaign for the modification of the antitrust laws and the legalization of contracts made between manufacturers and distributors and retailers specifying prices at which their products must be sold. Professor Grether states in the Law Review referred to that the—> * * * 1934 contractual prices were approximately one-third above the average of advertised prices for the first 6 months of 1933.

The data compiled by Dr. Grether showed price variations ranging from increases of 50 percent on hospital supplies, salts, and soaps; 33⅓ percent on cosmetics, cod-liver oils, deodorants, food tonics, laxatives, liniments, pills, and tablets to slightly smaller increases on many other articles.

While the California fair-trade laws were more or less suspended during the N. R. A. regime, the National Association of Retail Druggists endeavored to establish minimum prices under the codes which would prevent sales below cost plus heavy mark-ups. However, after careful investigation, the N. R. A. officials refused to accede to this demand, finally only a minimum resale price which was set at the delivered wholesale price of dozen lots, or practically invoice cost. Further discussing the effects of the California law, Professor Grether says:

> There can be no doubt that resale-price maintenance under the California Fair Trade Act has made for higher prices on advertised products sold through cut-rate and chain-store institutions. The evidence presented above, in the discussion of price conditions in 1933 in comparison with 1934 and 1935 contractual prices, is conclusive on this point.

The data presented by Dr. Grether show clearly the effect of the California Fair Trade Act on prices in that State. The data show that the independent drug stores, which for years had been on a high-price level, did not materially increase their prices. The same situation exists in other States where there are similar so-called fair-trade-practice acts. But they also show that the chain stores and other popular-price stores were compelled to raise their prices to the higher levels fixed by resale-price contracts with manufacturers. In other words, the manufacturers fixed resale prices at about the same figure as the relatively inefficient independent dealer, or credit-and-delivery service dealer had always charged, but such prices were in many cases far above the prices at which the efficient store and the popular-price stores theretofore found profitable. It is clear that the California plan deprives consumers of cosmetics and drugs of the opportunity to buy these commodities at lower costs.

If these popular-price stores are forced to sell at approximately the same price as the full-service, high-cost neighborhood drug stores, they will lose volume to the small stores and the consumer will be permanently deprived of the opportunity to buy at lower prices through an efficiently operated distribution system. Commenting on this phase of the situation, Professor Grether states—page 697:

Without doubt those consumers, who wish to buy standard drug products with a minimum of professional attention and merchandising services, are harmed by resale-price maintenance, except insofar as they are able to obtain equivalent quality under private brands.

The Federal Trade Commission reached the same conclusion. It reported in part II, page 160, of its report on resale-price maintenance that—

The fact is that consumers live on different economic levels and have varying standards of living. To the housewife purchasing on the basis of $10,000 family income, fine store fixtures, roomy aisles, beautiful displays, courteous salespeople, credit, and frequent and expensive delivery services may be worth the additional cost. To ask the wife of the day laborer to pay the price necessary to cover the additional cost on any goods that both families use may be asking her to pay for service which she cannot afford and which, therefore, she does not desire, because every cent saved in buying may mean ability to satisfy, to some extent, wants that otherwise would remain ungratified.

In California, at least, manufacturers have attempted to benefit by reason of this situation by demanding larger profits. Professor Grether says, in speaking of the California laws:

* * * it is not merely a loss limitation device, but allows the guaranteeing of margins to dealers.

He shows a table on page 681 which indicates minimum retail margins on over 1,000 drug items on which he was able to obtain wholesale quotations on the July 1934 list of contractual items. This list shows an arithmetical average minimum margin of 31.02 percent—of contractual price—which hits fairly close to the 33⅓-percent margin on the selling price—equivalent to a 50-percent mark-up on the cost—which the National Association of Retail Druggists has set as its immediate objective. And this 31.02-percent margin was in 1934. Margins have widened since that time. Professor Grether says—page 682:

It is rather surprising that so high an average [margin] should appear with a plan but recently introduced, for some manufacturers were loathe to raise prices sufficiently from the cut-rate levels to allow wide margins.

Mr. President, New York has enacted a so-called fair-trade practice statute, and it has resulted in an unwarranted increase in prices to the injury of consumers. Under this act, known as the Feld-Crawford Act, there has been a mark-up on costs of cosmetics of 65 percent; drugs, 57 percent; liquors, 56 percent; books, 70 percent; and miscellaneous articles, 60 percent.

In other words, the efficient distributor, who does not need any such margin on these items to make a satisfactory profit on a satisfactory volume of sales, is required by law to take this additional profit. Naturally the increased price to the consumer may result in a reduced volume of sales and no more than his present total of profit for the year's business. But the consumer must pay the increased price, and particularly the consumer who thinks it worth while to make his purchases at the popular-price chain stores throughout New York City and the downtown popular-price department stores.

I invite attention to a statement made by Professor Grether in connection with his investigation which shows the intimidation and coercion which were resorted to in order to accomplish certain results favorable to those who favored the price-fixing plan. He states:

* * * through meetings, called usually at night after store hours so all might attend, personal discussions and informal contacts, the druggists often developed a collective attitude of cooperation with friendly manufacturers as well as the negative one of opposition to those who did not meet the demands of the dealers. There can be little doubt that the plan was an effective element in the whole movement for resale-price control. * * *

The amount of strength that was demonstrated by retail druggists through the organized devices discussed in the preceding pages may best be illustrated by two very famous cases. First, early in August 1934 a well-known aspirin manufacturer was requested by a petition of signatures 20 feet in length to operate under the act.

He did not want to engage in price fixing and take advantage of the State law.

When the petition did not seem to receive the reception that the dealers expected, the published statements in the Northern California Drug News became increasingly antagonistic in tone. It was made clear in these statements that the dealers had the power of substitution even in this case. The slogan was "No Fair Trade Act—No Orders."

That is, unless you accept the Fair Trade Act you get no orders.

The most terse statement of attitude was the following:

"This aspirin is a sort of Napoleon in the patent-medicine army, but then, even the great Frenchman met his Waterloo when the rest of Europe got together, decided that they had enough of him, and cooperated against him."

The outcome of the controversy was that the company issued fair-trade contracts early in 1935.

The company was compelled to issue fair-trade contracts because the opposition was so great and the combination so powerful. If it had not capitulated it would have lost its entire trade in California. Profressor Grether continues:

The second case was publicized nationally and had repercussions throughout the entire country. It is peculiarly well adapted to reflect the state of mind of retail druggists throughout the Nation as well as in California.

In the January 1, 1935, issue of the Northern California Drug News there is an editorial lauding a well-known national dentifrice and antiseptic manufacturer for finally issuing fair-trade contracts after months of request, including a formal petition, on the part of retailers. The company was praised particularly because it guaranteed minimum margins of 18.4 percent, 26.5 percent, and 34.2 percent—depending upon the quantity purchased. However, on July 13, 1935, dealers in California received letters from this firm advising them that it was necessary to withdraw from operation under the Fair Trade Act, since they were making shipments directly from Chicago and hence were involved in interstate commerce.

Immeditely a storm broke loose in California which swept into other States before it had spent itself. On July 17 the northern association passed a resolution condemning the company and urging and advising its members to "discontinue the sale of the products of any and all companies which cancel fair-trade contracts." Similar action was taken in the southern association. The response of the trade was amazing; an almost universal boycott was raised against the firm. For a period it was possible to obtain the products of the firm only from a few cut-rate outlets. An interesting aspect was that a number of large wholesale houses also cooperated by refusing to deliver the items of the company.

It appears that the company had a startling decline in sales in California. Worse still, the antagonism spread into other States and affected sales and attitudes nationally. The outcome was that the company capitulated completely, again issuing contracts in California, and likewise, so it is stated, giving a check of $25,000 to the National Association of Retail Druggists to be used in its fight for price-maintenance legislation.

Mr. President, pressure was brought by various retailers who were availing themselves of the provisions of price-fixing State laws to compel not only retailers but manufacturers and distributors to accept contracts that were issued pursuant to the so-called fair-trade laws. If this amendment is enacted into law, then, in every State in which the so-called fair-trade measures are enacted, the antitrust laws will be superseded, contracts will be forced upon retailers who may not desire to avail themselves of opportunities to increase and fix prices, and also upon manufacturers and distributors who likewise are opposed to such price-fixing measures.

In my opinion, the evidence is conclusive that already in those States which have enacted the so-called fair-trade acts prices have been materially increased and the consumers have been penalized. I predict that there will be a revolt among consumers against measures and policies which create monopolies and which bear oppressively upon the consuming public.

Mr. President, in conclusion, I renew my protest against this amendment. I am advised that there are sufficient votes to secure its passage. I cannot help but believe its evils and dangers are not fully understood by Senators, but I am persuaded that sooner or later there will be an aroused public sentiment against State or Federal laws which encourage or permit monopolies and monopolistic practices and increase prices until they bear oppressively upon the consuming public.

Mr. McCARRAN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Austin	Capper	Johnson, Colo.	Reynolds
Bailey	Caraway	La Follette	Schwellenbach
Barkley	Chavez	Lodge	Sheppard
Bilbo	Donahey	McCarran	Smith
Bone	Ellender	McGill	Steiwer
Borah	Frazier	McKellar	Thomas, Okla.
Brown, Mich.	Gerry	Maloney	Thomas, Utah
Brown, N. H.	Gibson	Minton	Truman
Bulow	Hale	Moore	Tydings
Burke	Hatch	Nye	Vandenberg
Byrd	Herring	O'Mahoney	White

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is not present. The clerk will call the names of absent Senators.

The Chief Clerk called the names of absent Senators, and Mr. BULKLEY, Mr. CONNALLY, Mr. HARRISON, Mr. HITCHCOCK, and Mr. MCNARY answered to their names when called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Megill, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the bill (S. 2067) to provide for, foster, and aid in coordinating research relating to cancer; to establish the National Cancer Institute; and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2193) to authorize the construction of certain auxiliary vessels for the Navy; that the House further insisted upon its amendments to the bill, asked a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. VINSON of Georgia, Mr. DREWRY of Virginia, and Mr. MILLARD were appointed managers on the part of the House at the further conference.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA TAXES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7472) to provide additional revenue for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I wish to make a very brief statement in explanation of the pending amendment.

There is on the calendar Senate bill 100, sometimes called the Miller-Tydings bill, the text of which now appears on the District of Columbia tax bill as an amendment. The bill was first introduced in the House and later in the Senate. Long and extensive hearings by the Judiciary Committee of each branch were held. Many witnesses appeared pro and con on the measure, and finally it was reported favorably both by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate and by the Judiciary Committee of the House.

Because of my inability to get the bill up sooner and the fact that this is the second session of the Congress in which it has appeared on the calendar, I took the liberty of offering it in the committee as an amendment to the District of Columbia tax bill. It is a very short bill.

Forty-two States of the Union have already adopted the provisions of the amendment which I hold in my hand, and it is a law in those States. Only six States in the Union have not enacted such a fair-trade act. Forty-two States already have it. The action upon it is almost unanimous, and will be unanimous, in my judgment, as soon as the remaining six legislatures meet.

This is not an effort to tear down the antitrust law. It is an effort to strengthen the antitrust law, to make it apply so that the small businessman shall enjoy the same privileges which larger businessmen have enjoyed under the Sherman antitrust law through all the years. The bill is against monopoly. It is in behalf of the small and independent business. Those who ask for it are the small businessmen, the Independent Retail Grocers' Association, the independent druggists of America, the book sellers of America. Why do they ask for it? It is because the practices of monopoly have tended more and more to drive the small concerns out of business. Let me give one illustration and for the purpose I will take books.

A book such as Gone With the Wind is published. It sells for a particular price. All the big department stores buy it, and all the independent book stores buy it. The independent book stores sell nothing but books. The large department stores sell a variety of articles, and Gone With the Wind can be bought in those particular stores for less than the stores paid for it from the publisher. The result is that practically all the sales of the book are made at less than cost, and are not made by the book stores of America but by stores dealing in other commodities. As a consequence the book store soon finds it has lost its biggest opportunity to do a good business at a reasonable profit, while the other stores obviously could not stay in business and sell things at less than the price paid for them but make up the loss on the book by the sale of other articles. So in the end the public pays the full price of the book in that fashion.

There is not a line in the amendment which would permit manufacturers to combine with other manufacturers, wholesalers with other wholesalers, or retailers with other retailers.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. TYDINGS. I prefer to finish my statement, and then I shall be glad to yield. I shall only speak a moment or two longer.

Mr. BARKLEY. I merely desired a little information.

Mr. TYDINGS. What does the amendment do? It permits a man who manufactures an article to state the minimum resale price of the article in a contract with the man who buys it for ultimate resale to the public, provided—and this "provided" is mountain-high—that the article about which the contract is written is in free and open competition with other articles. If it is not in free and open competition with other articles, no such contract may be written.

For example, to show that the adoption of the amendment would not result in price increases, let us take the case of a tube of tooth paste. There are on the market 25 or 30 varieties of tooth paste. Under the amendment, manufacturers may not combine with each other for the purpose of price maintenance; but if a manufacturer wishes to say that his particular kind of tooth paste may not be sold by a retailer at less than a certain minimum price, and that minimum price is high, other tooth-paste manufacturers will come in and take his business. The very language of the amendment says that such contracts shall be legal only as to articles which are in open and direct competition with other articles. The element of competition is never absent in a single line of this measure. This is a measure for the small businessman; and the persons who appeared before the Judiciary Committee in opposition to the proposed legislation were not little-business men. They were big-business men. Those who appeared for the proposed legislation were small-business men or their representatives.

Mr. BARKLEY rose.

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I am asking purely for information. I find here that after stating that every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, and so forth, is illegal, the proviso goes on to say:

> That nothing herein contained shall render illegal, contracts or agreements prescribing minimum prices for the resale of a commodity which bears, or the label or container of which bears, the trade mark, brand, or name of the producer or distributor of such commodity and which is in free and open competition with commodities of the same general class produced or distributed by others, when contracts or agreements of that description are lawful as applied to intrastate transactions.

I desire to ask the Senator if that is to be interpreted to mean that the contracts which are permitted under this proviso are permitted so long as the articles are in free and open competition, and so long as the State in which they are sold permits that sort of contract to be entered into and enforced.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. What would be the effect of a law of this kind in a State where there was no such authority to enter into contracts of this kind?

Mr. TYDINGS. The State law would prevail.

Mr. BARKLEY. So the proposed legislation would not in any way infringe upon State laws that might prohibit that sort of contract?

Mr. TYDINGS. Not in the slightest degree.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the Senator that of course that is quite different from the provisions which have been contained in similar legislation which has been pending in Congress ever since I have been here.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is true.

Mr. BARKLEY. And, in my judgment, the change very much improves the proposed legislation.

Mr. TYDINGS. What we have attempted to do is what 42 States have already written on their statute books. It is simply to back up those acts, that is all; to have a code of fair trade practices written not by a national board such as the N. R. A. but by each State, so that the people may go to the State legislature and correct immediately any abuses that may develop. We are trying to decentralize fair trade practices rather than to have the matter dealt with as it was dealt with under the old N. R. A., which tried to put one blanket over the whole country, and which, in my judgment, allowed manufacturers to combine with other manufacturers, wholesalers with wholesalers, and retailers with retailers. Under the pending amendment it is illegal for manufacturers to combine, for wholesalers to combine, or for retailers to combine. The transaction is purely a vertical one from the manufacturer to the retailer.

I could talk longer on the subject. I think, however, every Senator is familiar with it. I believe every Senator has had opportunity to examine into it, because I feel that in every State of the Union many, many of the constituents of Senators have written to them about it, either pro or con. I have never voted for a price-fixing bill in my life so far as I can recall.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. As I understand, the Senator has an amendment on the desk.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is true.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Will the Senator explain just what the amendment does as compared to what is printed in the bill?

Mr. TYDINGS. Originally, as the Senator from Washington will recall, there was a message from the administration in opposition to this measure. I may say that I have been in consultation with the Attorney General's office, and the amendment I have offered was suggested by me and accepted by the Attorney General as curing the objections of the administration; and before I explain it briefly, I think I am now in a position to say that the original objections have been eliminated.

The amendment provides that nothing in this particular provision shall permit manufacturers to combine with manufacturers, wholesalers with wholesalers, factors with factors, or retailers with retailers. That is made absolutely certain. I do not think it was necessary, but I was glad to put it in to place the matter beyond the peradventure of a doubt.

As this is the small-business man's measure, as it is not a price-fixing measure, as the element of competition is always present, and as 42 States have already enacted similar legislation, I ask, on the further ground of State rights and decentralized government, that the action of these 42 States be supported.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I am in favor of this measure. I sat in the subcommittee which considered it in conjunction with the Robinson-Patman bill and other similar bills, and which took much testimony, at a former session of Congress. Afterward, I acted with the present presiding officer [Mr. HATCH in the chair] and another Senator whose name I do not recall as a subcommittee, to consider the Miller-Tydings bill; and the committee reported it unanimously. It was afterward favorably reported to the Senate; but, for reasons which are well known, it never has had an opportunity to be considered.

I am for this measure for two particular reasons. One of them is the broad reason that it is in the right direction with respect to fundamental government. That is to say, it is exactly the reverse of centralization of authority in Washington to fix prices.

This Congress has passed the Guffey-Vinson Act, enabling the central Government to fix prices of coal. This Congress has passed the amendment to the Agricultural Adjustment Act giving the sanction of the Department of Agriculture and of the Federal Government to licenses and contracts for the sale of milk which fixes a minimum price to producers of milk. In effect, the Robinson-Patman law now in force is a price-fixing law which finds its authority here in Washington. My primary objection to all those bills was that they ran counter to our theory of a dual system of government in which the control of production, manufacture, and mining was expressly reserved to the several States, and that they reached over State boundaries and undertook to regulate intrastate commerce.

This proposed legislation is in just the opposite direction. Here is a measure which recognizes our form of government. Here is a measure which says, "We will not go into the State of Vermont with a regulation of prices from any other State in the Union, or from Washington, unless the State of Vermont is willing to have it done." It is that freedom which is left by this measure and expressly sanctioned by it—that freedom of every State in the Union to declare its own policy with respect to its own domestic affairs which appeals to me most strongly.

I have already seen the effect of it. That independence has already been exercised by States of the Union in anticipation of the passage of this or some similar legislation. As has been pointed out, 42 States have enacted similar statutes declaring what they call fair-trade practices with respect to prices, and preventing price cutting, which is unfair and which tends to drive little men out of business. On the other hand, my own State, the State of Vermont, has exercised its independence and its right as a sovereign State to say, "We do not want price fixing in this State." Therefore, the State of Vermont can declare its own policy and have it effective with the cooperation of the Federal Government if this measure is enacted, because, if that is done, no manufacturer doing business in another State and transporting his goods into the State of Vermont can say there that the resale price of his product shall be so much and no less. Whether or not that is wise I am not undertaking to argue. The point is that it is more important to the people of the United States of America to save fundamental institutions than it is to declare themselves upon a mere matter of economic policy. I am more in favor of preserving the independence of the several States, and their right to manage their own affairs than of fixing prices or not fixing prices.

The other reason why I am in favor of this measure is that I think its effect would be to remove a vice in our economic system. It would remove protection to the price cutter. Notwithstanding the marvelous wisdom of the United States Congress, of course, we cannot expect that their laws will operate wisely in all cases and upon all people. That is true of the Sherman antitrust law, that is true of the Federal Trade Commission Act, that is true of the Clayton Act, that is true of the Guffey-Vinson law, that is true of the amendment of the A. A. A., that is true of the Robinson-Patman law. Any law passed by the Federal Congress attempting to apply one uniform, horizontal rule all over the great continent and upon all the different States, with their different types of resources, is bound to have inequities and inequalities and hardships in its operation.

Mr. President, I intend to detain the Senate for only a few more moments. I am for the measure because it restores fair competition, and because it removes protection to the price cutter.

On this question I call attention to the fact that high authority has commented upon price cutting as not a virtue but a vice which is harmful to the consumer. I read an extract from an opinion of Mr. Justice Holmes in a case decided in 1911, as follows:

> I cannot believe that in the long run the public will profit by this Court permitting knaves to cut reasonable prices for some ulterior purpose of their own, and thus to impair, if not destroy, the production and sale of articles which it is assumed to be desirable that the public should be able to get.

I quote from another Justice, Mr. Justice Brandeis, this being from an opinion rendered before he was elevated to his present dignified position:

> The evil results of price cutting are far-reaching. * * * The process of exterminating the small independent retailer, already hard pressed by capitalistic combinations, would be greatly accelerated by such a movement (meaning permissive price cutting) * * *. Shall we, under the guise of protecting competition, further foster monopoly by creating immunity for the price cutters? Americans should be under no illusions as to the value or effect of price cutting. It has been the most potent weapon of monopoly—a means of killing the small rival to which the great trusts have resorted most frequently. It is so simple, so effective. Far-reaching organized capital secures by this means the cooperation of the short-sighted unorganized consumer to his own undoing.

Mr. President, I refrain from further comment upon the measure. I am for it. I think it is a grand step in the right direction.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill as passed be printed in the usual form, with the amendments adopted by the Senate numbered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. KING. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, ask for a conference with the House thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. KING, Mr. MCCARRAN, Mr. TYDINGS, Mr. CAPPER, and Mr. AUSTIN conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the votes by which the House bill 7472 was ordered to a third reading and passed be reconsidered. I had two amendments printed, and I thought those in charge of the bill knew about them, but evidently they had forgotten about them. I was called from the Chamber for a few moments, and when I returned the bill had been passed.

Mr. MCCARRAN. Mr. President, if it be the consensus of the other Members of the Senate, I am entirely content that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma may be considered as having been offered and having been agreed to.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed be reconsidered in order that the Senator from Oklahoma may offer his amendment and have it accepted by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. MCCARRAN. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky has asked unanimous consent that the votes by which the District tax bill was ordered to a third reading and passed be reconsidered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, during the past two winters the Appropriations Committee has reported an amendment to the District appropriation bill. Last year the Senate accepted the amendment. The House conferees objected because it was a taxation amendment. I now offer the amendment to the District tax bill, because it had hitherto been objected to when offered to the District appropriation bill and I ask that the amendment be agreed to and go to conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the proper place in the bill it is proposed to insert the following:

> The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and empowered, in their discretion, to secure and to install, at no expense to the said District, mechanical parking meters or devices on the streets, avenues, roads, highways, and other public spaces in the District of Columbia under the jurisdiction and control of said Commissioners; and said Commissioners are authorized and empowered to make and enforce rules and regulations for the control of the parking of vehicles on such streets, avenues, roads, highways, and other public spaces, and as an aid to such regulation and control of the parking of vehicles the Commissioners may prescribe fees for the privilege of parking vehicles where said meters or devices are installed.
> The Commissioners are further authorized and empowered to pay the purchase price and cost of installation of the said meters or devices from the fees collected, and thereafter such meters or devices shall become the property of said District and all fees collected shall be paid to the collector of taxes for deposit in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the revenues of said District.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, my information is that the amendment is not very agreeable to the District of Columbia Commissioners; but I do not object. Let it go to conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS].

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

LIMITATION OF THE SIZE OF TRAINS

Mr. MCCARRAN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 69, limiting freight or other trains to 70 cars.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, I have no special reason for objecting to the motion made by the able Senator from Nevada. However, I should like to have it understood that the bill will not be considered this afternoon or tomorrow, and not before Monday.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it is not contemplated that the bill will be disposed of this afternoon. It is desirable that it be made the unfinished business and that we go as far as we can in an explanation and exposition of the bill. It is my purpose then to move a recess until Monday.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, a number of Senators have left in the belief that the Senate would not take up the bill today, or even consider it. It is called up rather unexpectedly. I am not objecting to that particularly, but I think that if it is made the unfinished business we will have gone far enough for the day. We will have a few days next week without any pressing legislation, so far as I know, and I feel that after the bill is made the unfinished business the Senate should take a recess.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from Nevada advises me that he does not wish to proceed with the bill this afternoon, and after it is made the unfinished business it will be entirely satisfactory that the Senate take a recess.

Mr. MCNARY. That is conformable to my suggestion, and I shall not object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Nevada.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 69) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce", approved February 4, 1887, as amended and supplemented, by limiting freight or other trains to 70 cars, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to regulate commerce", approved February 4, 1887, as amended and supplemented, be further amended by the addition thereto of a new section, designated as "Section 26a", reading as follows:

"SEC. 26a. After July 1, 1937, it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this chapter to run, or permit to be run, over its line or road, or any portion thereof, any train consisting of more than 70 freight or other cars, exclusive of caboose: Provided, That this act shall not apply in cases of engine failures between terminals."

OPERATIONS OF HOME OWNERS' LOAN CORPORATION IN PENNSYLVANIA

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may offer a brief resolution, and have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that he be allowed to offer a resolution.

Mr. DAVIS. And I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator asks for immediate consideration of the resolution?

Mr. DAVIS. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the resolution.

The legislative clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 157) as follows:

Resolved, That the chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board is directed to transmit to the Senate at the earliest practicable date the following information: (1) The total number of home mortgages and other obligations and liens secured by real estate acquired by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania during the fiscal years ending 1934, 1935, and 1936; (2) the total value of such mortgages, obligations, and liens; (3) the total number of defaults in such Commonwealth in each such fiscal year; (4) the total number of foreclosures in such Commonwealth by such Corporation during each such fiscal year and the amount of money involved; (5) the total number of homes in such Commonwealth acquired by the Corporation during each such fiscal year, the total amount of the loans made thereon, and the amount paid by the Corporation in acquiring such homes; (6) the total number of such homes resold by the Corporation each such fiscal year and the amount realized therefor; (7) the number of agencies or offices maintained by the Corporation in such Commonwealth and their addresses; (8) the name, address, position, and salary of all officers and employees (including permanent and part-time attorneys) employed by the Corporation in such Commonwealth during each such fiscal year, grouping together all said persons employed in each such agency or office.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator whether this is the type of resolution which has been adopted and upon which reports have been made with respect to other States?

Mr. DAVIS. The resolution is similar to one offered by the junior Senator from California [Mr. McADOO]. This is the only way by which we can get the information from the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, namely, through a resolution of the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know about that; I have never had any difficulty obtaining information from them.

Mr. GUFFEY. I object to the immediate consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. DAVIS. I have a letter here from the Chairman of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, Mr. John H. Fahey, who informs me in effect that he would like to have the matter handled in this way if they are to give the information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard to immediate consideration.

Mr. McNARY. Who made the objection?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY] objected.

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, I should like to have an opportunity to read the resolution before I consent to its adoption.

Mr. McNARY. That is always fair, of course. I was going to say to the Senator that I have no interest in the matter other than that a few days ago a similar resolution was adopted, to which I consented, offered by the junior Senator from California [Mr. McADOO], and the resolution now offered follows the exact language used in the resolution heretofore adopted.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the junior Senator from Pennsylvania did not know this matter was to be brought up, I think he should have an opportunity to read the resolution.

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, the resolution asks for information covering several years, and it would result in a duplication and triplication of work. I have no objection except to the necessity of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation going over the records for 3 or 4 or 5 years.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, a similar resolution was adopted by unanimous consent when it was offered by the Senator from California [Mr. McADOO] on May 13.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest that the Senator let the matter go over until Monday.

Mr. GUFFEY. If it were calling for information as to 1 year only, I would see no objection, but I do see objection to requesting information extending over a period of 4 or 5 years, and having a comparison made, because of the duplication which would result.

Mr. DAVIS. Inasmuch as my colleague objects, I ask that the resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will go over, under the rule.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. McKELLAR submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate and House amendments to Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. 6958) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 74 and 121.

The committee of conference report in disagreement Senate amendment numbered 89.

The committee of conference also report in disagreement Senate amendments numbered 93 and 95, and the amendments of the House thereto.

The report was agreed to.

WAGES AND HOURS OF LABOR

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, it was my intention to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the wages-and-hours bill. However, upon conference with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] and the Democratic leader, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], we agreed that I would not make that motion; but it is my intention to ask that that bill be taken up immediately after the disposition of the bill which the Senate has just agreed to make the unfinished business.

In that connection I may state—and I am sure it is satisfactory to the Senator from Nevada—that we understood that probably it would not take long to consider the bill which the Senator from Nevada has asked to have taken up; and it is also agreed between us that if there should be any effort to bring about an unreasonable delay in taking action upon that bill, it will be satisfactory to the Senator from Nevada to let it be laid aside and have it follow the wage and hour bill, instead of having it passed upon first.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I always like to accede so far as I can to understandings between Senators; but the Senate controls its own business.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, all that the Senator from Alabama is doing is to give notice that that sort of arrangement has been made.

Mr. McNARY. If a bill is made the unfinished business, of course it may be displaced by vote of the Senate, but not by another measure being taken up upon an understanding between two Senators. Upon that proposition I stand.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. I did not intend to leave the genial Senator from the State of Oregon under the impression that I had attempted to usurp any of his prerogatives or any of the prerogatives of the Senate, but I thought the Senator from Oregon would be interested in knowing the idea we had and the agreement that we would call upon the Senate to act upon the matter, upon which the Senate alone would have the power to act.

Mr. McNARY. That is true.

Mr. BLACK. I would not have it understood that I thought the Senator from Nevada or my friend the Senator from Oregon would have that power.

Mr. McNARY. I am simply advising the Senator.

Mr. BLACK. I appreciate the counsel and advice of the Senator from Oregon upon that point, but I still insist that we should endeavor to follow the course suggested, if necessary.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, in order that the record may be complete, I desire to say that I concur in the expressions of the Senator from Alabama.

DEVELOPMENT OF USES OF SOUTHERN AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senate Bill 2789 be acted upon at this time. I think no Senator will object to it. It is an emergency measure.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, may the clerk state the title of the measure?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read by title.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 2789) to provide for the establishment and maintenance of a regional research laboratory for the development of industrial uses for southern agricultural products; the first unit to be devoted to the development of industrial uses for cotton and cotton products; additional units to be provided for the study of other crops as additional funds are provided.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, this bill has run the gantlet of the Bureau of the Budget and the Department of Agriculture. A special letter was written by the President endorsing the measure. It was unanimously favorably reported by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. The bill authorizes an appropriation to be made next year. It is necessary that the bill shall be passed at this session, because it provides for donations to be made by the 1st of March by 1 out of the 14 Southern States set out in the bill. For that reason I ask immediate consideration of the measure.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am advised that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry favorably reported the bill. The measure seems to be one which conforms to the general desires of the Senators from the cotton States. It is merely an authorization, and I have no objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with amendments, in section 5, page 4, line 14, after the word "other", to strike out "southern"; in line 17, after the words "peanut hulls", to insert "sweet and Irish potatoes"; and in line 18, after the word "other", to strike out "southern"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed (1) to establish and maintain a regional research laboratory within one of the following Southern States: Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Mississippi, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, and Virginia; (2) to conduct at such laboratory research, experiments, investigations, tests, and demonstrations with respect to the chemical, physical, and physiological properties and utilization and preservation of cotton and its byproducts, including cottonseed, cottonseed meal, cottonseed oil, cotton hulls, moats, cotton lint and linters, and cotton stalks; and the collection, harvesting, preservation, and industrial utilization of whole cotton as a raw material for the manufacture of cellulose, cellulosic materials, lignin and lignin derivatives, etc., with a particular view to the development of wider uses of cotton by industry; and (3) to make public the results of such research, experiments, investigations, tests, and demonstrations. This shall constitute the first unit.

SEC. 2. Such laboratory shall be established only upon the condition that the State in which it is to be located shall provide suitable lands without expense to the United States and shall provide the sum of $250,000 to defray the expenses of the construction of suitable buildings. The Secretary of Agriculture shall within 60 days after the enactment of this act transmit to the Governor of each of the said States information with respect to the lands necessary to provide a suitable site for such laboratory. If thereafter any of the said States, on or before March 1, 1938, submits to the Secretary of Agriculture an offer to provide the lands and money required by this section, with such guaranties for the performance thereof as may be satisfactory to the Secretary, he shall accept from among the offers submitted the offer of the State deemed by him to be most desirable for the location of such laboratory. Upon the acceptance of the offer of any State, the Secretary of Agriculture shall as soon thereafter as practicable accept, in the name of the United States, title to the land offered by such State and the money offered by such State shall be covered into the United States Treasury as a special fund to be used for the purpose of this act.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed to construct, on any lands acquired under this act for the purpose of establishing such laboratory, suitable buildings and appurtenances thereto at a cost not in excess of $250,000. The Secretary is further authorized, for the purposes of this act, to acquire such equipment, apparatus, and supplies as he deems necessary and to cooperate with other branches of the Department of Agriculture, other departments or agencies of the Federal Government, States, State agricultural experiment stations, universities and other State agencies and institutions, counties, municipalities, business or other organizations, corporations, associations, scientific societies, and individuals upon such terms and conditions as he may prescribe.

SEC. 4. Any money received from a State under this act is hereby made available solely for the construction of buildings and appurtenances for such laboratory; and, in addition thereto, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $250,000 for each fiscal year, beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, to carry out the purposes of this act. Ten percent of the appropriations may be expended for administrative purposes in the District of Columbia.

SEC. 5. The Secretary of Agriculture is further authorized to establish from time to time as funds are provided, other than the funds available under this act, additional units on the land acquired under this act for research in other farm products and byproducts such as rice, straw, rice hulls, tung nuts, tung hulls, tung oil, peanuts, peanut oil, peanut hulls, sweet and Irish potatoes, sugar cane bagasse, palmetto fiber, and any other crop and its byproducts that offer promising possibilities for new and wider industrial outlets for agricultural products.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the establishment and maintenance of a regional research laboratory for the development of industrial uses for agricultural products; the first unit to be devoted to the development of industrial uses for cotton and cotton products, additional units to be provided for the study of other crops as additional funds are provided."

MARION SHOBER PHILLIPS

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, on May 10 the Senate passed Senate bill 108, for the relief of Marion Shober Phillips. A similar bill (H. R. 2093) was passed in the House on July 20. The bills are precisely alike. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the House bill.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, may we have the bill read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read.

The bill (H. R. 2093) for the relief of Marion Shober Phillips was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Marion Shober Phillips the sum of $2,500, the payment of such sum being in full satisfaction of all claims against the United States by reason of injuries sustained by the said Phillips on May 27, 1934, while assisting Government officers, under their orders, in seizing and destroying an illicit liquor distillery: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Carolina for the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. WHEELER, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, reported favorably the nomination of Joseph B. Eastman, of Massachusetts, to be an Interstate Commerce Commissioner for a term expiring December 31, 1943. (Reappointment.)

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported favorably the nominations of sundry officers for promotion, and also the nominations of sundry officers for appointment, by transfer, in the Regular Army.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state in order the nominations on the calendar.

POSTMASTER'S NOMINATION REPORTED ADVERSELY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Charles I. Davis to be postmaster at Leesville, La., which had been reported from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads adversely.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to this nomination?

The nomination was rejected.

POSTMASTERS

The Legislative Clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask that the remaining nominations of postmasters on the calendar may be confirmed en bloc.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I observe that there is a long list of postmasters who have been nominated, and the confirmation of whose nominations is requested. Some months ago the House of Representatives passed a bill placing the appointment of postmasters under the Civil Service. A similar measure has been introduced in the Senate, and, as I understand, is now pending before the Civil Service Committee. May I ask the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads what progress is being made with that proposed legislation?

Mr. McKELLAR. Very little progress is being made in regard to it, for the reason that a canvass of the Senate—not of every Member of the Senate but of about 50 or 60—has disclosed that but 3 Senators were mildly in favor of the bill. I think its strongest advocate was the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY]; another Senator who favored the bill was the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE]. The Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] also endorsed it.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. MALONEY. I should like to say at this point that I was not canvassed.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am very sorry. I will canvass the Senator right now.

Mr. MALONEY. I am in favor of the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. That makes four Senators in favor of the bill.

Mr. KING. I will try to neutralize that by saying that I am opposed to it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am quite sure that the Senate is overwhelmingly opposed to it. However, we are trying to work out another bill that we hope will be satisfactory. I do not know whether or not we will be able to do so.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. May I ask the Senator whether in each case the name of the person nominated to be postmaster was first upon the civil-service list?

Mr. McKELLAR. I have not the slightest idea. When post-office nominations are sent in, according to the usual rule, the clerk of my committee takes the nominations for a given State to the two Senators from that State, and if there is no objection on the part of the Senators, the nominations are reported and placed on the calendar. We made no investigation as to whether or not the nominees whose names are now on the calendar were the highest on the civil-service list.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Have the Senators from each of the respective States where are located the post offices to which these nominees have been appointed been canvassed with respect to the nominations?

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, yes; all of them. I will say that I believe the nomination for postmaster at Leesville, La., which was sent in, was rejected at the request of the two Senators from Louisiana.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I may say that, of course, it is common knowledge that the President of the United States several years ago recommended that the appointment of postmasters be made under civil-service rules, and from time to time, during the past 4 years, there has been consideration of that suggestion made by the President. I am curious to know whether the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and the chairman of the Committee on Civil Service can give us any idea as to whether or not the bill to which the Senator from Tennessee just a moment ago referred will be reported at the present session of Congress?

Mr. McKELLAR. I will be very glad to answer the Senator, so far as I am concerned. I am opposed to the bill.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I understand that that is the attitude of the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. And, so far as I have gone, I think my colleagues on the subcommittee are not in favor of it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I think that is very likely to be true.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think it is true, and I doubt very much whether that bill goes through at the present session. Does that answer the Senator's question?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. No; it does not.

Mr. McKELLAR. Well, I am ready to answer, if I can.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. What I am anxious to know is whether the committee in charge of the bill will give Members of the Senate an opportunity to vote upon it by reporting the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Senator mean by reporting it adversely?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. By reporting the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think the subcommittee will report that particular bill adversely. That is my judgment. I may be mistaken; I have been mistaken very recently.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I will not pursue the matter any further this afternoon, except to express the hope that the Committee on Civil Service, with the assistance of the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, will report the bill and have it placed on the calendar, so that Members of the Senate may express their opinions with respect to the matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee that the nominations of postmasters on the calendar, with the exception of the one which was rejected, be confirmed en bloc? The Chair hears none, and the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

COAST GUARD

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Albert A. Lawrence to be professor (temporary) with the rank of lieutenant.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Anthony F. Glaza to be district commander with the rank of lieutenant.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

IN THE NAVY

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations for promotion in the Navy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations in the Navy are confirmed en bloc.

That concludes the calendar.

RECESS TO MONDAY

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Monday, July 26, 1937, at 12 o'clock meridian.

POSTMASTER

LOUISIANA

Charles I. Davis to be postmaster at Leesville, in the State of Louisiana.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, JULY 23, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who art our life and light, we pray Thee to come through the deep blue vault of Thy eternal dwelling place and hear our prayer. Be Thou with us, urging us to find and use our best powers; blend our beings with Thine and make us one with Thee. We praise Thee for the Voice proclaiming, "This is My beloved Son in whom I am well pleased." By kindly word and brave example may we be a most helpful influence in the lives and homes of men. Impress us more and more with the sacredness of our tasks. Oh that every possessor of wealth and every wielder of power and authority would kneel at the altar of our God and pray: "Thy kingdom come, in earth as it is in heaven." O lift the curtain of our country and show Thyself good and just. Through Christ our Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

S. 1144. An act for the relief of the Frazier-Davis Construction Co.; and

S. 2521. An act to authorize the assignment of officers of the line of the Marine Corps to assistant quartermaster and assistant paymaster duty only, and for other purposes.

NATIONAL CANCER INSTITUTE

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 2067) to provide for, foster, and aid in coordinating research relating to cancer, to establish the National Cancer Institute, and for other purposes, and consider the same.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not know that I have any objection to taking up this bill, but it is a new proposition, and I think the House should be thoroughly informed on it. I would not want this bill to go through without a full explanation to the House or what it is supposed to do, with some estimate of its probable cost.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I may say to the gentleman from New York that I and the members of the subcommittee shall be pleased to make a full explanation to the House.

Mr. SNELL. With that understanding, Mr. Speaker, I have no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, how much time will the consideration of this bill take?

Mr. BULWINKLE. I imagine it will take 30 minutes.

Mr. RANKIN. Not over 30 minutes?

Mr. BULWINKLE. No.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE] informed the Chair that he understood there would be practically no controversy on the matter; and, based on that assurance, the Chair agreed to recognize the gentleman for a unanimous-consent request, with the understanding there would not be prolonged debate on the matter.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I think it will take only 10 minutes to answer the request of the gentleman from New York for an explanation. I want to give the gentleman full information.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purposes of conducting researches, investigations, experiments, and studies relating to the cause, diagnosis, and treatment of cancer; assisting and fostering similar research activities by other agencies, public and private; and promoting the coordination of all such researches and activities and the useful application of their results, with a view to the development and prompt widespread use of the most effective methods of prevention, diagnosis, and treatment of cancer, there is hereby established in the Public Health Service a division which shall be known as the National Cancer Institute (hereinafter referred to as the "Institute").

SEC. 2. The Surgeon General of the Public Health Service (hereinafter referred to as the "Surgeon General") is authorized and directed for the purposes of this act and subject to its provisions, through the Institute and in cooperation with the National Cancer Advisory Council hereinafter established—

(a) To conduct, assist, and foster researches, investigations, experiments, and studies relating to the cause, prevention, and methods of diagnosis and treatment of cancer;

(b) To promote the coordination of researches conducted by the Institute and similar researches conducted by other agencies, organizations, and individuals;

(c) To procure, use, and lend radium as hereinafter provided;

(d) To provide training and instruction in technical matters relating to the diagnosis and treatment of cancer;

(e) To provide fellowships in the Institute from funds appropriated or donated for such purpose;

(f) To secure for the Institute consultation services and advice of cancer experts from the United States and abroad; and

(g) To cooperate with State health agencies in the prevention, control, and eradication of cancer.

SEC. 3. There is hereby created the National Advisory Cancer Ccuncil (herein referred to as the "Council"), to consist of six members to be appointed by the Surgeon General with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and of the Surgeon General, ex officio, who shall be chairman of the Council. The six appointed members shall be selected from leading medical or scientific authorities who are outstanding in the study, diagnosis, or treatment of cancer in the United States. Each appointed member shall hold office for a term of 3 years, except that (1) any member appointed to fill a vacancy occurring prior to the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed shall be appointed for the remainder of such term, and (2) the terms of office of the members first taking office shall expire, as designated by the Surgeon General at the time of appointment, two at the end of the first year, two at the end of the second year, and two at the end of the third year after the date of the first meeting of the Council. No appointed member shall be eligible to serve continuously for more than 3 years, but shall be eligible for reappointment if he has not served as a member of the Council at any time within 12 months immediately preceding his reappointment. Each appointed member shall receive compensation at the rate of $25 per day during the time spent in attending meetings of the Council and for the time devoted to official business of the Council under this act, and actual and necessary traveling and subsistence expenses while away from his place of residence upon official business under this act.

SEC. 4. The Council is authorized—

(a) To review research projects or programs submitted to or initiated by it relating to the study of the cause, prevention, or methods of diagnosis and treatment of cancer, and certify approval to the Surgeon General for prosecution under section 2 (a) hereof any such projects which it believes show promise of making valuable contributions to human knowledge with respect to the cause, prevention, or methods of diagnosis and treatment of cancer;

(b) To collect information as to studies which are being carried on in the United States or any other country as to the cause, prevention, and methods of diagnosis and treatment of cancer, by correspondence or by personal investigation of such studies, and with the approval of the Surgeon General make available such information through the appropriate publications for the benefit of health agencies and organizations (public or private), physicians, or any other scientists, and for the information of the general public;

(c) To review applications from any university, hospital, laboratory, or other institution, whether public or private, or from individuals, for grants-in-aid for research projects relating to cancer, and certify to the Surgeon General its approval of grants-in-aid in the cases of such projects which show promise of making valuable contributions to human knowledge with respect to the cause, prevention, or methods of diagnosis or treatment of cancer;

(d) To recommend to the Secretary of the Treasury for acceptance conditional gifts pursuant to section 6; and

(e) To make recommendations to the Surgeon General with respect to carrying out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 5. In carrying out the provisions of section 2 the Surgeon General is authorized—

(a) With the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to purchase radium from time to time without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes; to make such radium available for use in carrying out the purposes of this act; and, for such consideration and subject to such conditions as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe, to lend such radium to institutions, now existing or hereafter established in the United States for the study of the cause, prevention, or methods of diagnosis or treatment of cancer, or for the treatment of cancer;

(b) To provide the necessary facilities where training and instruction may be given in all technical matters relating to diagnosis and treatment of cancer to such persons as in the opinion of the Surgeon General have proper technical training and shall be designated by him for such training or instruction; such persons while receiving training or instruction may, with the approval of the Surgeon General, receive a per-diem allowance to be fixed by the Surgeon General but not to exceed $10;

(c) To establish and maintain, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, research fellowships in the Institute with such stipends or allowances (including traveling and subsistence expenses) as the Surgeon General may deem necessary to procure the assistance of the most brilliant and promising research fellows from the United States or abroad;

(d) To secure for the Institute, from time to time and for such periods as may be advisable, the assistance and advice of experts, scholars, and consultants from the United States or abroad who are learned and experienced in the problems involved in accomplishing the purposes of this act;

(e) To make grants in aid for research projects certified by the Council pursuant to section 4 (c); and

(f) To adopt, upon recommendation of the Council and with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, such additional means as the Surgeon General may deem necessary or appropriate to carry out the provisions of sections 1 and 2 of this act.

SEC. 6. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to accept on behalf of the United States gifts made unconditionally by will or otherwise for study, investigation, or research into the cause, prevention, and methods of diagnosis and treatment of cancer, or for the acquisition of grounds or for the erection, equipment, and maintenance of premises, buildings, and equipment for the Institute. Conditional gifts may be accepted by the Secretary if recommended by the Surgeon General and the Council. Any such gifts, if in money, shall be held in trusts and shall be invested by the Secretary of the Treasury in securities of the United States, and the principal or income thereof shall be expended by the Surgeon General, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, for the purposes prescribed by this act, subject to the same examination and audit as provided for appropriations made for the Public Health Service by Congress. Donations of $500,000 or over in aid of research under this act shall be acknowledged permanently by the establishment within the Institute of suitable memorials to the donors.

SEC. 7. (a) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated a sum not to exceed $750,000 for the erection and equipment of a suitable and adequate building and facilities for the use of the Institute in carrying out the provisions of this act. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, donation, or otherwise, a suitable and adequate site or sites in or near the District of Columbia for such building and facilities, and to erect thereon, furnish, and equip such buildings and facilities when funds are made available.

(b) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $700,000 for each fiscal year, beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act (except subsection (a) hereof). Sums appropriated pursuant to this subsection may be expended in the District of Columbia for personal services, stenographic recording and translating services, by contract if deemed necessary, without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes; traveling expenses (including the expenses of attendance at meetings when specifically authorized by the Surgeon General); rental, supplies and equipment, purchase and exchange of medical books, books of reference, directories, periodicals, newspapers, and press clippings; purchase, operation, and maintenance of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles; printing and binding (in addition to that otherwise provided by law); and for all other necessary expenses in carrying out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 8. (a) There is hereby authorized to be appointed in the Public Health Service, in accordance with applicable law, such commissioned officers as may be necessary to aid in carrying out the provisions of this act.

(b) This act shall not be construed as superseding or limiting (1) the functions, under any other act, of the Public Health Service or any other agency of the United States relating to the study of the prevention, diagnosis, and treatment of cancer; or (2) the expenditure of money therefor.

(c) The Surgeon General with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

(d) The Surgeon General shall include in his annual report for transmission to Congress a full report of the administration of this act, including a detailed statement of receipts and disbursements.

(e) This act shall take effect 30 days after the date of its enactment.

(f) This act may be cited as the "National Cancer Institute Act."

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, this bill is the result of three bills introduced in the House and one bill introduced in the Senate. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON], the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK], and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HUNTER] had introduced bills in the House and Senator BONE had introduced a similar bill in the Senate. Ninety-four Senators joined in introducing the Senate bill.

This bill provides for a cancer institute here in Washington. It does not provide for hospitalization. To begin with, the bill authorizes an appropriation of $750,000 for a building and equipment for the institute, and an annual appropriation thereafter of $700,000. Of this $700,000, $200,000 is to be spent annually for 5 years for the purchase of radium, which is to be lent or rented, under certain restrictions and with the authorization of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Public Health Service, to various communities and to the medical associations.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BULWINKLE. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. COLDEN. Would it not be better to locate this institution near the geographic center of the country in order to make it more accessible to a greater number of people?

Mr. BULWINKLE. The medical experts and the Public Health Service asked to have it here.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BULWINKLE. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. How many patients will be cared for in this clinic?

Mr. BULWINKLE. This will be a research institution, not a clinic. If the clinic and the research institution were together, the clinical part would overbalance the research part. This is strictly and purely for research.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I am heartily in favor of it. I know the Women's Field Army, under the leadership of Mrs. Grace Morrison Poole, of Massachussetts is doing a great work in arousing interest in the eradication of the terrible disease of cancer. They are working under the guidance of Dr. Clarence C. Little, of Maine. It is not necessary to speak of his great contribution in cancer research work. I shall vote for the bill with the greatest pleasure. I commend the gentleman from North Carolina and the committee for their fine achievement in bringing this bill to a vote.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK].

CANCER INSTITUTE BILL HAS MAGNIFICENT AND WORTHY PURPOSES

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, this cancer institute bill which is now before us is something that ought to give happiness to the heart of every Member of Congress. I hope it will pass unanimously, because it is such a grand and glorious thing. From every viewpoint—scientific, emotional, and common sense—it is worthy legislation.

Cancer has been known to the civilized races of the world for 3,000 years, but the cause is still unknown. We must find the cause, for over 150,000 people yearly die of cancer in the United States alone. Every year there are 275,000 new cases.

One out of every eight persons past the age of approximately 40 years dies of cancer. This means that 60 Members of the present Congress will die of cancer. In other words, I estimate about 25 of the gentlemen here today will die of cancer. This is not very pleasant, but true.

ANIMAL AND VEGETABLE RESEARCH—WHY NOT HUMAN?

At the present time the Federal Government is spending nearly $900,000 for the investigation of problems relating to cotton; on forest products, $500,000; and on dairy cattle around $400,000. In addition, untold millions are spent in private endeavor along such lines and in connection with the Government.

My cancer bill, when first introduced, provided an authorization of $2,400,000 for the establishment of a cancer hospital. But that provision is not in this bill, which has been entirely rewritten, and which relates solely to research. Instead of the $2,400,000 carried in my bill, this bill provides $750,000 for the establishment of the institute, and the annual expenditure of $1,000,000 has been cut down to $700,000.

BILL—RESEARCH, CAUSE, DIAGNOSIS, TREATMENT

This new bill rewritten by the committee, and introduced by the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE], provides for conducting research activities, experiments, and studies with relation to the cause, diagnosis, and treatment of cancer. This is the fundamental purpose of the bill.

However, the purpose is also to assist research agencies, both private and public, all over the United States, which is very important. An attempt will be made to coordinate the cancer activities in the United States. As everyone knows, there are private foundations, but it is estimated that they are doing only 10 to 20 percent of the necessary amount of cancer research work. The activities authorized in this bill will not in any way interfere with private research but will cooperate with it.

APPROVED BY DOCTORS; NOT STATE MEDICINE

This is in no way state medicine. The project has been approved by every doctor I know of in the United States. I know of no doctor who disapproves. The hearings before the joint Senate and House committee were attended by the men most eminent in this field in the country.

This institute would also lend radium to the various hospitals over the United States, which is a commendable thing. My friends, radium does not depreciate and can be used over and over again, year after year. This activity will, therefore, be of little annual cost to the country. The original cost of the radium will be the main cost. There is both romance and real scientific achievement in all this.

It will also provide for fellowships. Methods for training technicians will be established, and the study and research with respect to this disease will be promoted.

NATIONAL ADVISORY COUNCIL, CANCER INSTITUTE

There will be a national advisory council of six members, on which will sit the Surgeon General. Their duty will be to review research projects, collect information and make it available to the public, to review applications of all kinds, and to work with the universities and laboratories of the country.

Mr. Speaker, I believe this is the most commendable bill we have had under consideration this year. It is nonpolitical and will be under the United States Public Health Service. I hope the bill will receive your unanimous support.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVERICK. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNELL. I notice that the first appropriation is $750,000 for a building and $700,000 for annual expenses. Was it brought out in the hearings that $750,000 would provide proper buildings for such an institute as is planned, and what will be the ultimate expense of running such an institute?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Texas will permit, I may say that the ultimate expense will be less than $700,000 per year, because $200,000 of that amount, for a period of 5 years, is to be used for the purchase of radium, and the ultimate expense will not be over $500,000 per year. At the present time approximately $140,000 is being appropriated to the Public Health Service for this purpose.

Mr. SNELL. And that will be taken into consideration?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Yes; that will be considered by the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. MAVERICK. And, Mr. Speaker, I want to again call attention to the fact that this is not going to provide for a hospital, as originally provided in my bill. I had hope for a small hospital, at least for research purposes, but that has been eliminated. So it might be called simply a central cancer institute for research and training. The Veterans' Administration states that they are going to have over 400,000 cases of cancer within the next 20 or 30 years.

Mr. SNELL. How do they know that?

Mr. MAVERICK. They know that from their actuarial statistics. They know what the figures have been for the last 100 years, and they know there will be a certain number in the future. The number is no doubt reasonably accurate, just as the figures of insurance companies are reasonably accurate in reference to life and death.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas whether in the research work they expect to do they are going to work in harmony with the medical colleges of the country and with the many research bureaus and foundations that have been set up for the same purpose?

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I may say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that I went to see Dr. James Ewing in New York, who is considered the most eminent authority on cancer in the United States and the dean of the cancer specialists. He told me that the purposes of this legislation are good and that he would be pleased to cooperate.

The leading cancer men and university professors have come here to testify at the hearings, and it is understood that this is to be a central cancer institute which is to cooperate with the universities and private foundations. I assure you it will in no way interfere with them but helps them.

I believe, on account of what has been said about cancer in Congress in the last few weeks, that it helped toward creating a private foundation at Yale of $10,000,000. In other words, this is going to increase private research instead of decreasing it. The fight on this deadly disease will be greatly benefited by the passage of this bill.

I may also state that in California and in the West, generally, there is a comparably small amount of radium. Most of the radium in this country is in New England and in New York. This will greatly increase the benefits in the western part of the United States.

Mr. RICH. I believe this will be a fine thing if they will cooperate with the medical centers; and if there is anything this measure can accomplish that will help to conquer this disease, it will be the wisest money we could spend.

Mr. MAVERICK. I may say to the gentleman that this matter has been discussed for at least a period of 3 years with all kinds of reputable doctors and specialists, and they have substantially agreed on this measure. They think it is all right and look forward to its passage.

Mr. RICH. As I understand, the men who are to have charge of this institute have made up their minds as individuals that they will cooperate with the foundations and colleges of the country. So we will not have duplication of effort and money unnecessarily spent for information already at hand.

Mr. MAVERICK. The gentleman is right. Those in charge want to cooperate with the colleges and foundations. Also there will be no duplication of effort and unnecessary expenditure of money; on the contrary, the establishment of the institute will have a tendency to eliminate those bad features.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I think this is one of the most meritorious measures that has come before Congress. It will bring hope and aid to thousands of sufferers. The doctors have all been unanimous in their approval. And the gentleman, I understand, has not received a single objection to the bill. I sincerely trust it will become law. Anyone who has visited the big cancer ward in a hospital such as Hines well knows that all possible should be done for cancer.

Mr. MAVERICK. Not one objector. I have sent it to thousands of doctors and have spoken over the radio. I have received several hundred letters from doctors over the country, and none have made objection.

I want also to tell you another thing that this bill will do. It will stop the work of a lot of crooked cancer "doctors" and quacks operating up and down the border of the United States and Mexico. It will expose fraud everywhere. This is one of the benefits that will result from this bill. It will promote proper research, coordinate activities, will give the benefit of science to the people, and protect them from crooks. This is really a great thing.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, I want to be brief in adding my endorsement to this bill.

I was one of the introducers in the House of the cancer bill following the Senate bill. This bill has been amended by the able subcommittee which considered it. They have ironed out some of the difficulties, and this is a composite bill that meets the approval of every person interested in cancer bills in the House.

In answer to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], with regard to the medical profession, if he will examine the record of the cancer hearings he will find that every eminent physician, every eminent cancer specialist in the entire United States has endorsed the principles of the Senate bill, in substance, and, as a matter of fact, all of these bills are very nearly the same.

I have inserted in the RECORD an excellent testimonial from the Mayo brothers in regard to this measure. The cancer specialist at Johns Hopkins University testified in favor of it. The bill is very broad in its scope; it is not perfect; it does not meet the problem, probably, as we should like to meet it, but it is certainly a start in the right direction. It means that the United States Government is today, for the first time, taking cognizance of this cancer problem, which, as we all know, is one of the greatest medical problems in the United States. I endorse this bill. I do not think it has been referred to—I came into the Chamber a little bit late—but it is the first time in the history of the Congress that 94 Senators put their names on one bill. That will give you some idea of the nonpartisan character of the legislation, and how we should support it and endorse it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, it is with genuine regret that I rise to ask the House to consider the implications of this measure. I fear my voice will be as one crying in the wilderness. The bill, of course, will pass. It appeals to the sympathy of everybody. But perhaps it will not be objectionable if I ask your consideration of this situation from the standpoint of broad public policy. As the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON] has said, this is the first time that the Government of the United States has undertaken to embark upon such a course. Once we start, the Government must continue.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. MAVERICK. I do not think the gentleman from Washington exactly meant that. This is not the first time the Government has gone into this type of work.

We have worked on syphilis, typhoid, tuberculosis, tropical diseases, and on hundreds of other maladies. Some have been practically eliminated. We have been spending from $35,000 to over $100,000 a year on cancer itself for several years.

The use of the words "cancer institute" is new, and it is a great extension of activities. There ought to be a great extension.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I mean where we have an institute for the study of any particular disease.

Mr. MAVERICK. Yes, we have; under the National Public Health Institute. They study all kinds of diseases, and they have been working on them for years. This is a drive on cancer.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But this is a special and separate institute that is proposed, under a separate board of managers. I cannot yield further. Assurance is given that the establishment of this institute will not finally result in the establishment of a hospital. Members will pardon me if I describe my own experience in that connection. The State of New York maintains at the city of Buffalo an institute for the study of cancer. It has done so for many years. For several years I was a member of the board of managers of that institute. I am no longer such. It was established with the assurance that it would merely be a research institute. But it was pointed out at the beginning or very nearly the beginning of our efforts that in order that the institute should be as effective as possible it was necessary that the institute be able to house patients within its borders. As I recollect, we started with 25 beds. Of course, the treatment was free. That institute has gone along through the years, amply and generously supported by the Legislature of the State of New York in annual appropriations. The clamor for treatment, however, from these poor unfortunates, heard at the institute, has finally resulted in Governor Lehman this year, as I recall, in an official utterance, stating that the time has come when it is the moral obligation of this State institute at Buffalo to treat all patients that may present themselves, free of charge, and a recommendation has been made for the erection of a 100-bed hospital. That is the future I see for this measure, Mr. Speaker, and I ask the House seriously to consider it. We have had this same experience in New York. True, the hospital, as I understand it, has not yet been provided for by the legislature, but it is on the way, and we might just as well face the facts. The pressure becomes irresistible. When Government undertakes the establishment of an institute for the study of a disease, and the presence of patients is regarded as necessary, there can be no limit fixed eventually on the number of those patients.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. How does the gentleman discriminate between his fear of the Government going into the hospital business and cities pretty generally taking care of their sick people?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I make this discrimination, that this is not a Federal function. It is a function of the municipality or of the State.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Does not the gentleman think that health is a very important asset so far as the people are concerned?

Mr. WADSWORTH. If that is true, and we are to follow that argument, then the Federal Government might well establish hospitals of a general nature all over the country for everybody to come to.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Of course, the Government does it for its soldiers.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Government does it for disabilities incurred in war, but the States and the cities might well take care of these other people.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I think possibly this issue on cancer is being somewhat confused because of this one exception: One of the main purposes of this bill is the hope that somewhere some place out of this money some grant-in-aid, whether it is a hospital or not, there will become known to the people of the United States the cause of cancer and the cure of cancer. Most all other diseases have known cures. That is what we are striving at for cancer.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I understand the motive behind the introduction of the bill. It is a very worthy one. I yield to no one in my desire that this mystery shall be solved, but I merely want to lay before the House the picture presented to us. This is not the only disease in connection with which there is mystery. Infantile paralysis is another. I can see great possibility and indeed probability that the establishment of one Federal institute to study a given disease will be followed by the establishment of another and then another and then another. This is a new Federal function that is being proposed, on a small scale, to be sure, but it proposes to put the Federal Government into a field never before occupied by the Government. Thus far great efforts have already been made. For example, the New York laboratory which has been operating for years, distributes its publications to the medical profession all over the United States.

There is a great institute at Princeton University, financed by the Rockefeller Institute. Another one has been provided for at Yale University by a bequest of $10,000,000. There are foundations, committees, and organizations for the study of these things, including cancer, scattered all over this country. Consider the Mayo establishment in Minnesota. Discoveries coming out of any one of them are immediately made available to the whole medical profession.

Now, we must make up our minds whether the establishment of this institute will so hasten the solution of this mystery as to justify us in putting the Government into a new field which will expand, without any doubt whatsoever, in many directions not contemplated by the authors of this bill.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Does the gentleman not think it is worth a try?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I would say so if no one else were trying, but there are hundreds and hundreds of people trying. The best minds in America are working on this thing.

Mr. PHILLIPS. It is true, is it not, that the problem has not yet been solved?

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is perfectly true.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

CONSTRUCTION OF CERTAIN AUXILIARY VESSELS FOR THE NAVY

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (S. 2193) to authorize the construction of certain auxiliary vessels of the Navy; and I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2193) to authorize the construction of certain auxiliary vessels for the Navy, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 2, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: At the end of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following: ": Provided, That such amount may be exceeded by not more than 20 per centum, subject to the approval of the President"; and the House agree to the same.

CARL VINSON,
P. H. DREWRY,
CHARLES D. MILLARD,
Managers on the part of the House.

Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2193) to authorize the construction of certain auxiliary vessels for the Navy submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

On amendment no. 1: Provides for an equal division, subject to $50,000,000, proposed by the House, may be increased to not exceeding $60,000,000, subject to the approval of the President.

On amendment no. 2: Provides for an equal division, subject to the public interests, of construction between Government and private establishments; applies the provisions of the 10-percent profit law applying to the construction of presently authorized combatant naval vessels; and provides for a differential of 6 percent in favor of private west coast establishments in the award of construction contracts, all as proposed by the House.

CARL VINSON,
P. H. DREWRY,
CHARLES D. MILLARD,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of the Members of the House, I desire to make a short statement to the effect that when the bill passed the Senate there was no limitation of cost. When the bill passed the House we put a limitation of $50,000,000. In conference we agreed to the limitation with this proviso:

Provided, That such amount may be exceeded by not more than 20 percent, subject to the approval of the President.

That came about due to the reason that the Navy Department estimates were made in December 1936 and they are apprehensive, on account of the increased cost of labor and material, that it will be impossible to construct the ships within the $50,000,000.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. What information came to you whereby you would expect it would cost 20 percent more than it did in December?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. In a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy, Admiral William D. Leahy, which I will read to the gentleman if he desires.

Mr. SNELL. I would like to hear it. What is the date of the letter?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. It is dated July 3. It reads as follows:

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Bill S. 2193, authorizing the construction of certain auxiliary vessels for the Navy, as reported to the House by the Committee on Naval Affairs, contains a limitation of cost of $50,000,000. This limitation was based on the figure of $48,206,050 which was presented by the Navy Department at the hearings before your committee. This figure of $48,206,050 is based on estimates prepared in December 1936.

Information of recent date indicates that a large increase in the cost of engineering material has taken place, and from all indications this increase will continue above the present level. At the present time it is necessary to increase the estimates for the cost of these vessels.

In view of uncertainty as to future costs of construction, and in order that these vessels essential to naval efficiency may be constructed, it is recommended that the bill as it passed the Senate be approved by the House of Representatives without a limit of cost, or, if it is the will of the House of Representatives that a limit of cost be fixed, that the limit be set at $60,000,000.

Sincerely yours,

WILLIAM D. LEAHY,
Admiral, United States Navy,
Acting Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. SNELL. What time did the House pass the bill?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I do not know at the moment, but I refused when they sent this to my committee to ask that the bill be changed when the bill was presented to the House.

Mr. SNELL. Does not the gentleman think that he should have done that when the estimates had already been revised 20 percent upward?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. No. I was hoping that we could convince the Senate that we could construct these vessels within $50,000,000. I was unwilling, therefore, even in conference, to raise it to $60,000,000. We agreed upon the proviso which leaves it discretionary with the President, if the exigencies of the occasion demand it, to ask Congress to increase it by an additional $10,000,000.

Mr. SNELL. Is there any doubt in the gentleman's mind what will happen if we leave it discretionary?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes; there is considerable doubt, because it may be that they can still build these vessels within $50,000,000. The testimony before the committee was that they hoped to build them within the $50,000,000. I was desiring to hold down this appropriation to $50,000,000, and was so desirous in conference with my other conferees of holding it down to $50,000,000.

Mr. SNELL. But the gentleman did not make any statement to the House that the vessels had been estimated to cost more than $50,000,000.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. No; because I was still hopeful that the vessels might be built within the $50,000,000.

Mr. SNELL. Does not the gentleman think he ought to have stated that he had a communication from the Navy Department stating that they could not build the vessels within the original estimate?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. In conference the Senate insisted on raising the amount. I insisted that it should remain at $50,000,000. We finally compromised by making it discretionary with the President to increase the amount by 20 percent if necessary.

Mr. SNELL. Does not the gentleman know that when he leaves it that way the ships will cost $60,000,000?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I doubt it. I hope not. Let me call this language to the gentleman's attention: It is provided that such amount may be exceeded by not more than 20 percent, subject to the approval of the President. I assume that the President is not going to approve an additional $10,000,000 unless the bids are so high that it is impossible to get the ships built for the $50,000,000.

Mr. SNELL. Can the gentleman point to any definite act on the part of the President that shows he has ever cut down an appropriation or made any definite move to keep them down?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Oh, yes.

Mr. SNELL. I wish the gentleman would point out one.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I am not going to get into that phase of the matter, I am not going to enter into a partisan discussion of the Budget system. We are all very anxious to hold this cost down to $50,000,000.

Mr. SNELL. I am very anxious to, also, but I think you have opened the door to raise the cost to $60,000,000.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I do not agree with the gentleman.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. SABATH. Does this apply to the two battleships?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. No; not at all.

Mr. SABATH. What is included in the $50,000,000 to $60,000,000?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. This includes six ships that are known as auxiliary ships; that is, not fighting ships. It does not apply to battleships.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. The bill passed the House on the 9th of July.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is probably true.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Why did not the gentleman come in at that time for an increased amount?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. For the simple reason that I was hoping to be able to convince the Senate that $50,000,000 should be the limit because the facts, in my opinion, justified a limitation of $50,000,000. Being unable to convince the Senate I accepted this proviso.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. TABER. Does not the gentleman feel that instead of discretion being delegated to the President that the House should keep that authority itself?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. It is an authorization only. It does not follow that it will be exercised. The Appropriations Committee of the House has got to make the appropriations. This merely permits the Appropriations Committee to make appropriations of $10,000,000 more than the bill carries if recommended by the President.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. SCOTT. This increase in the amount does not mean that they can build additional ships.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Not at all.

Mr. SCOTT. This was included merely to be able to build the ships should prices advance to that extent.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. In view of the fact that the gentleman and his committee were advised before this bill was on the floor of the House on July 9 that in the opinion of the Navy Department these ships would cost $60,000,000 instead of $50,000,000, does not the gentleman think that the Members were entitled to have that information before they voted upon the bill?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I may say to the gentleman that the Committee on Naval Affairs thought that these vessels should have been built within $50,000,000.

Mr. BOILEAU. Yes; but in view of the fact those who will be charged with letting the contracts and building the ships were of the opinion they would cost $60,000,000, does not the gentleman think the House should have had that information before it passed this bill

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I may say we were striving to hold this Budget down, and it is purely a guess today as to whether or not these ships can be built for forty, fifty, or fifty-five million dollars, because there is a period of 3 years involved. Conditions may be such that these ships can be built for less than $50,000,000 or they may be built for $55,000,000 or $60,000,000.

Mr. BOILEAU. What estimate did the gentleman have other than from the Navy Department?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. When the testimony was heard by the Committee on Naval Affairs it was thought they could be built for $50,000,000, so I put $50,000,000 in the bill.

Mr. BOILEAU. But before the House took action the same source that gave the gentleman the opinion modified its figures and said they would cost $60,000,000 instead of $50,000,000. May I ask the gentleman whether he has received any additional information from any other source since the bill passed the House?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. No. The matter went over to the Senate and the Senate insisted on the amendment after receiving information that probably the Department would have to come to the Congress and ask for an additional authorization. Therefore we accepted this proviso, which places it in the discretion of the President.

Mr. BOILEAU. Does not the gentleman think we ought to insist on our disagreement to the Senate amendment and leave it at $50,000,000, as the House was advised in the first instance they would cost only $50,000,000?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I may say to the gentleman the testimony justified without a shadow of doubt the committee putting a limitation of $50,000,000 in here.

Mr. BOILEAU. Then let us vote down the Senate amendment.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Contracts will have to be awarded, and if they are over $50,000,000, then the contracts cannot be awarded and the whole thing will have to come back to the Congress for an authorization of probably more than $60,000,000.

Mr. BOILEAU. The House of Representatives should have had that information before a department comes in here and asks for an authorization to build warships or anything else.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. I am going to tell the gentleman what I think will happen as a result of the acceptance of this amendment. Those who are designing the ships will design them with the idea that they will come within a $60,000,000 limitation rather than a $50,000,000 limitation, and the Department will come over to the Appropriations Committee and ask for authority to begin the ships, and when we get into the construction of the ships we will find they will cost $60,000,000 instead of $50,000,000 unless we stick to the $50,000,000 right now. If the $60,000,000 is put in there, it will be there for good.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. May I tell the gentleman what will happen? When the bids are called for and opened and it is found they are over $50,000,000, you cannot let a contract. Then they will have to come back to the Congress and say, "We cannot let the contracts unless we have an authorization of $60,000,000."

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. When we take the estimates that are given for the construction of these ships, we take the estimates of the Government navy yards and we take estimates of shipbuilding yards, which are under private control. We find there is a difference of about 25 percent in connection with some of the bids that have been opened between Government yards and private yards. Who is correct? If you take the Government bids and it comes within the $50,000,000 estimate, you do not know whether it is going to be $60,000,000 or $75,000,000, because the Government in figuring its cost does not figure the interest on the money it has invested in these shipbuilding yards. It does not figure interest on money and it does not figure overhead, which a private yard would have to consider. If you are going to take the Government bids, as you now have the bids, for the construction of these ships, they may cost a hundred million dollars; then the Department will come back here and say it needs $100,000,000 to construct the ships because it took the estimates of the Government shipbuilding yards. And the taxpayer foots the bills just because we are not cautious enough in determining cost in Government shipbuilding yards.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I may say that the bill provides that one-half of the ships shall be constructed by private yards and one-half by Government yards.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. UMSTEAD. If, as the gentleman stated a moment ago, when the bids are asked for and opened, it is found that these ships cannot be built by contract for $50,000,000, the gentleman states that the Navy Department would have to come back and ask for an additional authorization. Why would it not be possible some time for the Navy Department to modify its plans so as to bring the costs within the prices bid? [Applause.]

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I may say to the gentleman in reply to the question, we do not care to put a round peg in a square hole. These ships are being designed for specific military reasons. They must have certain characteristics. They must have a certain speed. They must have a certain cruising radius and a certain capacity, and all that, which makes it necessary that they meet a certain pattern in order to perform a certain military mission.

Mr. UMSTEAD. I am quite certain that the gentleman is not committed to the philosophy that the Navy Department ought to be permitted to be the sole judge of what it should accept in the way of authorization as to every item which it presents to the Congress.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I may say to the gentleman from North Carolina that I do not consider I am qualified, nor do I consider there is any Member of this House qualified, to advise the Navy Department as to the characteristics of any type of ship it is going to construct. I have implicit confidence in the engineering ability of the officers of the Navy Department, and as one Member I am going to be compelled to rely upon their viewpoint as to the type of ship to be constructed.

Mr. UMSTEAD. I am delighted to see that the chairman of the legislative Committee on Naval Affairs has completely shifted his position since he brought out the bill for an additional naval air base at Tongue Point. On that occasion the gentleman was differing from the Navy Department about everything.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. If the gentleman from North Carolina as well as the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] had followed my suggestion when that bill, with reference to building an air base, was here, it would have saved the construction of one ship which will cost the taxpayers of the country $12,000,000.

Mr. UMSTEAD. That matter was pretty well thrashed out on that day, and the evidence was not convincing that a seaplane tender would be needed at Tongue Point.

Does not the gentleman believe the vessels mentioned in this bill can be built for $50,000,000?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I may say to the gentleman that the testimony of Admiral DuBose was along this line. I asked him the point-blank question, "Your estimate is $48,000,000. Can you build it for $48,000,000?" He stated that under the estimates made in December they thought they could. I said, "I am opposed to carrying into the House a bill without a limitation, and so far as the committee is concerned, we will give you a leeway of $2,000,000 additional on account of the uncertainty regarding prices of materials." The admiral and the other witnesses were perfectly satisfied. However, it developed after the hearings that they are apprehensive that they cannot do the engineering work in connection with construction within the estimate of $50,000,000, and they asked for this additional $10,000,000 in case the facts and circumstances in the bids justify such an increase.

Mr. UMSTEAD. They now wish for a 25-percent leeway?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. No; they want a 20-percent leeway.

Mr. UMSTEAD. The difference between $48,000,000 and $60,000,000 is $12,000,000, which is 25 percent of $48,000,000.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The gentleman is correct. However, the gentleman will bear in mind that he controls the purse strings. If he is not satisfied, then the bill would not carry the money.

Mr. UMSTEAD. That excuse may be offered as to every bill authorizing appropriations.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SABATH. In view of the gentleman's experience with the Navy Department and the engineers, he should realize that if the engineers realize they can go up to $60,000,000 on these vessels, they will provide specifications allowing for the most luxurious fittings, fixtures, and everything else.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. May I say to the gentleman from Illinois that I have a higher regard for the men that man the United States Navy than to think they will spend the taxpayers' money simply because they have the opportunity to do so.

Mr. SABATH. I have nothing against the men who man the Navy; it is the engineers to whom I refer.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. LUDLOW. Does the gentleman think it is absolutely necessary to build all these auxiliary ships now? Could we not go at it a little more gradually, and in this way come within the $50,000,000?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. It will take 3 years years to build these ships, and the Navy Department is apprehensive that slowness will increase the cost. The more ships you build at one time the cheaper you can build them. The longer you string them out the higher the cost runs.

Mr. LUDLOW. I do not think the gentleman understood my question. Does the gentleman think it is absolutely necessary to build all of these auxiliary ships now?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes; I think it is absolutely necessary.

Mr. THOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. THOM. Is the cost of construction of these auxiliary ships covered by the cost plus 10 percent feature of the general building program?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes; it is.

Mr. BEAM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. BEAM. If I understood the statement of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, the testimony before that committee showed that $48,000,000, as stated by Admiral Du Bose, would be sufficient to build these ships. However, in addition to this amount, in the House bill an additional $2,000,000 has been allowed.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. BEAM. We voted on that and passed it. According to the statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR], this bill was passed on July 9. The gentleman had in his possession a letter dated July 3, stating that an additonal $10,000,000 was necessary, but no Member of the House had this information. During the meetings of the conferees of the House and the Senate was any additional evidence taken which would justify the Navy Department or the Committee on Naval Affairs in coming here and asking the House to vote an additional $10,000,000, when we had no information of that at the time we passed the House bill?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. May I state to the gentleman the information set forth in this letter was all the information that was before the conferees. This was the information the committee had when we presented the bill, but we were hoping we could convince the Senate to stand with us in building these ships for $50,000,000.

Mr. BEAM. As long as the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs is satisfied that $50,000,000 is sufficient, I suggest that the membership of the House stand with the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs and vote down this additional $10,000,000. [Applause.]

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I may say to the gentleman that the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs is satisfied that the Navy Department, on account of the uncertainty about the cost of material and labor, together with the responsibilities with reference to carrying out of the provisions of the Walsh-Healey law, believes it is almost impossible for it to reach a conclusion that it can build these ships within the $50,000,000 cost. The thing that will happen will be that contracts will not be awarded if the bids exceed $50,000,000. We will come right back here and ask for additional legislation to increase the amount $10,000,000. Therefore, we put in this provision, the responsibility to rest with the President, that if the facts justify it the President is authorized to permit the Navy Department to come before Congress and ask for an additional $10,000,000. If the facts do not justify it, they will not ask for it.

Mr. BEAM. Will further hearings be held concerning the additional $10,000,000?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Not at all.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. MASSINGALE. May I ask the gentleman this question? Is the urgency for the immediate letting of these contracts so great, in the gentleman's estimation, that the House cannot afford to stand upon what it has done in order that the Government may save, perhaps, $10,000,000 or $12,000,000 on these ships?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Let me say to the gentleman you will not be saving one dollar. It is only a question of legislative procedure as to whether you want to authorize it now or whether you want to come back here next fall or before this session adjourns and ask that these contracts be extended not to exceed $60,000,000.

Let me make this statement to the House: This is an administration bill, and this is requested in a communication I have from the President. This is a Senate bill. The House sought to save $10,000,000 by holding the amount down to $50,000,000. The Navy Department is apprehensive that it cannot be built within the $50,000,000. Now, it is up to the House to say whether you want to try to build these ships within the $50,000,000, and if you cannot, to leave it discretionary with the President to go before the Appropriations Committee and ask for the additional $10,000,000. This is all there is to the bill.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Is it not a fact that the letter of the President to which the gentleman has referred applied to the original bill and not to this conference report?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes; it applied to the bill, which carried no limitation whatsoever.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Is it not a fact also that the Navy Department is in no better authoritative position now to say that these ships cannot be built for $50,000,000 than they said they could be, and as the gentleman informed us they could be, less than 30 days ago?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. When the bill passed the Senate there was no limitation whatsoever. The sky was the limit. They could go before the Appropriations Committee and say it would cost $75,000,000 to build these ships; and that is the bill with respect to which the Chief Executive, in a communication dated June 8, said:

> As you are aware, the bill authorizing the auxiliary building program for the Navy passed the Senate a few days ago.
> May I express the hope that this bill, together with the other naval authorization bills which have already received my approval through the Bureau of the Budget, including the bill for the new naval hospital and hospital site, be passed during the present session of Congress?

The action of the House was in the interest of economy in limiting the amount to $50,000,000.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ENGEL. The statement was made the other day that it would cost $20,000,000 more to build a battleship in a Government yard than in a private yard.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I may say to the gentleman that if he will read the record of the debate on this bill he will find a statement covering that matter, and I beg the gentleman to excuse me from going into that matter at this time.

Mr. ENGEL. Can the gentleman give us any information as to the difference in cost of construction in private yards and in Government yards?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Suffice it to say that in a great many instances you can build them as cheaply in private yards as in navy yards, and in some instances they are higher in private yards than in Government yards, but, as one Member of Congress, I am unwilling to destroy the private yards and have all the work done in the navy yards.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Does not the gentleman realize that the way the matter now stands, so far as action by the House is concerned, if these contracts are let or if bids are called for, nobody is going to bid over $50,000,000, because they know that the award will not be made? If we say to them that they will be given a leeway of $10,000,000 or $12,000,000, that means the Government of the United States will have to pay $10,000,000 or $12,000,000 more.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Not at all, because if the Navy is not satisfied, it has the discretion to build them itself.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. ENGEL. Upon what was the estimate based with respect to the estimated cost of construction in private yards as compared with Government yards?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The comparison was made in the Navy Department comparing the cost of construction in the navy yards with industrial yards and all of that information is in the RECORD.

Mr. Speaker, the other two amendments were agreed to by the Senate.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the final adoption of the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. TABER. Upon that, Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 86, nays 224, not voting 121, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment and ask for a further conference.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia that the House insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment and ask for a further conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The Chair appointed the following conferees: Mr. VINSON of Georgia, Mr. DREWRY, Mr. MILLARD.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a radio address delivered by myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members of the House have 5 legislative days within which to extend their remarks on the cancer bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a radio address delivered by my colleague, Mr. WITHROW, on the subject of automobile manufacturer-dealer relation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include therein an editorial by a late editorial writer.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a radio address delivered by myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON LABOR—PERMISSION TO SIT DURING SESSION OF THE HOUSE

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Labor may be permitted to sit during the session of the House on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PROPOSED MARCH OF UNEMPLOYED ON WASHINGTON

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I shall not object to the gentleman's address, but I shall be compelled to object to any further addresses.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, the national jamboree of the Boy Scouts of America which was recently held in Washington came to an end on Friday, July 9. It was an eventful and successful gathering of the flower of this Nation's youth. The boys conducted themselves while in the National Capital in a manner which reflects credit on them, their organization and their leaders.

As a contribution to the success of the Jamboree, the Federal Government made available, in addition to public parks and grounds for camping purposes, thousands of tents and much other Army equipment. The Boy Scouts used this equipment well, conserved it, and left their camp grounds in perfect order. We in Washington are all happy that they came to visit us and proud of the record they made while here.

But, Mr. Speaker, what is the picture today? Two weeks after the Boy Scouts departed, Army tents still dot the scenery from Hains Point up to and around the Washington Monument. Very few have been removed, although some have blown down. An inspection of the camp reveals a recent accumulation of newspapers, packing boxes, and other rubbish. There is every evidence that vagrants are taking possession of the camp and that they are rapidly undoing the good order in which the Boy Scouts left the camp.

An inspection, made as recently as last night, reveals that many of the tents have been heaped in piles under other tents, there to mildew and deteriorate. These tents and other equipment cost the taxpayers of this Nation a large sum of money. While no one will complain of the use of the equipment by the Boy Scouts, it is fair to say that the equipment is now being very carelessly handled. What would seem to be unnecessary damage to the equipment and the grounds, since the Scouts left, has occurred.

All of which gives rise to the question, "Why has this huge amount of Army equipment been left standing for such a length of time?"

Possibly we can find the answer to this and some other current questions in a news release from the Workers' Alliance of America, issued from their Washington headquarters under date of July 22. According to this release—

> The largest gathering of unemployed in Washington in recent years will be seen on August 23, when the national job march, sponsored by the Workers' Alliance of America, arrives here.

The release further states that—

> Four main columns and 10 auxiliary columns of auto caravans, leaving cities from the Atlantic to the Pacific, will move across the country to converge in Washington.

And further along in the release it is stated that—

> Practically all of the job marchers will travel in old cars, the finances being raised by the 2,500 local units of the alliance, from trade unions and other friendly organizations, and contributions from merchants, city and State official bodies. Many of the units will have special children's detachments, others will have women's and youth detachments.

And then there is found in the release a possible explanation of why the tents and other Army equipment have not heretofore been removed. This explanation is in the paragraph which reads:

> To house the marchers in Washington an appeal will be made to the Quartermaster Department of the United States Army for use of the tents and other equipment used by the Boy Scouts Jamboree. This equipment is still in Potomac Park in Washington. An appeal will also be made for Army rations in order to feed the thousands of job marchers.

None of us can deny to any citizen of this country his right to petition Congress for a redress of grievances. But it must be borne in mind that the relief appropriation for the coming year has already been made by Congress. The amount provided in the bill as finally passed was suggested by the President of the United States as being adequate. The Congress fixed the amount after long and careful investigation and debate.

Further than that, it is safe to say that the overwhelming sentiment in Congress is for an adjournment before August 23. By that time it is almost certain that this session will have adjourned and the Members will have gone home.

That unemployed men and women, together with their children, should be encouraged to come to Washington by the thousands under the circumstances as they exist is well-nigh unthinkable.

The release heretofore referred to by me indicates that many of the persons making the trip will be without funds to maintain themselves, either on the way or after they arrive in Washington. If they should arrive in Washington as contemplated by the press release, an unsafe and possibly dangerous situation would be presented. Once before a rather similar occupation of Washington took place, and it ended with tragic results.

While all of us are sympathetic with those who are so unfortunate as to be unemployed, we certainly cannot sympathize with nor can we afford to encourage an effort to bring thousands of unemployed men with their wives and children to Washington in an attempt to force Congress to make increased appropriations at this time.

In spite of the fact that everyone knows that there are no jobs available in Washington, the press release states:

> If you want your W. P. A. job back, march with us. If you are unemployed and want a job, march with us. If you are sympathetic to our desire for jobs, contribute and help us.

If communications reaching me from farmers of my State, and reaching other Members of Congress from the farmers of other States, are true, there are more jobs available in the harvest fields of the West and Midwest than there are in Washington. Many of us have received communications from farmers complaining of the shortage of farm help. They say that the W. P. A. and other governmental activities are keeping men from the farms. While farm work may not, in the eyes of some, be the most desirable work in the world, it has always, and will today, provide honest employment at reasonable wages for a great and substantial number of our people.

Mr. Speaker, the tents are still up in Potomac Park. The marchers will soon be here in Washington to put the pressure on the President and Congress, although it is probable that Congress will not be here.

Is it possible that someone in authority has permitted these tents to remain in Potomac Park so that they might be available for the use of the marchers; or, in fact, to encourage the marchers to come to Washington? I present this question in all seriousness and in the earnest hope that undue and unnecessary hardship and privation shall be avoided, trouble prevented, and the integrity of the Government maintained. [Applause.]

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. What business will come up for consideration during the remainder of the afternoon before we adjourn?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. It is my understanding that we will take up nothing but the Bonneville Dam matter, with 1 hour under the rule and 2 hours of general debate upon the bill.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman states his understanding. Is that the understanding of everyone?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no present intention of recognizing anyone for any further business this afternoon.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I shall ask unanimous consent to bring up the conference report upon the Interior Department appropriation bill. There was just one controversial matter, and that has been settled. It is a unanimous report.

The SPEAKER. With that exception, the Chair knows of no additional legislative business to come up this afternoon. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next?

There was no objection.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. St. Claire, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate nos. 35, 37, 53, 97, 98, 124, 125, and 133 to the bill (H. R. 6958) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes"; disagrees to the amendments of the House to Senate amendments nos. 93 and 95; further insists upon its amendments nos. 93, 95, 74, 89, and 121 to said bill; agrees to a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, Mr. ADAMS, Mr. NYE, and Mr. STEIWER to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

FORMER REPRESENTATIVE ANNING S. PRALL

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, it is a matter of great personal grief to me to announce the death this morning of a former Member of this House, Hon. Anning S. Prall, chairman of the Federal Communications Commission. Many of the Members here served with Representative Prall during the five terms that he served in this House, which he entered in the Sixty-eighth Congress. He was outstanding in his ability. He was exceptional in his courtesy, and the aspect of a gentleman radiated from him. In his death we, who knew him intimately and loved him, have lost a friend, and the administration has lost one of its outstanding leaders.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I join with the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] as we all do in expressing our grief over the passing of our former distinguished colleague, Hon. Anning S. Prall.

I wish to call to the attention of the House one practice that has been neglected of late. It was the practice here for more than 100 years that whenever a former Member of the House passed away, some sitting Member from his State arose and announced his death. We try to keep a compiled directory of the records of all men who have served in the American Congress. In 1927, when the last directory was compiled, there were more than 100 men, I think possibly 200 men, the record of whose death could not be found, because in recent years they have been neglecting to make these announcements. So I trust that whenever a former Member passes away some Member from his State will do as the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] has done today, arise and announce his passing, and let it go in the RECORD in order that it may help to keep the history of this country and the history of the Congress and the history of the Members of the House for future generations.

I sincerely trust that whenever a former Member passes from your State you will do as the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] has done today, rise and respectfully announce his passing to the House, tell where and when he died, in order that this record may be accurately kept.

BONNEVILLE DAM

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 277.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 277

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 7642, a bill to authorize the completion, maintenance, and operation of Bonneville project for navigation, and for other purposes, and all points of order against said bill are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCLEAN].

Mr. Speaker, this is an open rule for the consideration of the so-called Bonneville Dam project, providing for 2 hours of general debate. As represented to the Rules Committee, this bill pertains to the disposition of the surplus power generated by that project.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. This rule provides for the waiving of all points of order in the bill. The bill contains a provision, at page 16, section 10, which is subject to a point of order and which is objectionable for two reasons: In the first place, it carries a direct appropriation; and, in the second place, it provides for a permanent appropriation. There has been considerable discussion recently, both in the House and in the Committee on Appropriations, of this character of appropriations; and I would be glad if the gentleman from New York will yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD], chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, who reported this bill, to tell us whether he expects to insist on consideration of that provision in the form in which it now appears in the bill.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Let me say first to the gentleman there has grown up in this House a practice which should be curtailed as far as possible; that is, for the legislative committees to include appropriations in their bills; and it is always with reluctance that the Rules Committee provide in the rule to waive points of order. On the other hand, the great Committee on Appropriations, of which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] is acting chairman, is rapidly developing a sort of violation of the rules of the House by including legislation in appropriation bills. Those two matters should be stopped as far as possible. It usually happens that after appearance before the Rules Committee and after the hearing is had the legislative committee says, "We have a matter in here which we think may be subject to a point of order", and because of the necessity for expedition the Rules Committee reluctantly, in some instances, includes a waiver of points of order. But the legislative committees should not have appropriations in their bills, and the Appropriations Committee should not have legislation in its bills.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I am glad to have the gentleman from New York make that statement, because I am in hearty accord with it. It is important that for the sake of expedition and in order to maintain the integrity of our proceedings appropriations be excluded from legislative bills and no legislation be included in any appropriation bill.

It is the policy of our committee to adhere strictly to the rule prohibiting the consideration of legislation in appropriation bills.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. In the District of Columbia appropriation bill there were only 32 pieces of legislation, as I recall it. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. To be exact there are 17, which fall largely into two classes—limitations effecting retrenchments under the Holman rule which are always in order on an appropriation bill and which are really fiscal rather than legislative, and standardized forms which have been carried in the bill from time immemorial, and which had their origin back in the days before appropriating authority was confined to one committee. The fact is the policy of excluding legislative provisions of any importance has been more rigidly insisted on this year than in previous sessions. I would be glad if the gentleman would yield to the gentleman from Texas and give us an opportunity to have his views on the subject.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD].

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] let me say that after conversation with him over the telephone today I drafted a proposed amendment which I believed will be entirely satisfactory to the gentleman from Missouri. It was not the intention of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to include an appropriation in this bill, but there was a provision which was copied from the T. V. A. bill which could be construed as an appropriation, and when it was called to the attention of the committee we gladly agreed to yield upon the point.

I submit to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations this amendment and ask whether or not that form will be satisfactory to him?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. It is the intention of the gentleman from Texas to offer this as a committee amendment?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes. The committee has authorized me to offer that as an amendment, and I expect to do so when that is reached under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The amendment brings the section within the rule and removes any grounds for objections to the special order proposed by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, this bill is a part of the administration's power program and is one of the most important measures of its kind ever presented to the Congress of the United States, especially insofar as it affects the people of the Far West.

Bonneville is one of the largest power dams now in the world. They will soon be generating power at this dam and have it ready for distribution. This will mean for that great Western country a yardstick such as we have in the Tennessee Valley and such as they have in the Province of Ontario, Canada. This bill, with one or two exceptions, meets with the approval, I believe, of an overwhelming majority of those Members who believe as I do, in using the public power resources of America for the benefit of the American people in order to bring electricity to the ultimate consumer at the lowest possible rates, based upon the cost of production, transmission, and distribution.

One of the changes that will be proposed is for a unified control in order that the Administrator may have complete control of the dam, complete control of the generating facilities, and deliver to the Army Engineers a sufficient amount of power to operate the locks and also the fishways at all times. We believe that amendment is necessary in order to promote harmony in the organization and to prevent friction in the years to come.

Another amendment I shall propose is that where power is sold to a private power company to be resold for profit the administrator shall fix the retail rates. The measure as it now stands reads that he may fix the retail rate. I want to strike out the word "may" and insert the word "shall" so that there can be no question in the future about this power being delivered to the ultimate consumers of that area at the proper rates.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. That amendment has already been agreed upon as a committee amendment.

Mr. RANKIN. I thank the chairman of the committee, the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD]. He informs me that that amendment has already been agreed to.

Mr. Speaker, we have here a chart prepared under the direction of our distinguished colleague from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE]. I trust that every Member of Congress will study it carefully. You will see that where rates are high consumption is low. For instance, you will notice in one Arizona City where the rates are 11½ cents a kilowatt hour the average annual domestic consumption is only 150 kilowatt hours. In the next Arizona city where the rates are 10½ cents the average annual use is only 300 kilowatt hours a year. In Tacoma, Wash., however, where the average kilowatt hour rate is 1.68 cents the annual domestic use is 1,565 kilowatt hours. In Tupelo, Miss., under the T. V. A. rates of 1.78 cents per kilowatt hour the domestic annual use of electrical energy averages 1,864 kilowatt hours a year.

Let us take up the Canadian situation. You will notice that in the Ontario section under the Ontario Power Commission, taking in this particular instance Fort William, Ontario, the average cost is 0.75 cent, or 7½ mills, a kilowatt-hour. How much do they use? They use 5,240 kilowatt-hours a year on an average. Those people have been heating their homes for years with electricity. They call it white coal, because it is the cheapest fuel they can find.

It has been said here, and was said to me before the committee, that Ontario's rates were cheap because they got their power from Niagara Falls and did not have to build a dam. It is just as much trouble to chisel a sluiceway and a penstock in that rock at Niagara Falls as it is to build a dam across one of these rivers.

Surely they cannot make that charge as to Winnipeg. Winnipeg has no Niagara Falls, yet their rate is 9 mills a kilowatt-hour on an average. They use an average of 4,250 kilowatt-hours a year. How does that compare with the average in the United States? The average in the United States is more than five times the Winnipeg rate, and we find the average use is 710 kilowatt-hours annually, or approximately one-sixth of the quantity used in Winnipeg.

Is there a Member of the House who cannot see what it means to bring these rates down in order to enable the American people to use electricity and electrical appliances, to enjoy the blessings of this modern civilization, to lift from the shoulders of the housewife the interminable drudgery under which the women of this Nation have struggled in the days gone by? Can any man look at that chart and fail to see that the greatest thing we can do for the American people is to develop hydroelectric power on our navigable streams and transmit it to the homes of our people at rates based upon the cost of production, transmission, and distribution?

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. BIERMANN. To what kind of use do these average figures apply?

Mr. RANKIN. These are domestic rates.

Mr. BIERMANN. They do not apply to business at all?

Mr. RANKIN. No. The commercial rates, however, run along parallel with them.

Mr. BIERMANN. But these figures are strictly for domestic use?

Mr. RANKIN. These are for homes; these are residential rates.

Mr. Speaker, when we were paying 10 cents a kilowatt-hour for electricity a few years ago, we were using on an average of 35 kilowatt-hours a month. Today we are using about 160 kilowatt-hours a month, and I believe a month ago it ran up to as much as 180 kilowatt-hours a month.

Our people are beginning to realize what electricity is for.

I will give you another figure. The average saturation point for the use of electrical refrigerators in this country is 29 percent, which covers the big cities of the Nation. In my own home town today it is 80 percent. The other day I sent out questionnaires to the farmers who are receiving electricity throughout the area I represent. I received back 89 questionnaires and of those 89 farmers 66 had electric refrigerators. The money they had been previously spending on gasoline and accessories, and so forth, they are now spending on their homes and building places for their children to live in.

Mr. Speaker, this is the greatest movement of modern times, certainly the greatest movement ever started in this country by any administration. It means that we will not only bring this relief to the people of the cities but we will electrify the farm homes of America. For the last few years our farmers' children have been rushing through school to get away from home. Today that picture is being reversed. Wherever a power line goes into a farm home and delivers electricity at the proper rate, it makes that home and farm more profitable and more attractive. We find their children rushing through school now to get back home instead of rushing through school to get away from home.

We are building a civilization for the future in order that throughout the centuries to come this country may take its place and maintain it as the leading Nation of the earth in the onward march of progress. A good deal has been said about what we are spending. This dam will add hundreds of millions of dollars to the wealth of that western country. If you electrify every farm home in America at the rate at which this power will be sold, at the T. V. A. rate or at the Winnipeg rates, or the Ontario rates, you will add $100,000,000,000 to the value of the farm property of America, and you will add inestimably to the happiness and prosperity of the American people. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein the table shown on the blackboard.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. ROBINSON].

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I want to assure my colleagues I do not often rise in this House to speak and I would not on this occasion were it not for the fact I feel that a serious injustice will be done not only to this Congress but to all people concerned if this bill is passed in its present language.

I call attention to one feature only of the bill. The title reads, "To authorize the completion, maintenance, and operation of Bonneville project for navigation, and for other purposes." One would assume from an examination of that title that this was a Bonneville Dam bill and I have no objection to that feature of the bill. However, the committee for some unaccountable reason has dragged into this Bonneville proposition a matter that should in nowise be brought into the discussion. I refer to page 12 of the bill wherein it provides that—

> The President shall direct the holding of public hearings by such agency or agencies as he may designate and the preparation prior to December 31, 1937, of a report to the President.

For what? It has nothing to do with the Bonneville project. It states the report shall include—

> The findings of such agency or agencies respecting any unreasonable discrimination against the Boulder Canyon project.

That is the only reference to the Boulder Canyon project there is in this bill. What does that mean? It means that here is a project from 1,000 to 1,200 miles away from the Boulder Dam project, not connected in any way on earth with the Boulder Dam project, which was authorized by Congress after 6 years of debate in Congress.

Mr. Speaker, under the Boulder Dam project a solemn agreement was entered into as to how the money should be paid, under what circumstances it should be paid, what deductions should be made, and this argument fixed the rights of the parties. The States involved accepted that contract, feeling that it was a solemn and binding obligation.

What happened? On June 1 of this year some of the parties to that contract must begin to perform. This is the first time they have had any obligations under the contract. The contract provides that if there is any discrimination or wrong being done, the parties will meet every 15 years and adjust the discriminations. There is a provision in the contract that in 1945 there will be an adjustment made of any discriminations that may at that time exist. But here comes one of the parties to the contract who wants to have the interest rate reduced from 4 percent to 3 percent, although the contract provides for 4 percent and although that interest is being paid partly by private concerns. I say "partly." Twenty-six percent of it is being paid by the Southern California Edison Co.

Mr. COLDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I will if the gentleman will secure some more time for me.

Mr. COLDEN. Just merely for a correction. It is 8 percent.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. It is 26 percent, and not only that but the California Edison Co. and the city of Los Angeles underwrote the whole project. They are responsible for every dollar of it. There is no question about that. I cannot yield to the gentleman any further. If the gentleman has any questions to ask about these facts, I can produce them. There is no question about the facts I am giving out.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield? I will see that the gentleman gets a few minutes more time.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman has stated that the President calls these public hearings.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. Is the gentleman afraid that the President and the men he appoints will not render a just and fair decision in this matter?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I am glad the gentleman mentioned that. I think it is absolutely wrong for the Congress to enter into a solemn obligation after spending 6 years working on the matter, then saying to any one man, "You go ahead and fix this contract up any way you want." I do not approve of that. I am for the President. I think he has done a fine job. I am for Secretary Ickes, too, but I would like to call attention to a statement made by Secretary Ickes on this very thing. Mr. Merriam, speaking for Secretary Ickes, stated:

> I may say that Secretary Ickes, because he regards the problems of Boulder Dam and Bonneville as entirely dissimilar, does not favor such a rider.

Meaning the rider referring to Boulder Dam.

I think the time has come when we must call a halt to this kind of a proposition. Surely this Congress is not going to permit a committee to come in here and authorize someone to change a contract just as soon as the parties who are to perform under that contract must begin to pay. The only purpose of this is to give an advantage to California of some $78,000,000 in interest. They are obligated to pay this sum. In giving the city of Los Angeles this advantage you give the same advantage to the utility companies who have signed contracts and obligated themselves to make these payments. [Applause.]

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, no one can deny that the conservation of our natural resources insofar as it surmounts State lines is a national problem, and we have always recognized it as such. We have maintained our navigable waters, and our reclamation program has been under way for a great many years. The rapid development of the uses of electricity has brought the use of electricity very prominently into our everyday life. The only difference between us is one of management, and that is most important.

I read this Bonneville Dam bill and learn from it that it is a temporary measure, that it is to remain in force only until other means are provided for handling this situation. If we proceed the way we are now going with this alleged program, as I pointed out 2 or 3 years ago, Congress is going to have a great many things to answer for. It is going to have to answer for all of the incompetence, extravagance, and inefficiency of not only the Tennessee Valley Authority, but the Bonneville administrator and every other similar agency which we set up and give authority which Congress itself should exercise.

The Tennessee Valley Authority has at least one virtue which the authority to be set up under this act does not have. In the Tennessee Valley Authority there is safety in numbers. At least there is some check on their activities by their criticism of each other. They are now in a wrangle from which some good may result. Under this proposal the Congress will turn over not to three men, each a check on the other, but to one individual, all of its prerogatives, and give him exclusive power over the operation of the Bonneville project, with full power to build an organization, create jobs, and fix rates for power sold. There will be nobody to question any of his acts or performances. Under this act he will be appointed at a salary of $10,000 per year for an indeterminate term.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLEAN. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Is not the gentleman mistaken regarding the powers of the administrator who is to be appointed? He has nothing to do except transmit and sell the surplus power.

Mr. McLEAN. I do not so understand the act. This bill confers upon the administrator the right to purchase land, the right to build transmission lines, the right to exercise the power of eminent domain, to take real and personal property in the name of the United States, and for that purpose the act confers upon him full authority provided by existing condemnation statutes. The bill gives him authority to acquire and condemn lands and provides that to carry out the purposes of this act he may file suits, and in all litigation he shall be represented by such counsel as he may select. The Department of Justice and law enforcement officers of the Government are to be ignored.

Mr. MANSFIELD. That is only for the purpose of transmitting and selling the power.

Mr. McLEAN. I may say, with all due deference, that if the chairman of the committee will read the act carefully he will find we have put all this authority into the hands of this administrator, a single individual. The things I have stated are so. This administrator will have these exclusive rights under the language of this bill.

In confirmation of this, may I read section 11, as follows:

> The administrator may, in the name of the United States, bring such suits, at law or in equity, as he may find necessary in carrying out the purposes of the act; and he shall be represented in all litigation affecting the status or operation of Bonneville project by such counsel as he may select.

In another section it is provided that—

> The administrator, the Secretary of War, and the Federal Power Commission, respectively, shall appoint and fix the compensation of such attorneys, engineers, and other experts as may be necessary for carrying out the functions entrusted to them under this act, without regard to the provisions of other laws applicable to the employment, compensation, and classification of officers and employees of the United States; and they may, subject to the civil-service laws, appoint such other officers and employees as may be necessary to carry out such functions and fix their salaries in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLEAN. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman realizes this dam is practically finished?

Mr. McLEAN. I do.

Mr. RANKIN. Would the gentleman abandon it?

Mr. McLEAN. I would not.

Mr. RANKIN. What would the gentleman do with the power which is to be generated there?

Mr. McLEAN. I have sufficient confidence in the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army to allow them to operate this project temporarily until such time as we have a proper board or body set up to handle it.

Mr. RANKIN. Would the gentleman increase the number of administrators from one to three?

Mr. McLEAN. I am not prepared to answer that now. I am criticizing the bill before me.

This bill, like most of the New Deal measures which have been submitted to Congress, comes to us without mature deliberation, and from another source. I call attention to page 148 of the hearings, which shows that this bill came here from the Secretary of the Interior, or the Power Policy Committee, and we are asked to pass it on that recommendation.

This bill creates another T. V. A. The only difference is that this is a one-man T. V. A. with exclusive power.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLEAN. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. May I call the gentleman's attention to section 2 on page 3 of the bill, commencing at line 11 and continuing to line 15, referring to the administrator, which reads as follows:

> He shall act in consultation with an advisory board composed of a representative designated by the Secretary of War, a representative designated by the Secretary of the Interior, and a representative designated by the Federal Power Commission.

Does not the gentleman think in view of this provision he is in error when he claims the administrator has the autocratic powers in administering this project which the gentleman has been attributing to him?

Mr. McLEAN. I do not, because section 2 gives the administrator the exclusive power to build up and he will build up an organization just as strong and powerful as the T. V. A., and will fix all the rates, just as the T. V. A. is doing, but he will not be reporting to Congress in an understandable way. The T. V. A. is not doing it.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. The gentleman has referred to the matter of rates. May I call the attention of the gentleman to section 5 and the provision on page 11, beginning in line 3 and continuing to line 7, that—

> Rate schedules and revisions thereof shall from time to time be prepared and submitted by the administrator to the Federal Power Commission and shall become effective as approved by the Federal Power Commission.

In other words, the administrator does not have final jurisdiction as to rates and cannot say what the rates shall be. That is a matter that is subject to the final approval of the Federal Power Commission.

Mr. McLEAN. That may be the gentleman's opinion, but as I read the bill, this administrator will become a czar over the Bonneville operation. Read, for instance, the provision in section 1:

> The Secretary of War shall provide, construct, operate, maintain, add to, and improve at Bonneville project such machinery, equipment, and facilities for the generation of electric energy as may be necessary to develop salable electric energy as rapidly as markets may be found therefor by the administrator.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 10 minutes more.

The administrator is given power to dictate to the Secretary of War to what extent power shall be developed there without any authority from the Congress.

I object to placing all this power in the hands of this one individual, making him a czar and a T. V. A. authority for the Columbia River operation.

This act is called a Bonneville Dam Act. It is more than that. I have the word of Secretary Ickes in the hearings that the object and purpose of this act is to establish a national power policy. If this is so, this matter is of sufficient importance, particularly in the light of the program which has been introduced providing for seven authorities similar to the T. V. A. and which we understand is to be brought forward soon, to have more mature consideration than the bill can possibly have at this time.

Much has been said about yardsticks, and the statement has been made that this Bonneville operation will be a yardstick for all the operations in the Northwest. We are also told that the T. V. A. is a yardstick for all the operations in the territory where it exists.

It may interest some of you gentlemen to know how much the T. V. A. has cost the United States up to this point. The program as outlined to the Committee on Appropriations at the last session of the Congress indicated a total cost of all projects of development of $479,000,000, and the total cost, as revised at the present session, is $520,000,000. In other words, the T. V. A. had revised its estimates of its operations upward $30,000,000 since the last session of Congress. It does not appear anywhere of record that they have in anywise, in fixing their rates, included any part of the cost of their operation or allocated any particular part of the expense to the fixing of the rates which they charge.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLEAN. Their rates are more or less guesswork and in no part of any of their reports and at no point in any hearings I have read do I find any reference whatever to the theorem which they have followed in allocating, as is just and proper, a portion of the cost to flood control, a portion to navigation, and a reasonable and fair charge against the cost of the development of electricity.

Furthermore, the report of the T. V. A. shows that their receipts from the sale of electric power are only very slightly in excess of the cost of operation of their electrical department, which does not take into account any of the expense of operation.

I venture to say—and I say this with confidence—the T. V. A. rates will not stand the test of examination when all of the charges which are proper are included in the rates which they charge. I do not say this in criticism of the T. V. A.; I do not say this in support of any rates previously charged; I do not say it in support of any electric company or power trust; I say it for the information of the Congress. We are not informed as to how the T. V. A. rates are fixed, and until we know the substance of the rates, until we know the basis upon which they are formulated, and until we know the elements that enter into such rates, we are not in position to know whether or not those rates are fair and reasonable and commensurate with the cost of production, and any ex-parte statement that is made about the rates that are charged in other portions of the country, using T. V. A. rates as a comparison or as a yardstick, is not in keeping with proper business and legal practice.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLEAN. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman talks about the T. V. A. costing so much and their spending $500,000,000. As a matter of fact the gentleman knows if he has kept up with the appropriations that he is including all the prospective expenses in the future, all of the prospective appropriations in the future, and not what has been spent.

Mr. McLEAN. That is where we differ. Is it not perfectly proper for the Congress of the United States to anticipate the ultimate cost of a public improvement, and in this T. V. A. proposition the Congress of the United States has been deceived as to the ultimate cost. When this program was outlined there was an entirely different viewpoint. The act under which the T. V. A. was created provides for a method of financing the proposition. It provided that they should have $50,000,000 to begin their operations, and that they should make a report of their ultimate operations to the Congress or the President in order that we could determine what the future activity was to be, and that report was to aid and assist us in directing their operations. What happened? Such a report has never been made, and the money which they were allocated in the bond issue has never been used, they never intend to use it, they never intend to make the examination and report contemplated by the Tennessee Valley Act, and if the gentleman will read their reports he will see the ridiculous reason given as to how they construe that provision of the law, and instead of following the dictates and mandate of Congress there was allocated to them $75,000,000 out of the relief fund and other emergency relief appropriations, and what Congress thought ought to be done was ignored, and since that time they have gone along freely by themselves, doing just as they please, ignoring Congress except when some excuse was necessary for some mistake that they had made, or there was some difference of opinion which existed between them, and then they came to Congress and asked Congress to settle their differences.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. McLEAN. Let me ask the gentleman this. Does not the gentleman think that Congress ought to know what the ultimate cost of any public improvement is going to be?

Mr. RANKIN. Let me say to the gentleman from New Jersey that we know about as accurately as it could be known. The gentleman cannot tell us what the Navy will cost in the future or what any other governmental enterprise will cost in the future. Here is the point I want to ask the gentleman: The gentleman talks about the T. V. A. yardstick being inaccurate. Let him turn around and look at that blackboard, and he will find that Tacoma, Wash., Windsor, Ontario, Ottawa and Winnipeg, Canada, all have lower rates than the T. V. A. has, all of them paying out, all of them doing sound business, and look at the use of power that those people have.

Mr. McLEAN. Oh, there is no difference between the gentleman and me in that respect. It is fundamental, elemental that the cheaper the rate the more will be consumed. We have no difference as to that. That is no great discovery or anything unique about that.

Mr. RANKIN. Then how does the gentleman stand here and say that the T. V. A. rates are too high?

Mr. McLEAN. I did not say that. I said that to use the T. V. A. rates as a comparison or yardstick is inaccurate as we understand them at the moment, because we have no way of determining whether those elements which ought to go into the making of a rate have been used by the T. V. A. I have read their reports and I have read their testimony and I have tried to find out, without success. I read in some newspaper that Dr. Morgan said that he was not prepared to tell how much of the cost of the dam went into the making of electric rates.

Mr. RANKIN. I agree with the gentleman on one thing and that is that the T. V. A. rates are wrong; they are too high and ought to be reduced and will be reduced as the years go by, and these rates at Bonneville will be lower than the present T. V. A. rates.

Mr. McLEAN. How does the gentleman reach the conclusion that they are too high?

Mr. RANKIN. Because we take the results at Tacoma, Wash., Winnipeg, Canada, and the rates of the Ontario Power Commission, where they have done the same thing.

Mr. McLEAN. And the gentleman disregards the investment of the United States, which ought to be considered.

Mr. RANKIN. All that investment is charged to power, every dollar of it, and all of them have cheaper rates than the T. V. A.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLEAN. Yes.

Mr. RICH. I want to make an observation here in reference to the statement of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN]. The gentleman from Mississippi told me that he could prove that power rates produced by coal could be produced as cheaply as they could by water, but he has failed up to this time to produce that information.

Mr. McLEAN. We are going too rapidly in establishing different bodies and boards. We ought to respond more readily to the suggestion of the President that our Government ought to be reorganized, boards and agencies should be coordinated and consolidated, and before we create other agencies, we ought to have some definite program and scheme as to how this power-development program is going to be regulated and managed.

Let us not talk anymore about surplus power. The words "surplus power" have lost their efficacy. The phrase need no longer to be used as a delusion and a snare calculated to induce the courts to circumvent constitutional limitations. The Government of the United States is in the electrical power business. It is the purpose of the administration to produce all the power we can possibly produce and it is our purpose to find markets for it. Let us be honest with the people about it, but let us organize a body or a board that can scientifically guide and direct the activity so that we will have a real yardstick. The T. V. A. yardstick was lost 2 or 3 years ago. It may be you will find it in one of the vacant houses up at the town of Norris or somewhere else, but as far as having a value in comparison of rates is concerned, it does not exist.

I sometimes think I will soon have to sit on the Democratic side of this House. A few days ago I had to vote to sustain the President when the members of his own party were walking out on him. I heard the gentleman from California say the other day that we were passing a bill which the President would probably veto. I do not see how the President can consistently approve of the bill that was passed yesterday, if he insists on his program of economy and efficiency. It would seem as if Members of Congress do not see or they do not want to see what is going on. They are disregarding a program of economy for one of personal interest. They are either blind or they do not care. Let us be fair in our efforts to effect a legislative program and not horse traders. Not like a fellow up in my territory who thought he was swindled in a deal for a mule he bought. As the bargain was closed the mule dashed away and smashed his head against the side of the barn and liked to kill himself. The purchaser said to the seller: "The deal is off; I didn't buy a blind mule." The seller replied, "That mule ain't blind. He just don't give a damn." [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. RANKIN. You should have had an electric light in that barn.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McLEAN] has expired.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7642) to authorize the completion, maintenance, and operation of Bonneville project for navigation, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 7642, with Mr. WILCOX in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the first reading of the bill will be dispensed with and the bill will be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There was no objection.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of improving navigation on the Columbia River, controlling floodwaters, promoting the national defense, and for other purposes, the dam, locks, power plant, and appurtenant works now under construction at Bonneville, Oreg., and North Bonneville, Wash. (hereinafter called Bonneville project), shall be completed, maintained, and operated under the direction of the Secretary of War and the supervision of the Chief of Engineers, subject, however, to the provisions of this act relating to the power and duties of the Columbia River Administrator provided for in section 2 (a) (hereinafter called the Administrator) respecting the sale and distribution of surplus electric energy generated at said project. So far as may be consistent with the purposes aforesaid, and to effect such purposes with the greatest possible public benefit and to avoid the waste of water power, the Secretary of War shall provide, construct, operate, maintain, add to, and improve at Bonneville project such machinery, equipment, and facilities for the generation of electric energy as may be necessary to develop salable electric energy as rapidly as markets may be found therefor by the Administrator. The electric energy thus generated and not required for the operation of the dam and locks at such project and the navigation facilities employed in connection therewith, shall be delivered to the Administrator, at a switchboard to be installed in or near the power plant, for disposition as provided in this act.

SEC. 2. (a) The surplus energy generated in the operation of the Bonneville project shall be disposed of by and through the Administrator as hereinafter provided. The Administrator shall be appointed by and be responsible to the Secretary of the Interior, shall receive a salary at the rate of $10,000 per year, and shall maintain his principal office at a place selected by him in the vicinity of Bonneville project. No Administrator shall during his continuance in office have any financial interest in any public-utility company engaged in the business of generating, transmitting, distributing, or selling electric energy to the public, or in any holding company or subsidiary company of a holding company as such terms are defined in the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935. The Administrator shall, as hereinafter provided, make all necessary or appropriate arrangements for the disposition of electric energy generated at Bonneville project not required for the operation of the dam and locks at such project and the navigation facilities employed in connection therewith. He shall act in consultation with an advisory board composed of a representative designated by the Secretary of War, a representative designated by the Secretary of the Interior, and a representative designated by the Federal Power Commission. The form of administration herein established for Bonneville project is intended to be provisional pending the establishment of permanent administration for Bonneville and other projects in the Columbia River Basin.

(b) In order to encourage the widest possible use of all electric energy that can be generated and marketed and to provide reasonable outlets therefor, and to prevent the monopolization thereof by limited groups or localities, the Administrator is authorized and directed to provide, construct, operate, maintain, and improve such electric transmission lines and substations, and facilities and structures appurtenant thereto, as he finds necessary, desirable, or appropriate for the purpose of transmitting electric energy, available for sale from the Bonneville project to existing and potential markets, and for the purpose of interchange of electric energy to interconnect the Bonneville project with other Federal projects.

(c) The Administrator is authorized, in the name of the United States, to acquire, by purchase, lease, condemnation, or donation, such real and personal property, or any interest therein, including lands, easements, rights-of-way, franchises, electric transmission lines, substations, and facilities and structures appurtenant thereto, as the Administrator finds necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of this act. Title to all property and property rights acquired by the Administrator shall be taken in the name of the United States.

(d) The Administrator shall have power to acquire any property or property rights, including patent rights, which in his opinion are necessary to carry out the purposes of this act, by the exercise of the right of eminent domain and to institute condemnation proceedings therefor in the same manner as is provided by law for the condemnation of real estate. In respect of condemnation of any property or property rights, the Administrator shall have the rights conferred by the act of February 26, 1931 (46 Stat. 1421, ch. 307, secs. 1 to 5, inclusive), as now compiled in sections 258a to 258e, inclusive, of title 40 of the United States Code.

(e) The Administrator is authorized, in the name of the United States, to sell, lease, or otherwise dispose of such personal property as in his judgment is not required for the purposes of this act and such real property and interests in land acquired in connection with the construction or operation of electric transmission lines or substations as in his judgment are not required for the purposes of this act: Provided, however, That before the sale, lease, or disposition of real property or transmission lines, the Administrator shall secure the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

(f) Subject to the provisions of this act, the Administrator is authorized, in the name of the United States, to negotiate and enter into such contracts, agreements, and arrangements as he shall find necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of this act.

SEC. 3. (a) As employed in this act, the term "public body", or "public bodies", means States, public power districts, counties, and municipalities, including agencies or subdivisions of any thereof. As employed in this act, the term "cooperative", or "cooperatives", means any form of non-profit-making organization or organizations of citizens supplying, or which may be created to supply, members with any kind of goods, commodities, or services as nearly as possible at cost.

(b) In order to insure that the facilities for the generation of electric energy at the Bonneville project shall be operated for the benefit of the general public, and particularly of domestic and rural consumers, the Administrator shall at all times, in disposing of electric energy generated at said project, give preference and priority to public bodies and cooperatives.

(c) To preserve and protect the preferential rights and priorities of public bodies and cooperatives as provided in subsection (b), not less than 50 percent of the energy which the electric generating facilities, installed or readily installable, at the Bonneville project are capable of producing, shall be reserved for sale to said public bodies and cooperatives until January 1, 1941: Provided, That the electric energy so reserved for but not actually purchased by and delivered to such public bodies and cooperatives prior to January 1, 1941, may be disposed of temporarily so long as such temporary disposition will not interfere with the purchase by and delivery to such public bodies and cooperatives at any time prior to January 1, 1941: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to limit or impair the preferential and priority rights of such public bodies or cooperatives after January 1, 1941; and in the event that after such date there shall be conflicting or competing applications for an allocation of electric energy between any public body or cooperative on the one hand and a private agency of any character on the other, the application of such public body or cooperative shall be granted.

(d) An application by any public body or cooperative for an allocation of electric energy shall not be denied, or another application competing or in conflict therewith be granted, to any private corporation, company, agency, or person on the ground that any proposed bond or other security issue of any such public body or cooperative, the sale of which is necessary to enable such prospective purchaser to enter into the public business of selling and distributing the electric energy proposed to be purchased, has not been authorized or marketed, until after a reasonable time, to be determined by the Administrator, has been afforded such public body or cooperative to have such bond or other security issue authorized or marketed.

(e) It is declared to be the policy of the Congress, as expressed in this act, to preserve the said preferential status of the public bodies and cooperatives herein referred to, and to give to the people of the States within economic transmission distance of the Bonneville project reasonable opportunity and time to hold any election or elections or take any action necessary to create such public bodies and cooperatives as the laws of such States authorize and permit, and to afford such public bodies or cooperatives reasonable time and opportunity to take any action necessary to authorize the issuance of bonds or to arrange other financing necessary to construct or acquire necessary and desirable electric distribution facilities, and in all other respects legally to become qualified purchasers and distributors of electric energy available under this act.

(f) The Administrator, insofar as practicable, shall consult and cooperate with the States and citizens thereof, and with public bodies and cooperatives, within economic transmission distance of Bonneville project, in the furnishing of such information, advice, and recommendations as the Administrator deems necessary or appropriate to enable public bodies and cooperatives to avail themselves of the preferential rights and priorities afforded by this act.

SEC. 4. (a) Subject to the provisions of this act and to rate schedules approved by the Federal Power Commission as hereinafter provided, the Administrator shall negotiate and enter into contracts for the sale at wholesale of electric energy, either for resale or direct consumption, to public bodies and cooperatives and to private agencies and persons. Contracts for the sale of electric energy to any private person or agency other than a privately owned public utility engaged in selling electric energy to the general public shall contain a provision forbidding such private purchaser to resell any of such electric energy so purchased to any private utility or agency engaged in the sale of electric energy to the general public and requiring the immediate canceling of such contract of sale in the event of violation of such provision. Contracts entered into under this subsection shall be binding in accordance with the terms thereof and shall be effective for such period or periods, including renewals or extensions, as may be provided therein, not exceeding in the aggregate 20 years from the respective dates of the making of such contracts. Contracts entered into under this subsection shall contain (1) appropriate provisions, to be agreed upon by the Administrator and the purchaser, for the equitable adjustment of rates at appropriate intervals, not less frequently than once in every 5 years, and (2) in the case of a contract with any private purchaser engaged in the business of selling electric energy to the general public, appropriate provisions authorizing the Administrator to cancel such contract upon 5 years' notice in writing if in the judgment of the Administrator there is reasonable likelihood that any part of the electric energy purchased under such contract will be needed to satisfy the requirements of public bodies or cooperatives, and authorizing such cancelation in respect of all or any part of the electric energy so purchased under the contract, to the end that the preferential rights and priorities accorded public bodies and cooperatives under this act shall at all times be preserved. Contracts entered into under this subsection shall contain such terms and conditions, including among other things stipulations concerning resale and resale rates, as the Administrator may deem necessary or appropriate to effectuate the purposes of this act and to insure that resale of electric energy to the ultimate consumer shall be at rates which are reasonable and nondiscriminatory. Such contract shall also require such utility to keep on file in the office of the Administrator a schedule of all its rates and charges to the public for electric energy and such alterations and changes therein as may be put into effect by such utility.

(b) The Administrator is authorized to enter into contracts with public or private power systems for the mutual exchange of unused excess power upon suitable exchange terms for the purpose of economical operation or of providing emergency or break-down relief.

SEC. 5. It is the intent of the Congress that rate schedules for the sale of electric energy which is or may be generated at the Bonneville project in excess of the amount required for operating the dam, locks, fishways, and appurtenant works shall be determined with due regard to, and predicated upon, the fact that such electric energy is developed from water power created as an incident to the construction of the dam in the Columbia River at the Bonneville project for the purposes set forth in section 1 of this act. Rate schedules and revisions thereof shall from time to time be prepared and submitted by the Administrator to the Federal Power Commission and shall become effective as approved by the Federal Power Commission. The Federal Power Commission in fixing rates for power on amortization costs on all major Federal power projects shall establish a rate of interest which shall be uniform throughout the United States. From time to time the Administrator may, and upon the request of the Federal Power Commission shall, prepare and submit new revised or modified rate schedules to the Federal Power Commission; and such rate schedules shall become effective as approved by the Federal Power Commission. If any rate schedule submitted by the Administrator is not approved by the Federal Power Commission, the Federal Power Commission may revise such schedule in conformity with the standards prescribed by this act and, as so revised, such schedule shall become effective. Rate schedules shall be fixed with a view to encouraging the widest possible use of electric energy, having regard to the recovery, upon the basis of the application of such rate schedules to the capacity of the electric facilities of Bonneville project, of the cost of producing and transmitting such electric energy, including the amortization of the capital investment, including interest, over a reasonable period of years. Rate schedules shall be based upon an allocation of costs prepared by the Administrator and submitted to the Federal Power Commission for its approval. In computing the cost of electric energy developed from water power created as an incident to, and a byproduct of, the construction of Bonneville project, the Administrator shall allocate to the costs of electric facilities such a share of the cost of facilities having joint value for the production of electric energy and other purposes as the power development may fairly bear as compared with such other purposes. In order to distribute the benefits of an integrated transmission system and to encourage the equitable distribution of electric energy, the rate schedules may provide for uniform rates or rates uniform throughout prescribed transmission areas.

SEC. 6. (a) The President shall direct the holding of public hearings by such agency or agencies as he may designate and the preparation prior to December 31, 1937, of a report to the President which shall include—

(1) The findings of such agency or agencies respecting any unreasonable discrimination against the Boulder Canyon project with respect to charges against power for construction costs, amortization, and interest on the basis of the standards prescribed in this act and in view of the physical, financial, and economic conditions surrounding each project; and

(2) The recommendations of such agency or agencies concerning changes, if any, in charges and rates at Boulder Dam necessary to correct and remove such discrimination, and the effective dates thereof.

(b) The Secretary of the Interior, subject to the approval of the President and notwithstanding the provisions of any other statute, shall correct and remove such discrimination and adjust charges and rates to the extent that he deems necessary and appropriate as a result of the report submitted pursuant to paragraph (a) hereof.

(c) Nothing shall be done under this section which will delay the date at which the separate fund referred to in section 5 of the Boulder Canyon Project Act will become available or reduce the amount thereof, or which will impair the rights of the States of Arizona and Nevada to the payments provided for in paragraph 4 (b) of said act, but either or both of said States may elect by appropriate legislative action within 2 years from June 1, 1937, to receive in lieu thereof annually during and after the fiscal year in which such election is made the sum of $300,000 each until 1987. Rates fixed under paragraphs (a) and (b) shall include increments to the extent necessary to provide revenue to meet payments required by this paragraph (c).

SEC. 7. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, all purchases and contracts made by the Administrator or the Secretary of War for supplies or for services, except for personal services, shall be made after advertising, in such manner and at such times, sufficiently in advance of opening bids, as the Administrator or Secretary of War, as the case may be, shall determine to be adequate to insure notice and opportunity for competition. Such advertisement shall not be required, however, when (1) an emergency requires immediate delivery of the supplies or performance of the services; or (2) repair parts, accessories, supplemental equipment, or services are required for supplies or services previously furnished or contracted for; or (3) the aggregate amount involved in any purchase of supplies or procurement of services does not exceed $500; in which cases such purchases of supplies or procurement of services may be made in the open market in the manner common among businessmen. In comparing bids and in making awards, the administrator or the Secretary of War, as the case may be, may consider such factors as relative quality and adaptability of supplies or services, the bidder's financial responsibility, skill, experience, record of integrity in dealing, and ability to furnish repairs and maintenance services, the time of delivery or performance offered, and whether the bidder has complied with the specifications.

SEC. 8. (a) The Administrator, subject to the requirements of the Federal Water Power Act, shall keep complete and accurate accounts of operations, including all funds expended and received for the account of Bonneville project.

(b) The Administrator may make such expenditures for offices, vehicles, furnishings, equipment, supplies, books, periodicals, attendance of meetings, and for such other facilities and services as he may find necessary or appropriate for the proper administration of this act.

(c) In December of each year, the Administrator shall file with the Congress, through the Secretary of the Interior, a financial statement and a complete report as to the operation of Bonneville project during the preceding governmental fiscal year.

SEC. 9. The Administrator, the Secretary of War, and the Federal Power Commission, respectively, shall appoint and fix the compensation of such attorneys, engineers, and other experts as may be necessary for carrying out the functions entrusted to them under this act, without regard to the provisions of other laws applicable to the employment, compensation, and classification of officers and employees of the United States; and they may, subject to the civil-service laws, appoint such other officers and employees as may be necessary to carry out such functions and fix their salaries in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended.

SEC. 10. All receipts on account of Bonneville project shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of miscellaneous receipts, save and except that the Treasury shall set up and maintain from such receipts a continuing fund of $500,000, to the credit of the Administrator and subject to check by him, to defray emergency expenses and to insure continuous operation. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated from time to time, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 11. The Administrator may, in the name of the United States, bring such suits, at law or in equity, as he may find necessary in carrying out the purposes of the act; and he shall be represented in all litigation affecting the status or operation of Bonneville project by such counsel as he may select.

SEC. 12. If any provision of this act or the application of such provision to any person or circumstance shall be held invalid, the remainder of the act and the application of such provision to persons or circumstances other than those as to which it is held invalid shall not be affected thereby.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I shall consume but a very few minutes of your time. I do not know and I do not care what you think about the yardstick of the T. V. A. It has nothing whatever to do with this bill as it has been reported. The bill before us is for the distribution and sale of power produced at a navigation dam, built in the Columbia River, which will go to destruction and waste before another session of Congress unless we pass some provision for its sale and salvage. Now, the question is, Are we in favor of that? Are we in favor of saying we will not pass a bill and permit millions of dollars worth of power to go to destruction? You are not called upon to make an appropriation to produce this power. That has already been done. The money has been paid. More than 90 percent of the construction work has been completed. We are advised that power will be produced in the fall, before the next session of Congress.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. How much money has the Government spent on this project already?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Approximately $50,000,000.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. And what will be the additional cost if this bill is passed?

Mr. MANSFIELD. It is impossible to tell. This bill authorizes an appropriation of $500,000 to start. It will be necessary to construct two short trunk lines of distribution in order to reach the market. One of those will be about 40 miles down the river to the city of Portland. Another one will be a line in the opposite direction for about the same distance, where it is proposed that counties, cities, farm organizations, and others will be organized to meet the Government lines and take charge of the power at that point.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. And the purpose of this bill is to cash in on some of the money we have already spent?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Absolutely; to cash in on the money that has already been expended.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. Is there not a still further purpose in connection with this bill; that is, to make the Congress approve of what has been done by the P. W. A., without authorization by Congress, and also a further establishment of the policy of Congress with reference to this proposition?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I know of nothing in the bill that calls upon us to endorse or to criticize the T. V. A. or the P. W. A. It is a law within itself. It is true that this follows the lines for distribution and sale of this power similar to those that were adopted in the T. V. A. I do not know how to contrive a better means of disposing of it. If the gentleman from New York can point out a better way, I will be glad to give it consideration.

Mr. SNELL. It seems to me that the real purpose of this bill, in addition to selling the power that we shall generate and own up there, is to establish a Federal policy along the line of manufacturing, distributing, and selling electrical energy. That, honestly, it seems to me is the purpose of the bill.

Mr. MANSFIELD. This does not set the precedent. The precedent was set when the project was authorized.

Mr. SNELL. But all these projects were not originated by Congress, they were originated outside of Congress. In passing this bill, however, we set our stamp of approval on them.

Mr. MANSFIELD. This project was approved by Congress in the rivers and harbors bill of 1935. It was put in the bill as a Senate amendment. The House by a record vote instructed the House conferees to accept it, by a majority vote and a fair majority in the House. The House conferees declined to accept the Senate amendment, if the gentleman recalls.

Mr. SNELL. That is just what I had in mind, that the House did not accept it.

Mr. MANSFIELD. The House instructed us to accept it and the conferees had to accept it by order of the House. There was where the precedent was established.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I may be mistaken in my recollection, but is it not a fact that the Bonneville project was started by Executive order before 1935 and not approved by the Congress?

Mr. MANSFIELD. The actual construction was.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But had it received congressional approval at the time it was started?

Mr. MANSFIELD. It is the understanding that river and harbor projects originate when the survey is authorized. The survey was authorized in 1927, I believe, in what was known as the 308 program, when approximately 200 rivers were authorized to be surveyed for various purposes, including power, irrigation, navigation, flood control, and other useful purposes. The engineers had made a report on this project and on this entire river and watershed. Under that survey, then, the Public Works Administration adopted it as its project in about 1933 and started construction.

After the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of the United States against Arizona, in which the Parker Dam action was nullified by the decision of the Court, this and other projects amounting to approximately $200,000,000 were considered in jeopardy of the law, and they were placed in the river and harbor bill for ratification and approval by the highest authority known to man, the Senate of the United States, of which the distinguished gentleman from New York was a former and an honored Member.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for one further question?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. Along the line of the questions I asked the gentleman a few minutes ago, I find in the hearings on this matter, page 148, that Secretary Ickes, in reply to a question by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN], said:

> After all, it was necessary to draft this particular bill to agree, if we can, upon a national power policy regardless of the T. V. A.

Mr. MANSFIELD. That is true, Mr. Ickes made that statement before the committee.

Mr. SNELL. That is what I was trying to bring out in my former questions, and the gentleman thought that this was not a policy bill.

Mr. MANSFIELD. That was the viewpoint of Mr. Ickes, perhaps.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Texas yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. BEITER. The gentleman from New York is not opposed to that policy, is he?

Mr. SNELL. I am absolutely opposed to that policy, and always have been.

Mr. BEITER. I know the gentleman from New York is for the St. Lawrence seaway. That would be included in the national policy.

Mr. SNELL. That is an entirely different proposition. Certainly I am for the St. Lawrence seaway. If the gentleman wants to discuss the St. Lawrence seaway, I will be glad to discuss it with him at any time, at any place.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Following the questioning of the gentleman from New York of the chairman of the committee, is it not a fact that this dam was built primarily as an aid to navigation, and that now use of the surplus water will help return to the Government the money that has been used for this purpose?

Mr. MANSFIELD. The gentleman is entirely correct. Bonneville Dam is a navigation project.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman tell us how much navigation there ever has been there or ever will be above that dam?

Mr. MANSFIELD. No; I cannot, although otherwise I am quite familiar with the situation. The Bonneville Dam is about 40 miles above the city of Portland on the Columbia River, our second largest and most important river in the United States. Ocean ships will pass through this lock at this dam. It is a 30-foot project for ocean ships as an outlet for lumber and wheat, wheat being the principal farm product of the interior of that country, to enter into the export trade and the coastwise trade of the United States. In the recent river and harbor bill we adopted the project as a 30-foot depth project. Up to this dam from Portland the project depth will be 30 feet. Below Portland the depth is 35 feet. Portland is one of the deepest ports in the United States. This dam will carry navigation through the Cascade Range. Ships drawing 27 feet of water can sail 43 miles above the dam to what is known as The Dalles.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Then, according to the statement of the chairman of the committee, from the standpoint of a dam strictly for navigation, it is needed?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Absolutely.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. The two gentlemen from New York suggested debating the St. Lawrence waterway proposition. I wonder if it ever occurred to the gentleman on my right to go into the rates the people of the State of New York are paying in comparison with Ontario, which is right across the river. According to the Ontario rates the people in the State of New York were overcharged in 1936 $190,237,810 for electric light and power.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. The gentlemen from New York have been critizing the T. V. A. rates.

Mr. SNELL. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. RANKIN. Wait a minute.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I cannot yield for this discussion out of my time.

Mr. SNELL. May I say to the gentleman that the power company of New York sells its power for less per kilowatt-hour than does the Ontario Power Co.

Mr. RANKIN. They do not sell it to the people for less. They sell it to the Aluminum Co. of America at cheap rates, but not to the people.

Mr. SNELL. They sell it for less and the figures will bear me out. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time, and I now yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEITER].

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] has repeatedly pointed out that the Hydroelectric Commission of Ontario, Canada, is a model organization and that their rates are the yardstick by which all other hydro plants should be governed. Let us be fair. During the hearings that have been conducted recently by the Rivers and Harbors Committee he repeatedly referred to the Ontario rates and I became a little bit suspicious then because of the low rate we have in the State of New York. So I asked for information with reference to a comparison of rates as between the Ontario Power Co. and the Niagara Hudson Power Co. which serves the State of New York. This is the information they gave me:

The latest available comparison between the average revenue per kilowatt-hour received by Niagara Hudson system operating companies and the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario, was made by Mr. Floyd L. Carlisle, chairman of the board of directors of Niagara Hudson Power Corporation, before the Commission on Revision of the Public Service Law of New York State in December 1929. At that time Mr. Carlisle testified that in 1928 the average revenue per kilowatt-hour for electric sales in the Province of Ontario for all classes of service was 10.6 mills, while the average revenue per kilowatt-hour for the Niagara Hudson system, with taxes deducted, was 9.3 mills. As you undoubtedly know, the Hydro-Electric system pays practically nothing in taxes. The above, as far as we know, is the latest comparison made. However, I believe that any analysis made today would show virtually the the same comparable results.

It might be interesting to learn of the taxes paid yearly by Niagara Hudson system companies. For the year 1936 Niagara Hudson paid in Federal, State, and local taxes $12,287,231.93, an increase of $1,253,923.78 over 1935. An idea of the relative size of the system's 1936 taxes may be had from the following breakdown. Out of every dollar received from our electric and gas customers in 1936, 15.3 cents were set aside for the payment of taxes. Our tax bill was more than double the 1936 net income and more than 70 percent of the wages and salaries paid during the year to our 10,600 employees.

The record of Niagara Hudson system rate reductions speaks well for the company's policy of passing on savings to customers. In 1936 the average residential electric consumer's bill was 22.2 percent less than it was in 1929—the year of the formation of Niagara Hudson. At the same time the average cost represented a considerably less average than that of the Nation as a whole. In that year the United States average price for residential electric use was 4.69 cents a kilowatt-hour, whereas Niagara Hudson's price was 3.01 cents, or 16.6 percent lower. Since 1929 rate reductions to all classes of customers (gas and electric) have aggregated more than $8,040,000. Rate reductions of approximately $453,000 were made effective last year.

As plans mature for further simplification of existing rate structure and of consolidation of operating companies, it is the plan of the company to pass on any savings that may be accomplished in further rate reductions to its customers.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield? He made a reference to me in speaking of the Niagara Hudson Power Co.

Mr. BEITER. Permit me to complete my statement first. It has been pointed out that $195,000,000 has been spent by the T. V. A., and one-third of that is charged for soil conservation, one-third for flood control and transportation, and the other one-third for hydropower. In the set-up of any private utility there is soil conservation, there is flood control, and there is navigation, but those companies are not permitted in any case to charge off a certain portion to some other agency. While I have not made a study of the T. V. A. operations, so far as I know the benefits derived by the people of that section in low power rates have been tremendous, and I approve of the Government's maintaining a public power authority there so long as these benefits to the consumers continue. I merely want to bring out in this statement that unless and until it is definitely shown that a Federal power authority can benefit the people of the section involved by bringing about lower rates and service equal to or better than that provided by a private company, then there is no need for creating any such governmental agency.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. COLDEN.]

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. COLDEN. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BEITER] overlooked telling the House that from 75 to 90 percent of the electricity produced by the Niagara Hudson Co. is gobbled up by the Aluminum Co. of America at rates far below those existing in the rest of the country.

Mr. SNELL. That statement is not true. It is not 90 percent.

Mr. RANKIN. About 90 percent.

Mr. SNELL. No. It is not anywhere near 90 percent.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] is wrong as usual.

Mr. SNELL. They do not begin to take 90 percent of the power.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, I am going to direct my remarks to the Boulder Dam project.

The Boulder and the Bonneville Dams are two of the Nation's greatest public power projects. Both are built on the largest rivers of the Pacific States which flow on the western slope of the Rocky Mountains. These two outstanding power developments are not only linked together from the geographical standpoint, but coincide in time. Firm power at Boulder Dam became available on June 1, and the opening of the Bonneville project is but a few months in the future. These twin servants of present civilization become the masters of two turbulent streams and convert their energies to the use of man. They will not only reduce the toil of industry but they will greatly lessen the drudgery of the farm.

A BLESSING TO THE FARM

These harnessed rivers will pump the water, saw the wood, grind the feed, turn the grindstone, and even milk the cows, relieving the farmer of endless chores and labors, contributing to his welfare and adding to his hours for recreation. In addition, the light and power afforded by these great dams will give luster and brilliancy to the great marts of merchandise, bring a glow of sunshine to midnight streets, and add to the comfort and the good cheer of a million hearthstones. They will relieve the housewife in both the city and on the farm of backaches over the washtub, of sweat drops over steaming irons, the toil of the broom and the churn, and during heated days of summer will bestow the blessings of the icebox and of the cooling fan. And in wintertime, their warmth will drive away the chill of winter and the biting frost.

SOME INTERESTING HISTORY

On Monday, January 13, 1823, 114 years ago, Mr. Colden, a Representative in Congress from the city of New York, and its former mayor, made a speech on the floor of the House in support of a bill making provision for the occupation of the mouth of the Columbia River. In a lengthy discussion, he made this statement:

> According to official representations on our files, the harbor is safe and capacious—accessible to the largest merchant vessels—peculiarly defensible. The climate is so mild that frost is rare. The soil is fruitful and produces luxuriantly.

This was a typical viewpoint of the proponents who favored the extension of the boundaries of the United States from the Rocky Mountains to the shores of the Pacific in the Northwest.

On the same day, Mr. Tracy, also a Representative of New York, was stirred to reply to the remarks of his colleague, Mr. Colden. In his discussion, among other objections, he stated:

> The coast in the vicinity of the mouth of the Columbia is high, rugged, and, to use the technical phrase of sailors, iron-bound. The entrance into the river, or rather into the estuary into which the river disembogues, is difficult and dangerous, owing to the bars or shoals * * *. The climate, instead of being as I have heard it described, bland and salubrious, is bleak and inhospitable. It is true that deep snows or severe frosts are seldom known during 4 or 5 months of the year, but the vapor arising from the ocean, which is driven by the constantly prevailing west winds on the high mountains, is condensed by the cold and descends in drenching rains almost unremittingly. A dry day at this season is a luxury rarely enjoyed, and the cheering ray of a sunbeam scarcely ever experienced.

These two contradictory opinions expressed by these two gentlemen from New York demonstrate the then uncertain information of what is known as the great empire of the Northwest. It affords me some degree of pride that the opinion of an earlier Member of Congress and of my family has been vindicated, and that he contributed his support to the planting of the American flag on the then far Pacific shores. The establishment of American sovereignty at the mouth of the Columbia River was a great factor in the later extension of American government over the territory of the south, including California, the State which I now have the honor to represent.

PROGRESS OF PACIFIC STATES

The three States of the Pacific coast—California, Oregon, and Washington—afford this Nation an open door to Russia, the Orient, the South Seas, the Pacific shores of Latin America, and to the populations of the East Indies and Australia. Planting the American flag at the mouth of the Columbia River not only extended the frontiers of our country but it moved our boundaries to the West to the natural lines of national defense and endowed the citizenship of America with untold riches in fish and gold and ores, immeasurable resources of petroleum, the grandest forests under the canopy of heaven, fields of golden wheat, vineyards that yield the golden and gladdening spirits, a great variety of fruits, including the finest citrus fruits grown in the world, Florida not excepted.

What would Mr. Colden and Mr. Tracy of New York say today? One of the objections to the extension of our domain to the Columbia shores was slow transportation. The steamboat at the time was working miracles in the transfer of the traveling public and of merchandise. But today the Atlantic is bound to the Pacific by less than 24 hours of flight by air; the steam engine shoots across the continent from shore to shore in approximately 3 days, and many make the trip in an automobile within a period of 5 days. Such has been the miracle of progress in the past 114 years. The growth of the Pacific Coast States is one of the marvels of our country. Its resources, its productivity, is a most inspiring theme. I regret that time does not permit for me to elaborate and to expatiate on the marvels of the Pacific coast, and particularly the unparalleled attractions and progress of the great State of California. I have made this reference to the historical background merely to prepare you, my colleagues, for a discussion of section 6 of H. R. 7642, which pertains to the Boulder Dam in which southern California is deeply concerned.

THE SEVEN-STATE COMPACT

Mr. Chairman, there are three great river basins in the Pacific States and the western slope of the Rocky Mountains—the Columbia River, the basin of the Sacramento and San Joaquin Rivers, one of the most fertile sections of the Nation, then the Colorado River basin that covers a considerable area in seven States, namely, California, Arizona, Nevada, Utah, Colorado, Wyoming, and New Mexico. It was these seven States whose representatives signed, subject to legislative ratification, the so-called Colorado River compact at Santa Fe, N. Mex., in 1922. Six years later the Swing-Johnson bill, named after Representative Philip Swing and Senator HIRAM JOHNSON of California, passed Congress and was approved by President Coolidge in the year 1928.

AN EPIC OF PEACE

Previous to the signing of this compact between the seven States, brave souls with a vision of the future battled for the building of the Boulder Dam. This struggle, which took a militant form, was born in the hearts of the struggling farmers principally in the Imperial Valley of Southern California. Much of their land was below the level of the sea and all of it below the flood levels of the Colorado River and all periodically threatened by destruction by the floods of the wild Colorado and again by the lack of water in the dry season. These farmers were face to face with the problem, Shall we control the river and survive or shall we succumb, lose our livelihood and our hearthstones, and become wandering families on the face of the earth? It was a battle of the spirit of brave men and women against the uncertainties, the handicaps, and the uncontrolled and merciless tempers of an incorrigible river.

It was a bitter conflict against skepticism and prejudice and the suspicion of private utility interests. It was the pioneer movement in a new field of Government enterprise and the first extensive effort to provide large quantities of power for public use by a governmental agency. Some day this struggle will afford the novelist or the poet the theme for a great American epic. It is one of the stern, persistent, and patient battles of man against nature, a conquest won by the arms and tools of peace.

LOS ANGELES A BIG FACTOR

The unparalleled growth of Los Angeles was one of the contributing factors in the solution of this problem. About the year 1900, when the city of Los Angeles had a population of 100,000 people, the water supply became a question of grave concern. Since financiers and private corporations feared the hazards of such an undertaking the bungalow owners voted $25,000,000 in bonds and built the famous aqueduct to the north of the Sierra Nevadas and brought water from 240 miles away. This was deemed sufficient for a population of somewhere between a million and a million and a half people. Many there were who thought that this would provide the city of Los Angeles with water for domestic purposes for a century to come, but the optimistic prophets were too modest.

The census of 1930 gave Los Angeles approximately one and one-quarter million population, with nearly 1,000,000 more in the surrounding territory. Los Angeles was faced with the problem of providing water for a million more. Foresighted citizens had long since conceived plans for the utilization of waters from the Colorado River, with the result that the metropolitan water district was organized by 13 cities of southern California for the purpose of augmenting their domestic supply. These cities are, namely, Los Angeles, Pasadena, Glendale, Long Beach, Torrance, Santa Monica, Burbank, Beverley Hills, Compton, San Marino, Santa Ana, Anaheim, and Fullerton.

THE COSTS AND MAGNITUDE

Mr. Chairman, the cost of the Boulder Dam project is estimated at approximately $165,000,000, including about $38,000,000 for the All-American Canal. The cost of the dam and powerhouse has amounted to about $100,000,000, including interest during construction at the rate of 4 percent per annum. Of this amount $25,000,000 was allocated by Congress to flood control. The cost of the generating machinery will probably equal the remaining $27,000,000. The costs against power may be tabulated as follows:

Direct charges to power:
Cost of dam directly allocated to power	$75,000,000
Cost of machinery	27,000,000
Total direct charges to power	102,000,000
Indirect charges to power:
Cost of dam allocated to flood control but payable out of excess earnings from power	25,000,000
Total charges to power	127,000,000

The hard-driven contracts for the sale of water for the generation of electricity, which made possible the construction of Boulder Dam, provides that the cost of the generating machinery shall be repaid to the United States in 10 years with interest at 4 percent.

From the foundation to the top the dam is 726 feet, the highest in the world. The height of the river will be raised 584 feet. The reservoir will contain 30,500,000 acre-feet when full. The water of the reservoir would cover the State of New York to the depth of 1 foot. The dam will stop the entire average flow of the river for 2 years, and would supply about 5,000 gallons of water for every inhabitant on the earth, or 80,000 gallons for each person in the United States. It is estimated that the Boulder Dam will irrigate more than a million acres of desert and will produce about 1,700,000 horsepower.

The mean annual run-off of the Colorado River Basin States was estimated at 16,000,000 acre-feet. In the Colorado River compact 7,500,000 acre-feet were allocated to the upper basin States—Colorado, Utah, Wyoming, and New Mexico—and an equal amount was allotted to the lower basin States, with a proviso that the lower States might increase their consumptive use of such water by an additional 1,000,000 acre-feet per annum. Although California by prior rights in the use of water for irrigation was entitled to a larger proportion, our State agreed to limit its use to 4,400,000 acre-feet plus one-half of the surplus waters available. Nevada obtained a comparatively small amount of 300,000 acre-feet per annum and Arizona 2,800,000 acre-feet from the main river. Arizona never ratified the compact but the other six did ratify it on a six-State basis.

FLOOD CONTROL AND THE IMPERIAL VALLEY

The flood-control factor of the Boulder Dam is of great importance. The irrigated lands lie below this point. In addition to the control of the floods the stored water affords a uniform and permanent supply of water for irrigation for a large area of exceedingly fertile land that is particularly adapted to the growing of alfalfa, long-staple cotton, winter and early spring vegetables, and fruits. About 30,000 carloads of cantaloups are shipped from the Imperial Valley each season, and the alfalfa affords from 7 to 10 cuttings per season and averages about 1 ton per cutting.

A POOR PROPHET

Incidentally, I might say that I saw the northern part of the Imperial Valley from the windows of a Southern Pacific train for the first time in the year 1902. As a publisher of a country newspaper in northwest Missouri, I wrote to my readers that I was now in southern California, that as I gazed out of the window, I could see nothing but sand and sage brush and barren mountains in the distance; that I would rather own 100 acres of the blue-grass land in northwest Missouri than all of California I could see at the moment. Since that date, I have traversed this route many times, and it has proven to be one of the most fertile and productive sections of California and one of the outstanding garden spots of the world. There is no doubt that Congressman Colden of New York of 1823 was a better prophet than the Representative of California who bears the family name in 1937.

SUCCESS OF PUBLIC OWNERSHIP

There are two additional dams below Boulder Dam neither of which compare in size to the latter. Parker Dam, the first below Boulder, is being built by the Metropolitan Water District of Southern California as a feature of its project of supplying 13 cities of southern California with a domestic would rather own 100 acres of the bluegrass land in north- of Yuma, the Imperial Dam will supply the All-American Canal with the water for irrigation required by the Imperial Valley.

The development of power early became a controversial factor in the building of the Boulder Dam. It was urged by many that this dam should be built for flood control only and that a low dam would suffice. Others, seeeing the possibilities of power development, urged a high dam, and around this controversy the battle raged for many years.

The success of the bureau of power and light of the city of Los Angeles contributed much to the building of the high dam for production of power. In building the Los Angeles aqueduct, the production of power developed naturally in the fall of the water from an altitude of 4,000 feet to the floor of Los Angeles, which lies but a few hundred feet above sea level. The success of the bureau of light and power of Los Angeles is marked. It not only has saved millions in reduction of rates to the local consumers, while at the same time creating a municipal equity of over $50,000,000, but it has been a big factor in attracting industries to Los Angeles. With a heavy transient flow of citizens within the State it was impossible to find work for these newcomers, so Los Angeles launched one of the most successful industrial programs in the history of modern cities.

The growth of the city, and the surrounding territory, made new demands for more cheap power. In addition, it will be necessary for the Metropolitan Water District to elevate water to a height of 1,700 feet in order to bring it to Los Angeles and neighboring cities. So the Metropolitan Water District united with the city of Los Angeles and placed its influence behind the high-dam project and the development of light and power.

ONLY GUARANTEED PUBLIC POWER PROJECT

Mr. Chairman, under the Swing-Johnson Act, the Government did not expend a dollar until the payment of the cost of Boulder Dam and the machinery for generating power was underwritten by Los Angeles and other cities, the Metropolitan Water District, and other local private companies. The Metropolitan Water District agreed to take 36 percent of the firm power available.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLDEN. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. The gentleman knows that the Metropolitan Water District had nothing whatever to do with the original contracts, and that the original contracts were underwritten by the city of Los Angeles and the Southern California Edison Co.

Mr. COLDEN. May I say to the gentleman from Utah that the Metropolitan Water District has assumed very largely the responsibility of the city of Los Angeles, and still remains by far the largest consumer and taxpayer in that district.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. If the gentleman will yield further, I admit that, but when the gentleman talks about the persons or the institutions which underwrote the original contracts, he will find this great public-utility corporation looming very large in the picture, and that power company will be one of the large beneficiaries under the modification of contracts asked.

Mr. COLDEN. Under this proposal the private power companies utilize about 8 percent of the power, and 92 percent goes to public agencies.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLDEN. Yes; I yield to my chairman.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Is it not a fact that at the time this contract was entered into Boulder Dam had no competition from other places nearby in the production of power, and that it brought about a great change in conditions?

Mr. COLDEN. The statement of my chairman is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The gentleman has referred to me.

Mr. COLDEN. I cannot yield further now.

The States of Arizona and Nevada are each allocated 18 percent of the power, which they are permitted to take upon notice at any time during the 50-year period. So far neither State has assumed any large responsibility for the purchase of power. Nevada is taking some and has plans to take more. Los Angeles and a private company agree to use and pay for the portion allocated to Arizona and Nevada until these States are ready to use it. The cities of Los Angeles, Pasadena, Glendale, and Burbank, all of which have successful municipally owned light and power plants, are allocated 20 percent of the Boulder power. Private utilities are allocated the 8 percent remaining. The result is that the major portion of power is allocated to public agencies which serve the consumer at approximate cost. The guaranty of this huge project was only possible because of the publicly owned utilities of southern California.

POWER ESSENTIAL TO PACIFIC STATES

It might be said, in this connection, that the Pacific coast is more power conscious, more interested in public ownership of light and power than any other section of the Nation. The Pacific Coast States are denied large areas of coal, such as are found in Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Kentucky, and Illinois, for example. The Pacific coast has great resources in minerals, in fisheries, in timber, and in agricultural and horticultural products that yield themselves to manufacturing, processing, and canning. Many of the products, particularly of California, are unique in that they find a wide market reaching beyond the boundaries of our own country. Canning products of the Pacific coast, fisheries, fruits, vegetables, seek the markets of the world. Light and power lend themselves to this sort of enterprise. So light and power are absolutely essential to the industry and the progress of the Pacific coast. China and Japan, and other parts of the Orient furnish the greatest potential market in the world. The keen business foresight of the Pacific coast has long cast its vision of profitable trade toward other nations sharing the shores of this great ocean.

PAYS FOR FLOOD CONTROL

Southern California has not only agreed to pay for the construction of the Boulder Dam and generating machinery for light and power within a period of 50 years, including interest at 4 percent, but also $25,000,000 for flood control. These funds come from the revenues derived from the light and power consumers in southern California. Every bungalow owner, every business house, every factory, help carry this load. The money comes from the pockets of the people of Southern California. No other Government light and power project has the guarantee that its cost will be defrayed by an iron-bound contract such as exists regarding Boulder Dam. The flood-control burden serves Arizona and other parts of California.

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. COLDEN. I yield.

Mr. FORD of California. Does the gentleman know any other power project which has $25,000,000 of flood control saddled on its back?

Mr. COLDEN. Absolutely not.

Mr. MANSFIELD. And they get no more benefit from that flood control than any other section of the United States.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLDEN. I shall yield in just a moment.

BUILDS OWN TRANSMISSION LINES

Not only has southern California guaranteed the payment of this immense improvement with 4-percent interest but, in order to avail itself of the light and power produced at Boulder Dam, the city of Los Angeles has built two transmission lines a distance of 270 miles, at a cost of approximately $23,000,000, to bring the power to the users and consumers within the city. The Metropolitan Water District has expended $3,400,000 to build a transmission line to its pumping stations. Thus not only the burden of paying for the dam and its electric equipment but the additional burden of operating the transmission lines falls upon the consumers of southern California.

Since the signing of the Boulder Dam Act of 1928 the Government's policy toward public power projects has decidedly changed. Today we have the great Tennessee Valley Authority building a number of projects without any ironclad guaranty of payment from the consumers. Bonds have been authorized at an interest rate of not to exceed 3½ percent, but no bonds have as yet been issued. Funds are supplied by the Treasury, with no specific obligation for repayment. Transmission lines are built by the T. V. A., and no initial cost is assumed by the consumers in that territory.

BOULDER DAM DISCRIMINATED AGAINST

The same liberal policy is being pursued toward Bonneville Dam. Here again the Government is building a great power project with transmission lines, and also Grand Coulee. The favored citizens at these dams assume no responsibility as to payment; they merely may purchase and use such light and power as they find convenient. It may safely be assumed that the rate of interest on these investments will be on a par with the T. V. A. and much less than is now being paid at Boulder Dam. It is assumed that the same provisions will prevail at the Fort Peck Dam on the upper Missouri. In addition, it is the current opinion that at Bonneville more than $25,000,000 will be charged off to navigation and will form no part of the capital investment upon which the consumers of light and power will base their rate of payment. The T. V. A. will undoubtedly charge off large amounts for navigation, flood control, and other purposes in their many projects. Southern California desires the Boulder Dam project to be kept on a sound financial basis, but it feels it should not be charged a higher interest than at other projects, and that in view of the present policy of the Government the cost of flood control should be treated differently and more in line with the present policy.

So the Boulder Dam project finds itself threatened with discrimination on two very vital points. One is the rate of interest of repayable advances; the other is that power at Boulder Dam is charged with payment with interest of a $25,000,000 charge for flood control. Consequently, the representatives of southern California ask that the Congress, in its deliberations, place them on a parity with competing governmental projects. This discrimination is far reaching in its final effect. Many major and basic industries of this country are seeking locations or are planning branches. Like all good businessmen, they shop around to see where they can obtain the most favorable location and the most economical cost of light and power, which is more and more becoming a vital factor in every aspect of industry.

GOVERNMENT MAKES PROFIT AT BOULDER

If we should place Bonneville Dam on the basis of the Boulder Dam, we would first require the citizens of municipalities and other political organizations and private utilities and industries, to underwrite the entire cost of the project with an agreement to repay the entire cost within 50 years, including interest at 4 percent. Bonneville would be required to pay 37½ percent of its surplus revenues to the States of Washington and Oregon in lieu of taxes. It would further load the consumers of the Northwest with the cost of navigation on the Columbia River. To place these onerous obligations on the people of the Northwest would, in all probability, defeat the entire proposition and deny the citizenship of that territory the tremendous benefits to be derived from the present program.

So the citizens of southern California merely ask that so far as the Government is concerned, the financial conditions be equalized as nearly as possible. Under present conditions the consumers of light and power in southern California are paying a profit to the Government of approximately $1,000,000 annually since the Government borrows at less than 3 and receives 4 percent on its advances for Boulder Dam.

DISCRIMINATION AGAINST PUBLIC POLICY

Congress created the Interstate Commerce Commission in order that there should be no discrimination in railway rates. Congress established the Federal Communications Act to protect the public from discriminations by telephone, telegraph, and radio companies. Congress created the Federal Power Commission to prevent unreasonable differences in rates, charges, service, facilities, or in any other respect, either as between localities or as between classes of services and to prevent undue preference or advantage to any person, or the subjection of any person to any undue prejudice or disadvantage. Thus, it is clearly the policy of the Federal Government to prevent discrimination against the citizens of any section of the country. And all that the consumers of light and power are asking in southern California is that this policy be extended to the Boulder Dam power project.

PUBLIC HEARINGS TO BE HELD

Section 6 empowers the President to direct the holding of public hearings by such agency or agencies as he may designate for the consideration of any unreasonable discrimination against the Boulder Canyon project with respect to charges against power for construction costs, amortization, and interest. Also that the agency conducting these hearings is authorized to recommend changes in charges and rates at Boulder Dam necessary to correct and remove such discriminations. The Secretary of the Interior, subject to the approval of the President, shall correct and remove such discriminations and adjust charges and rates to the extent that he deems necessary and appropriate. This section, we believe, provides a procedure that will remove the discriminations that exist against Boulder Dam.

We ask your support of this bill and the Boulder amendment, in order that southern California may stand upon a parity with its competitors, in order that our people may not be discriminated against; the southern California may enjoy a square deal along with the manifold blessings of the New Deal. We are not asking that rates be the same as at other projects, and we do not believe that rates should be made uniform at all projects, but according to the physical and financial conditions that control the production of light and power. What we ask is, that so far as the Government is concerned, from its standpoint, it will treat all projects alike.

UPPER BASIN STATES PROTECTED

At one time in the hearings the upper basin States injected some objections to this bill. The question was raised concerning the payment of $300,000 per year to the States of Nevada and Arizona in lieu of an 18¾ percent of the surplus to each State after cost of operation and also the Government financial requirements are paid. Nevada has unofficially indicated a desire to have a stated and uniform annual amount instead of uncertain revenues to be derived from the 18¾ percentage. So far Arizona has not indicated its intention respecting this option. It is a matter to be determined by the legislatures of the States.

A further provision in paragraph C of section 6, reemphasizes that the rights of the upper basin States shall not be impaired in the separate fund which will be created after the other liabilities are liquidated. The Boulder Dam Act provides that after the Boulder Dam, its equipment and the $25,000,000 for flood control are paid for, then the revenues are to be appropriated by Congress for other projects in the Colorado River Basin. Thereby the people of southern California are deprived of the ownership of the project they will have paid for but will continue to contribute to the development of other areas some of which will be far removed from its boundary and trade territory.

UPPER BASIN STATES BENEFITED

Because this bill in no manner impairs the rights of the upper basin States, there is no reason for any objection from that territory. The fact is that the upper basin States have been greatly benefited by the compact. The use of the waters of the Colorado is governed by priority. The Imperial Valley of Southern California, before the construction of the Boulder Dam and previous to any considerable development of irrigation in the upper basin States, was using practically all of the normal flow of the Colorado River during the irrigation season.

If the Colorado River compact had not been entered into and Boulder Dam not built, the upper basin States, because of the previous use of the waters in southern California, would have had very limited use of the Colorado River and its tributaries. The seven-State compact conserved practically half of these waters for the use of the upper-basin States, which were utilizing but a fraction of the amount. California conceded this liberal allowance because of the necessity of flood control and the advantages of a normal flow of water from storage and from the benefits of cheap light and power. So, instead of complaint, the upper basin States should rejoice and give their hearty support to the Boulder Dam amendments in the Bonneville bill.

CALIFORNIA HAS BEEN AND IS FAIR

So far as I am informed, there has never been any attempt on the part of the State of California, or of the political organizations in southern California, in any way to impair the rights of other States in the Boulder Dam compact. California has pursued a fair and neighborly policy. We recognize the rights of the neighboring and other States of the Colorado basin. We are prepared to carry out this contract in good faith. If the Federal Government had not afforded competitive projects more liberal provisions, this issue involved in section 6 of H. R. 7642 would probably not have arisen. But time and conditions have changed since southern California assumed the enormous obligation of reimbursing the Government for the building of Boulder Dam. We simply ask that the Government shall not deal harshly with us and not place burdens upon our consumers that are not shared by the people who enjoy the benefits and the blessings of the other Federal projects. We believe that we are justified in making this appeal. I submit the issue to the fair judgment of my colleagues. [Applause.]

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON].

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, just as the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEITER] took the floor the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] interjected a remark to the effect that 90 percent of the power produced up in the Niagara region is sold to the Aluminum Co. of America. No doubt what the gentleman had in mind was the T. V. A., where they have sold 100 percent of the power produced at the Norris Dam to the Aluminum Co. of America, and the output of another dam has been contracted to the Monsanto Chemical Co. of St. Louis. The gentleman has stated he does not approve of the low rates the T. V. A. has made to these large corporations, and I do not wonder, because the price the T. V. A. is receiving for the power furnished these two gigantic corporations—and the Aluminum Co. of America is one of the largest of organizations—is far below the cost of production.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. How does the gentleman reconcile the facts stated in the letter read by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEITER] when the people of Canada pay less for power and the Commission receives more and the people of New York pay more and the Niagara Hudson Co. receives less?

Mr. KNUTSON. I am coming to that, if the gentleman will permit.

For many years we have had held out to us statements of the wonderful benefits that were being derived from public ownership of power in Ontario. I have some very interesting figures here.

In 1896 the public debt of the Province of Quebec, which operates under private ownership, was $32,207,000, while the debt of Ontario was only $33,644. In 1911 the people of Ontario embarked on a program of public ownership, and their debt jumped to $24,765,000, whereas the public debt of the Province of Quebec had decreased to $28,170,000. In 1932, which is the latest year for which figures are available as contained in the Canadian Yearbook, the public debt of the Province of Ontario, which operates under public ownership, was $577,705,000, whereas in Quebec, where they have private ownership and derive taxes from the utilities, the debt was only $108,188,700.

I here insert the table of indebtedness.

It is not difficult to appreciate the protest Ontario's taxpayers are making against the tremendous increase in their tax burden. The following statement from the Canada Yearbook of 1933, official publication of the Dominion of Canada, compares the indebtedness in two Provinces—Quebec and Ontario—from 1896 to 1932:

	Page index	Quebec, private ownership	Ontario, public ownership
Capital invested	6	$567, 218, 230	$367, 701, 419
Primary power (horsepower)	18	2, 914, 070	1, 395, 914
Output (kilowatt-hours)	24	8, 449, 936, 000	2, 931, 850, 000
Revenue	8	$43, 508, 546	$40, 303, 483
Expenses, total	10	$13, 686, 380	$36, 496, 900
Taxes	10	$3, 083, 265	$292, 293
Number of employees	12	3, 275	5, 893
Pay roll	10	$4, 625, 974	$9, 930, 206
Revenue (excluding taxes)		40, 425, 281	40, 011, 190
Capital invested per horsepower		194	263
Revenue per horsepower (excluding taxes)		13. 87	28. 66

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I prefer not to, as my time is limited. The gentleman disagreed with the remarks I made on T. V. A. sometime ago, but I notice in the extension of the remarks he subsequently inserted he denounced the very things I denounced—the contracts which were made between T. V. A. and the Aluminum Co. of America and the Monsanto Chemical Co. of St. Louis. Therefore, I assume the gentleman and I are in accord, at least to that extent, although the gentleman did not so indicate when I first took the floor to speak on the operation of T. V. A.

Mr. RANKIN. Now, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. No; I cannot yield now.

Mr. RANKIN. Do not point at me then.

Mr. KNUTSON. In Quebec they had, according to the Canadian Yearbook, $567,000,000 invested in utilities which were under private ownership, whereas in Ontario there is but $367,000,000.

Quebec produces, in round figures, 2,900,000 horsepower as against 1,395,000 horsepower produced in Ontario.

The revenue received by Quebec is $43,508,000 as against $40,303,000 in Ontario.

Now, get this: The number of employees in Quebec is about half as large as the number employed in Ontario, although Quebec produces twice as much power. In other words, in Ontario, they use the public utilities as a place to unload all their hacks and worn-out politicians.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a brief question there?

Mr. KNUTSON. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. I would like to add to the gentleman's statement that two of the largest power companies in Quebec have some of their best contracts with the Ontario Power Commission.

Mr. KNUTSON. Yes, that is true. The report so states.

Mr. SNELL. They are selling power to them at a profit and then, in turn, they are reselling it at another profit.

Mr. KNUTSON. The Canadian Yearbook gives that information, I may say to the gentleman from New York.

Now, get this! The pay roll in Quebec, privately operated, is $4,625,000, and notwithstanding the fact that Quebec produces twice as much power as Ontario, the pay roll of Ontario is $9,930,000 or more than twice as much.

Now, let us see how the prices have been jigged up to the people in that Province. In Ontario the cost per horsepower in 1917 was $14.50, in 1933 it was $26.59, or an increase of 54.5 percent.

I will now give the increases as shown by the following table:

Municipality	Population	1917	1933	Percent increases, 1917–33
Toronto	621, 596	$14. 50	$26. 59	83
Hamilton	150, 063	14. 00	25. 84	85

The last report of the Ontario Hydroelectric Commission, for the year ending October 31, 1933, shows a deficit of $4,221,000. In addition, T. Stewart Lyon, new chairman of the hydro commission, points out that during the next 2½ years the commission must accept additional deliveries of $260,000 horsepower on contracts made with the Beauharnois and Maclaren companies of Quebec before he took office.

Apparently the people of Toronto are thoroughly aroused. The Toronto Globe of March 17, 1934, quotes the mayor of Toronto as follows:

> My first duty is to the citizens of Toronto. I am not entering into political controversy with the Provincial Hydro. The rate for power to the local commission was fixed at $17.44 per horsepower when present rates to the consumer were decided upon. The rate has steadily increased and the amount which the system has paid over and above the price of $17.44 without an increase to the consumer is in the neighborhood of $18,000,000.
> An increase in rates to the local consumer appears likely—I am protesting against this bill—the 1933 hydro commission bill to the city. If we accept this burden an increase in rates appears unavoidable.

The Toronto Globe of March 19, 1934, declares that the city has practiced every economy to offset the increasing wholesale cost, but despite that fact shows a deficit of $729,000 for the years 1932 and 1933.

Toronto is not the only city hit by wholesale rate increases. The reports of the hydro commission for the years 1917 and 1933 reveal that the commission has made drastic increases in its charges to the municipalities. The above table shows the boost to towns of all sizes.

The last available report of the Ontario Hydroelectric Commission, which is for the year ending October 31, 1933, shows a deficit of $4,221,000.

Of course, they can sell power below a private utility where they do not pay taxes, where they can pile up deficits for the people to pay that run to $4,000,000 or $5,000,000 a year, and where they lay nothing aside for depreciation. Under such circumstances, it is a wonder to me they cannot give it away. Do you call it a yardstick where they do not pay taxes, where they lay aside nothing for depreciation and replacement, and where they are allowed to pile up a deficit of $4,221,000 in 1 year? Is that a yardstick? Yes; just like T. V. A. is a yardstick.

Oh, the gentleman from Mississippi inserted a lot of figures on rates in Minnesota——

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. No; I will not yield. The gentleman can take the RECORD in his own time and put in all the information he wants to, but I do not want any more of that kind in mine.

Mr. RANKIN. I cannot put in any more misinformation than the gentleman is putting in now.

Mr. KNUTSON. Of course, that is a matter of opinion, largely, and also of veracity.

Mr. RANKIN. I would have the advantage in either case.

Mr. KNUTSON. It has been the case wherever they have had public operation or public ownership that the whole set-up merely becomes an adjunct to some political machine. That is going to be the case down in Tennessee, as has been the case in Ontario and as has been the case all over the world, wherever they have tried public ownership, and I am not even excepting Russia.

I am not opposed to public ownership where they can at least break even after deducting for depreciation and interest on investment, but I am unalterably opposed to these quasipublic operations where huge deficits are piled up that must be liquidated in higher taxes. It is time we stopped kidding ourselves.

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, in considering this bill, H. R. 7931, it seems to me the wise thing to do, until this project is put into operation and it is determined where this power is to be distributed, would be to retain control in the Army engineers. They are able and capable of handling it without additional cost to the Government. There is no use of our coming in here and setting up another board, another new department of government. If there ever was a party that said it was going to try to cut down Government organizations and consolidate departments, it is the party of this administration, which made that promise to the American people, yet hardly a bill comes before the House of Representatives that does not set up something new, some new body, some new organization. It seems to me that we should stop these new set-ups, new organizations, and the only way to stop is to stop now; do not set up any more bureaus. We talk about building these great, large power dams. We are building one up on the Columbia River, the Grand Coulee, 400 or 500 feet high, and this dam at Bonneville will soon be completed. We think that they are a blessing to the people of the Columbia River country. Bills have been passed in the House in the last 2 or 3 months providing for the construction of dams on the Sacramento River and on the San Joaquin River in California and on the Colorado River, and you are going to build many dams in the Northwest. These dams may rise up some day to damn all of you who think they are going to be of much benefit to your people; I hope, however, it will not be the case. Just this week up at Fairbanks, Alaska, there was a tremor in the earth, and when it subsided there was a crevice 6 or 8 inches wide into the bowels of the earth. You gentlemen know of the earthquakes you have had in California, you know of the tremors that you have had in Oregon and Washington and Montana and all through the Middle West, and if something like that should happen in the not distant future and it should break asunder these great dams that you are building for power purposes, the waters that are held back might rush down through these valleys and annihilate the people of these States. It may drown thousands of people and do untold damage to millions of dollars' worth of property. What a catastrophe that would be! I hope it never happens. You men here talk about flood control, and we are not doing these things we ought to do for the purpose of flood control. Gracious goodness, you are talking more about building power plants and putting the Government in business and putting private individuals out of business than you are about conserving the natural resources and doing the things of real benefit to the people.

If you want to build flood-control propositions, you ought to go to the headwaters, or to the tributaries of these streams, and build small dams so that if one did go, if one should break, you would not annihilate all of the people who live in its vicinity, for whom you are trying to do some real good. The blessings that you think are coming to you may annihilate all of the people who live in these valleys. These earthquakes have happened before, and in the Northwest section of the country where they are prevalent, they are liable to happen again. If you are going to take care of these people in flood control in these localities, you will stop this idea of trying to get the Government into all kinds of business; you will stop trying to set up these power plants, to put all the people in these States out of business who do an honest, legitimate business, so that they have to get on the Government pay roll to find a job. You are building up the greatest socialistic organization in this country, and by setting out these six or seven great power zones that the President talks about, before you have completed one, you are building another somewhere else. It seems incredible that men who are supposed to be men of common sense would start other projects before they finish one—before they know the actual results of the experiment. You talk about the T. V. A. and the yardstick it is supposed to be. If some of these men who talk about the cost of power knew what they are talking about, they would not talk as they do in the House of Representatives. They do not know how to figure costs as was revealed a few minutes ago by Mr. KNUTSON, of Minnesota. He is right.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I should be glad to yield if the gentleman will give me some more time.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I am sorry, but I have no time to give.

Mr. RICH. I need all of my time. I want to finish this statement, and then I shall be glad to yield to the chairman of the committee. Three or four weeks ago you heard the whiz of an airplane that came from Russia over the North Pole and over the Grand Coulee and the Bonneville dams and by all the dams in California. What a time we would have in that country providing we were at war with some of the nations in Asia and they had a 5-ton bomb tied on the tail of that airplane. What would happen if they dropped one bomb on one of those big dams? They would annihilate all of the people in those valleys. The onrush of water would drown them all. What destruction we would have. What pity we would have for the people of Washington and Oregon and California if such a thing should happen, and you say it is not possible? Three weeks after the first plane came over, another plane with three fine Russian gentlemen came along and went on down to San Diego. Suppose the first plane might have missed its objective, and the second plane had a bomb and it had dropped it on the Bonneville Dam, what would happen to all those towns that are down near the coast? They would annihilate your people and wreck them, and the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE] would be the most sorrowful man in this country if anything like that should happen.

Mr. PIERCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. PIERCE. The gentleman is making more of a tremor and more noise than we ever heard out there. [Laughter.]

Mr. RICH. The trouble with you people out there is that you come in here. You do not make enough tremor for yourselves, and you get money out of the Federal Treasury to do things that are not reasonable. That is what we complain about in the East. Now, if you had some men out there who would get down to work and try to do something for themselves, instead of coming to the Federal Government to get the Federal Government to do everything for you, then I would take my hat off to you fellows in Washington, Oregon, and California. But when you come in here and want the Federal Government to do all these things I do not think that is proper. If it is so good, why compel us to do something for you? I will have to yield now to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. MANSFIELD. The gentleman called attention to the fact that a large number of dams were being constructed by the Federal Government near the western coast, especially in the Northwest. I will ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that the Government has constructed more dams in the State of Pennsylvania than it has west of the Mississippi River. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. RICH. Now, the gentlemen on this side seem to snicker and laugh at that statement made by the genial chairman of this committee. They not only laughed at the things I said about these dams being destroyed and killing people, but the fact is what I have said may be a most serious realization to you and your people. I hope, however, the day will never come. I do not want any floods to visit you, much less any more earthquakes.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. Oh, I have to answer the chairman of the committee. [Laughter.] Now, you talk about dams in Pennsylvania. I have traveled over Pennsylvania from west to east and north to south. I know of two or three lakes in Pennsylvania and I know several of them have been artificially made. When it comes to building dams I could not tell you for the life of me what the chairman is referring to about building dams in Pennsylvania. Grand Coulee Dam in Washington will cost 10 times more than all the dams combined that were ever built in Pennsylvania.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman give me some more time?

Mr. SEGER. I am sorry, but I do not have any more time.

Mr. RICH. I would like to have shown to the chairman of the committee that where they build 1 dam in Pennsylvania they build 40 in the West. Where $1 is spent in Pennsylvania $50 is spent for dams west of the Mississippi River.

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. CARTER].

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, some question has been raised as to whether or not this is a legitimate navigation project. I think the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has cleared that up very well. In addition, I want to say that in my opinion it is a legitimate navigation proposition. A survey was made under the direction of the Chief of Army Engineers. Commerce, to the extent of nearly 1,000,000 tons per annum, originates in this district. The total value of that tonnage for the year 1935, according to the report of the Chief of Engineers, was upward of $12,000,000. So I think there is no doubt whatever about this being a legitimate navigation proposition.

The Chief of Engineers not only surveyed this river and suggested improvements, but under his direction was carried on the construction of this vast dam and power-house that are now nearing completion.

I intend to vote for this bill, but there are some things in it which I do not like. One of the features of the bill with which I am not in accord is the fact that it does not put under the Chief of Army Engineers the entire operation of this plant. This bill, as the membership of this committee knows, provides for the appointment of an administrator to sell the power. I would like to have seen authority given to the Army engineers to sell this power, in addition to operating the plant and producing the power. I do not believe there is a finer body of men in the world than the Corps of Army Engineers. I have had an opportunity to observe their work for the past 12 or 14 years. They are competent. They are efficient. My humble opinion is that they not only would most splendidly operate the plant, but could very efficiently handle the disposition of the power.

Now, we say the T. V. A. is a yardstick; that we are experimenting there, more or less. We have a commission in control down there. Why not experiment a little out here on this Bonneville proposition and give the engineers a chance and see what they could do in the sale and distribution of that power? I think it would be a sane, reasonable, and sensible thing to do and I believe the Army engineers would demonstrate they could do it in a splendid way.

There is another provision of this bill, found on page 14, section 7, that has to do with the buying of supplies by the administrator whom it is anticipated to appoint. We have in our Revised Statutes, section 3709, which provides the manner of purchasing supplies, which very briefly is that bids shall be advertised for and then the contract awarded to the lowest responsible bidder. The opening of this section 7 attempts to repeal section 3709 in these words, "notwithstanding any other provision of law all purchases and contracts made by the administrator shall be made after advertising in such manner and at such times as the administrator or Secretary of War may decide is sufficient."

I believe that section should be amended. I do not believe that this administrator in the sale and distribution of the electricity, or the Secretary of War in operating the power-house and creating this electricity, should be permitted to go out and advertise for bids in any manner they choose.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. CARTER. Nowhere in that section does it provide that the contract shall be awarded to the lowest responsible bidder.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. I yield for a brief question.

Mr. MAY. Has the gentleman considered the fact that under this act this administrator to be appointed is accountable to nobody at all except the Secretary of the Interior? He does not even have to report to the Congress, and may go out and buy anything and everything he wants to, without limit.

Mr. CARTER. Yes; I am mindful of that fact, and along that line I desire to call attention to paragraph (b), section 8, on page 15, under which the gentleman from Kentucky has just suggested that the administrator may make such expenditures for various matters as he desires. There is absolutely no limit on his power. I think that is a very bad provision to be carried in any bill. He can employ legal counsel for $100,000 a year. He can go into the market and buy 10 Lincoln cars if he wants to.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. In just a minute. He has more authority than the President of the United States has in the purchasing of supplies.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. I call the gentleman's attention to section 11, which also delegates power to him to sue in the name of the United States without any limitation whatever.

Mr. CARTER. I now yield to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. MANSFIELD. The committee—I believe the gentleman was not present—adopted an amendment providing that the attorneys should be assigned from the Department of Justice. That is to be offered as a committee amendment. The administrator will not be authorized to employ attorneys.

Mr. SNELL. How does that affect the other powers granted to the administrator?

Mr. CARTER. It places no limitation whatsoever on his other powers. If it be a good thing in the matter of the attorneys to curb his power, certainly his power should be curbed in these other matters. The fact that the committee adopted that amendment indicates that they were afraid he had too much power.

Mr. MANSFIELD. No; it was done at the request of the Attorney General because he wanted all that litigation to be handled through his department.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. I yield.

Mr. MAY. The suggestion of the chairman of the committee is exactly what is meant by this bill, that it is always the intention of every head of every bureau to get all the authority he can. The Attorney General even wants these lawyers in his department, wants to take them away from the administrator.

Mr. MANSFIELD. The attorneys are already in the Department of Justice. Why pay for them twice?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I cannot yield further at this time.

In closing let me repeat what I stated in the beginning, that I am for this bill but that I think some amendments are necessary. I think this is a most unusual grant of power, a greater grant of power than is given under ordinary circumstances and conditions, a greater grant of power than I know of in connection with any other activity of the Government. While the dam is an actuality—it is there—and while the power-house soon will be completed and legislation is necessary to provide for the disposition of this power, I do believe that the disposition of the power should be put under the Secretary of War so that the Corps of Army Engineers can carry on this work. It is my feeling that the office of administrator should be done away with entirely.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentlewoman from Oregon [Mrs. HONEYMAN].

Mrs. HONEYMAN. Mr. Chairman, during the administration of Thomas Jefferson, what is known as the Lewis and Clark Expedition went to the Pacific Northwest with these words of the President in its ears:

> Go to the Columbia River and lay the foundation for a great empire.

In 1932, Franklin Roosevelt made a Nation-wide broadcast in Portland, Oreg., in which he outlined his power policy. It was considered an appropriate place to make such a broadcast because of the possibilities of developing power on the Columbia River, just as he outlined his railroad and farm policies in other parts of the country.

The Seventy-third Congress enacted the legislation which authorized the construction of Bonneville Dam on the Columbia River. This dam will be completed late this year and ready to go into operation. This is what makes the pending legislation so necessary at this time. When it does go into operation two great services will be inaugurated—navigation and power. The gentleman from New York asked what navigation is already carried on on the Columbia River to and above Bonneville. It has been impossible for such navigation in the past because ships could not be taken over the rapids at Bonneville. The locks constructed as part of Bonneville Dam will take ocean-going vessels. Cargoes of raw materials can be brought to the industrial plants which it is contemplated will be established just below the site of the dam. The dam has created a basin which extends 43 miles above Bonneville to the great inland wheat empire of both Oregon and Washington.

Mr. MANSFIELD. And Bonneville is 143 miles from the ocean. That will make 186 miles of the river navigable.

Mrs. HONEYMAN. Yes; and it means not only that the river will be navigable for more than 175 miles from the ocean but it means also that ocean rates can be enjoyed 175 miles inland from the sea. Secondly comes the question of power. I cannot too strongly stress what this will mean to the people of that entire area. We know what the agricultural and rural elements mean to this country. We cannot ask or expect these people to remain in the rural areas to carry on the farming industry without the benefits and conveniences of modern improvements, without the modern comforts that come through the use of electrical appliances and are enjoyed by those in metropolitan districts. But they cannot use electrical appliances unless they can get cheap electric power that is to be developed at Bonneville and, after all, is developed by a natural resource which really belongs to them. [Applause.] For this reason I favor the distribution of power over the widest possible area to the ultimate consumer at lowest possible cost.

In the matter of operation at Bonneville Dam we hear much about a divided authority. This can occur in two places—between the navigation and power aspects of the project or divide the power department in two, between the generators and transmission lines. I think it is only practical to have the power under one authority who is responsible to only one Government department.

I do not question the ability of the United States Army engineers, nor their splendid record of efficiency and integrity as construction and navigation engineers, but power is another field. Therefore I intend to support an amendment which will be offered and which will put the power aspects of Bonneville under the civil administrator, who is responsible to the Secretary of the Interior. This divides the distribution in what seems to me the only practical place and that is between navigation and power. When this legislation is enacted by the passage of H. R. 7643 it will be the fulfillment of what may be called a prophecy of Thomas Jefferson and the realization of the dreams and hopes of the people of Oregon. [Applause.]

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SMITH].

THE BONNEVILLE PROJECT—VICTORY FOR THE PEOPLE AFTER 5 YEARS OF CONTINUOUS EFFORT

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Chairman, it is a source of real gratification and no little personal satisfaction and pride to me that this legislation providing for the administration of the Bonneville Dam navigation and electric-power project has been advanced to the point where it is about to be passed by this body and sent to the Senate and the White House. The Bonneville project now in the course of construction and nearing completion is located on the Columbia River at Bonneville in the State of Oregon and North Bonneville in southwestern Washington, in my district.

For many years I have advocated the development of hydroelectric power on the Columbia River to serve southwestern Washington and have actively participated in the fight which has been waged in behalf of Bonneville from its very inception, long before I was elected to Congress in 1932. During the past 5 years, while I have been a Member of this body, I have been active in initiating and promoting this project, which is outstanding among all the electric-power projects undertaken by the Federal Government.

In the last Congress I sponsored one of the first bills for the administration of the project. As a member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors I collaborated with our beloved chairman, Judge JOSEPH J. MANSFIELD, and my colleagues on the committee, in reporting out a bill, which was not enacted into law owing to the failure of the Senate to act thereon.

On the opening day of this session of Congress, on January 5, 1937, I reintroduced the bill which our committee reported out last year, H. R. 92, in order to again start the legislation on its course through the Congress. Subsequently, when the matter was referred by President Roosevelt to his Committee on National Power Policy, I appeared before that Committee during the hearings held by it. In February 1937 the Committee completed its report and recommendations, and I was one of a group of Members of Congress from the Pacific Northwest who were called into conference by President Roosevelt regarding the same. Following this conference, the President submitted the report and recommendations of the Committee to the Congress, and I introduced the bill embodying the recommendations, H. R. 4948, on February 19, 1937, which resulted in the legislation being referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, on which Washington and Oregon are both represented, instead of its going to another committee on which neither State was represented. This action also had the effect of expediting hearings and action on the legislation during this session, which is imperative and highly desirable. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors held very complete hearings on my bill, H. R. 4948, introduced February 19, 1937, and H. R. 6151, introduced by Mrs. HONEYMAN, of Oregon, on April 5, 1937, and H. R. 6387, introduced by Mr. PIERCE, of Oregon, on April 14, 1937, and H. R. 6973 and H. R. 7010, introduced by Mr. MOTT, of Oregon, on May 11–12, 1937, all of which were very similar, and with some slight modifications, followed very closely the provisions of the bill recommended by the President's National Power Policy Committee. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors concluded its hearings and reported favorably the pending committee bill, introduced by Chairman MANSFIELD, on June 24, 1937, which contains substantially the same provisions.

Mr. McLEAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Washington. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. McLEAN. There is in the bill the suggestion that the surplus power, not including what will be necessary to operate dams and the locks and fishery, be sold. Will the gentleman in his observations explain to us what effect the Bonneville Dam will have on the salmon industry out there on the Columbia River?

Mr. SMITH of Washington. I may say to the gentleman from New Jersey that the salmon industry is one of the leading industries in the Pacific Northwest and the matter of adequate protection for the salmon industry has been considered and given serious study by the Army engineers. Fishways and fish ladders have been constructed and it is the opinion of the Army engineers that the salmon industry will not suffer any damage. I think the ultimate cost of the fishways will be about $7,000,000.

Mr. McLEAN. Of course, the salmon industry is a very interesting industry. As I understand the gentleman from Washington, the only knowledge we have that this will not in any way affect the salmon industry is the opinion of the Army engineers?

Mr. SMITH of Washington. And other experts, including the Bureau of Fisheries.

Mr. McLEAN. I would be interested in knowing who the other experts are and upon what they base their judgment. As I understood it, the Director of the Biological Survey resigned because he did not feel that this development was proper on account of the fact it would destroy, so he thought, the salmon industry. He is a great naturalist.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. I think the gentleman from New Jersey is not correctly informed in regard to the attitude of the Chief of the Biological Survey. The Bureau of Fisheries has also made a very extensive study of this problem and they feel that with all the precautions that have been taken there will be no damage result to the salmon industry.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Washington. I yield to my chairman, the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I may say that the salmon industry in Washington and Oregon in 1935 amounted to $11,142,407. This included the catch and the canning industries. It is the largest branch of our fishing industry in the United States, oysters being second. Provision in the way of fish ladders has met with the entire approval of the Bureau of Fisheries and these fish ladders were placed in there in accordance with the suggestion and advice of that Bureau, as the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SMITH] has stated.

Mr. McLEAN. The ingenuity of the American people should be entitled to great praise if we can claim credit for having taught salmon how to climb an artificial ladder.

Mr. MANSFIELD. They are having no trouble.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. There is no apprehension in our part of the country at all in regard to the proper protection and preservation of the salmon industry at the Bonneville Dam.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Washington. I yield to my colleague from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON].

Mr. MAGNUSON. The salmon have been climbing artificially in that part of the country for the last 45 years and spawning in the upper stream.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. My colleague is correct. There is nothing in that situation which alarms the people of the Pacific Northwest.

May I have the attention of the distinguished minority leader, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL]? In his remarks earlier this afternoon the gentleman expressed some fear that this project might not be self-liquidating.

Mr. SNELL. I still have a great deal of fear along that line.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. I assume that he has confidence in the judgment and ability, as I know we all have, of General Markham, Chief of the United States Army Engineers?

Mr. SNELL. I thought he had a lot of good ideas until he approved of the Florida Canal. Since then my opinion has not been so high.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Chairman, during the hearings on this bill General Markham testified before our committee that the power side of the project would be amortized in 50 years, and it is his opinion, as expressed before our committee, that the Bonneville project is financially and economically sound and will be self-liquidating.

Mr. SNELL. I do not know whether it is in his testimony or not before the committee, but he said it would require 7 percent for depreciation, and in his own figures he uses about three-quarters of 1 percent. How can I have any confidence in that kind of a man?

Mr. SMITH of Washington. I do not have time to pursue this matter further.

SECTIONAL ANALYSIS OF THE BILL

Mr. Chairman, section 1 carries the reference to the Bonneville project, which is to be completed for the purpose of improving navigation on the Columbia River, and grants jurisdiction of the dam, locks, and power plant to the Secretary of War and the Chief of Army Engineers, who shall deliver the electric power to the administrator at the switchboard.

Section 2 states that the administrator shall dispose of surplus energy. The administrator is to be appointed by and be responsible to the Secretary of the Interior. He shall act in consultation with an advisory board composed of a representative designated by the Secretary of War, another by the Secretary of the Interior, and a third by the Federal Power Commission. The administrator is authorized to transmit electric energy so as to encourage the widest possible use and to prevent monopolization by limited groups or localities. He is authorized in the name of the United States to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, real and personal property, including lands, franchises, transmission lines, substations, and patent rights. The administrator is authorized to sell or dispose of property, except that in the case of real property or transmission lines he must secure the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. He is authorized to enter into such contracts as are necessary to carry out the purposes of the act.

Section 3 defines the terms "public bodies" and "cooperatives" as used in the act and establishes a preference in the disposal of electric energy for public bodies and cooperatives. To preserve these preferential rights, not less than 50 percent of the electric energy at Bonneville shall be reserved for sale to public bodies until January 1, 1941. Public bodies and cooperatives are to be given every opportunity to perfect their legal organization and vote bonds and market them.

The policy of Congress is declared in section 3 to be the preservation of the preferential status of the public bodies and cooperatives and to give the residents of States within economic transmission distance of the Bonneville project reasonable opportunity to take any action necessary to become fully qualified purchasers and distributors of electric energy available under the act. Further, the administrator, insofar as practicable, shall cooperate with States and public bodies and cooperatives within economic transmission distance of the Bonneville project to enable them to avail themselves of the preferential rights and priorities afforded by the act.

Section 4 authorizes the administrator to negotiate contracts for the sale at wholesale of electric energy for resale or direct consumption, provided that private persons or agencies other than privately owned public utilities are forbidden to resell electric energy to a private utility; contracts shall be for not more than 20 years, with provisions for equitable adjustment of rates not less frequently than once in 5 years, and in the case of a private utility contracts shall be cancelable upon 5 years' notice in writing if there is reasonable likelihood that any part of the electric energy sold under the contract will be needed for a public body. Contracts shall also contain stipulations concerning resale and resale rates to insure that the ultimate consumer shall pay rates which are reasonable and nondiscriminatory.

Section 5 prescribes that the administrator shall fix rates for surplus electric energy subject to the approval of the Federal Power Commission. If any rate schedule so submitted is not approved, then the Federal Power Commission may revise such schedules in conformity with standards prescribed by the act, and as so revised such schedule shall become effective. Rate schedules shall be fixed with a view to encouraging the widest possible use of electric energy, having regard, however, to the recovery of the costs of producing and transmitting electricity, including amortization of the capital investment, including interest, over a reasonable period of years in order to distribute the benefits of an integrated transmission system and to encourage the equitable distribution of electric energy. The rate schedules shall provide for uniform rates or rates uniform throughout prescribed transmission areas.

This is an important proviso because it contemplates and permits the establishing of certain rates within certain prescribed areas at and adjacent to the switchboard and also within prescribed transmission areas. This proviso is carried over from my bill, H. R. 4948, introduced on February 19, 1937.

Mr. Chairman, of course, this legislation could not and does not fix rates or establish these areas, this being the duty of the administrator, subject to the approval of the Federal Power Commission. The communities and industries closest to the switchboard in Vancouver, Camas, Washougal, North Bonneville, Stevenson—Clark, Skamania, and Cowlitz Counties—will naturally derive the largest benefits and experience great industrial development as a result of the low rates which will prevail in those areas. However, low-cost electric power can and will be generated to meet the needs of other areas in Lewis, Pacific, Wahkiakum, Grays Harbor, Mason, and Thurston Counties as well.

It is estimated that the Bonneville project will supply an abundance of low-cost electric power sufficient in quantity to meet all possible market demands for many years to come.

I am happy that I have succeeded in my efforts to make Bonneville a two-State project instead of allowing Portland and Oregon to "bottle it up" for their aggrandizement, to serve only one or two big industries in Portland. None of the bills in the House and Senate, excepting mine, even mentioned the State of Washington, but described and located the project as an Oregon project only.

This great Bonneville project, costing $55,000,000 with the first 2 units completed for the present project and ultimately over $100,000,000 when 10 units are completed to attain its full capacity, is one of the greatest hydroelectric power projects in the world. It will bring low-cost electricity within the reach of thousands of citizens in the homes and on the farms and give much employment in small and large factories. Bonneville will prove a benefit and a blessing to the men, women, and children of southwest Washington for generations to come. I am deeply grateful and happy that I have been privileged to have a humble part with President Franklin D. Roosevelt in making this beneficial project a reality. [Applause.]

The following telegrams and letters refer to the early history of the Bonneville Dam project and its progress:

HOQUIAM, September 20, 1933.

President FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT,
Washington, D. C.:

Hope you will not allow efforts to cripple Bonneville Dam project to succeed, as we are counting on your friendship as expressed in campaign last year to overcome conspiracy of power interests, railroads, and other special interests to have size of dam reduced so as to be practically useless for power, navigation, and flood control. Our people here in southwestern Washington are solidly behind you and will back you to the limit.

MARTIN F. SMITH, M. C.,
Member Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

HOQUIAM, September 20, 1933.

Hon. HAROLD L. ICKES,
Public Works Administrator, Washington, D. C.:

Bonneville Dam as originally contemplated is strongly favored in southwestern Washington as reemployment measure to relieve acute distress, especially in western portion of State, and the people are very much opposed to any change in the project. We are counting on your continued support.

MARTIN F. SMITH, M. C.,
Member Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

HOQUIAM, September 20, 1933.

Congressman CHARLES H. MARTIN,
Washington, D. C.:

Have just wired President Roosevelt, Ickes, and Senator Dill that our people here in southwest Washington are strongly opposed to changing original Bonneville Dam project. You can count on me for my active support and hope you will advise me of exact situation there along with any suggestions for putting Bonneville over.

MARTIN F. SMITH, M. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C., September 21, 1933.

Hon. MARTIN F. SMITH, M. C.,
Hoquiam, Wash.:

Your statement much appreciated and very heartening. Some aggressive underhanded work is being done to wreck Bonneville project, which is greatest opportunity for navigation and cheap power yet presented. Hope you will impress upon President profound interest of half the State of Washington in this great undertaking. Many thanks and kindest regards.

CHARLES H. MARTIN, M. C.

[Extract from Vancouver Chamber of Commerce letter, Oct. 31, 1933, signed by Secretary E. S. Lindley]

I want to thank you again for the fine work you did on Bonneville dam and I think I can say that if it had not been for your work, it is entirely possible that we might have lost the dam, at least for some time to come. The people of southwest Washington generally are quite cognizant of your work in this connection and are deeply appreciative.

[Extract from Portland Chamber of Commerce letter, signed by Arthur J. Farmer, manager of maritime commerce department, Oct. 2, 1933]

We are jubilant over the outcome of Bonneville and know that your powerful expressions to the President and to Public Works Administrator Ickes were a potent factor in this early decision on the part of the President and the Public Works Board. As you have unquestionably noticed in the press, $31,000,000 were allotted and $20,000,000 were made immediately available for the construction of a 72-foot dam involving 6 of the potential 10 power units. We know that you agree that this project will give a decided impetus to the Third Congressional District of Washington and this part of Oregon.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, March 18, 1936.

HON. MARTIN F. SMITH,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SMITH: In considering the situation concerning the distribution and marketing of the power from the Bonneville Dam for which we should be making arrangements during the next few months, the need is apparent for some legislation at this session of Congress. While it is probably too early to make final recommendations concerning any general arrangements for the marketing of Bonneville power in relation to other major projects in the Pacific Northwest, we can establish an agency to deal temporarily with the Bonneville situation.

It is my opinion that a new agency for this purpose would be desirable, involving the appointment by the President of three individuals to serve as a Northwest power agency. Such an organization should have authority to enter into necessary arrangements for the distribution and marketing of the power.

I am writing to other Senators and Representatives from the area concerned and hope that it may be possible for you to agree together on some suitable procedure along these lines.

Sincerely yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SEGER. I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO].

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, we are considering a bill which involves the sum of $70,000,000. Fifty million dollars has thus far been expended on Bonneville project, and there will be required about $20,000,000 more to finish the project.

The bill is administrative in character. It does not appropriate any money. However, I question the wisdom of section 2 of the bill. I am going to support the bill and will vote for it.

Under section 2 we are launching on a program which involves the turning over of the administration of the power developed at this dam to an entirely new agency never before established by this Government. We are adopting a national power policy. Before the T. V. A. was created the Board of Army Engineers conducted and operated the power plants located in the Tennessee Valley. They did the job so well that when they turned it over to the T. V. A. they did so with an income of something like $600,000. A splendid, efficient job was completed by that Board.

Mr. PIERCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. PIERCE. I would like to have the gentleman insert right there the exact figures. He will find the Army Engineers did not turn over anything, practically, as compared with what is being done at the present time.

Mr. DONDERO. I base that statement upon the testimony of General Markham, which will be found on page 44 of the hearings held in connection with this bill.

Mr. Chairman, we are about to turn this over to an administrator who will be appointed by and who will be responsible to the Secretary of the Interior. What reason exists for not turning this over to the Board of Army Engineers so that they may sell the power which is generated at this dam the same as they did in the Tennessee Valley?

Mr. COLDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. COLDEN. I know the gentleman from Michigan wants to be eminently fair. He will remember that General Markham testified they really do not want this responsibility. The gentleman also knows that the Army engineers are technicians, not salesmen.

Mr. DONDERO. I will quote what General Markham had to say on this particular subject. He stated:

We will do it if Congress asks us to do it, but we do not want the headache of marketing the power.

Mr. COLDEN. That is right.

Mr. DONDERO. That is exactly his testimony.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman means that the receipts were $600,000 a year, not the profit?

Mr. DONDERO. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. SNELL. Let me read the testimony:

I cannot give you precisely the figures, but I think the income amounted to six-hundred-thousand-and-odd dollars a year.

That is the income. Certainly there would never be a profit of $600,000 a year on T. V. A., under the Army engineers or God or anybody else.

Mr. DONDERO. If we turn this back to the Army engineers, it would prevent the employment of an Administrator at $10,000 a year, and there would be practically no additional expense, or very little expense, to the Government of the United States.

Much has been said in the House for the last 3 or 4 years about the Tennessee Valley yardstick. May I quote what Dr. Morgan stated about that some time ago? I ask the Members of the House to pay particular attention to this, because what I am going to say may apply to your State equally as well as to the State of Michigan. Dr. Morgan said this:

The President wishes that somewhere in America there should be a case of public generation, distribution, and sale of power. He is of the opinion that power development in this country ought not everywhere to be a public project; that private development of power has decided advantages and ought not to be abandoned.

Still quoting the President, Dr. Morgan stated:

But he feels there ought to be, here and there, cases of public ownership which can serve as comparisons. And if they are to serve as comparisons, they must be open and aboveboard, with nothing hidden. They must be fair, with no special arbitrary advantages. They must pay taxes, just as private utility companies must do, and every other reasonable charge, if they are to provide us with a fair comparison.

Sometime ago the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] stated that the people of my State of Michigan were overcharged some $34,000,000 a year based upon the Tennessee Valley yardstick. May I say in answer to that statement that 44 municipally owned electric-light plants in Michigan served the people of that State at an average cost of $27 annually for every domestic user, while the private utilities in the same State served the people of Michigan at $28 a year for every domestic user. This would make it appear that municipally owned plants really showed a saving of a dollar per customer per year. However, they paid no taxes, while the private utilities paid $12.30 in taxes for every domestic user in the State. Therefore, what appeared to be a dollar of saving was really a loss of $11.30 for each domestic user, because the people of the State lost this amount in taxes which the public utilities did not pay.

If there is to be a yardstick, let it be a fair yardstick—36 inches long in all cases, and let the 36 inches include taxes and all other proper costs. If we are going to measure the T. V. A. against private utilities, include in the T. V. A. cost the same taxes and costs private utilities pay, or exclude these costs from the private utilities and apply all of that difference against their domestic rates. As far as Michigan is concerned, the resulting rates would be materially lower than the T. V. A. rates.

The fact is that we have long had, and have at the present moment, a yardstick for rates. That test is whether the rates are cheap as compared with the value of the service which the consumer gets. The real test of the cheapness of electric rates is whether more and more people buy electricity, that is, become new customers of the industry, and whether they increase their use of electric energy after they begin taking the service.

By both these tests, electricity has been cheap for many years and is cheap now. The growth of the industry has been phenomenal, and it has continued for domestic service even during the 6 years since 1929. The number of kilowatt-hours sold to homes was 43 percent greater in 1935 than in 1929. The amount consumed by each home rose from 500 kilowatt-hours in 1929 to 673 in 1935. During the present year it is running about 700 kilowatt-hours. And this increase occurred during a period of depression when people cut down their purchases of almost every other commodity and service. Despite the fact that the people were driven to these curtailments and economies in every other line, they increased their purchases of electricity constantly. It is a testimonial to the cheapness of the product which the electric industry produces and sells which stands unsurpassed in industry.

The growth in consumption and use has been accompanied by a steady reduction in the price of electricity. Since 1929 it has fallen from 6.33 cents per kilowatt-hour for the country as a whole, to less than 5 cents at the present time. All of these reductions have occurred under State regulation and private ownership.

A recent survey of domestic electric rates made by the Federal Power Commission shows that only three States have a lower average domestic rate for electricity than Michigan. The average monthly bill of the residential consumers in Michigan is one of the lowest in the United States. For a use of 25 kilowatt-hours per month there are only four States with a lower monthly bill. For 100 kilowatt-hours' use per month Michigan domestic customers pay $3.70. In only one State is the bill lower and that by only 1 cent per month. For 250 kilowatt-hours' use per month Michigan domestic customers pay $7.02. Only two States have lower bills, the lowest being only 4 cents per month below Michigan. Yet Michigan has only 24.7 percent water-power generation of electricity while the other two States, Washington and Oregon, generate over 93 percent of their electricity by water power. In this connection let it be noted that the majority of the farmers in Michigan using electricity pay the same rates as the customers in the cities.

Michigan has led the country during the depression in the extension of electricity to the farms. I quote from the Michigan Manufacturer and Financial Record of March 21, 1936:

> Michigan leads all States in the country in rural electrification, with 47,000 farms equipped with light and power, according to H. J. Gallagher, extension specialist in agricultural engineering at Michigan State College, East Lansing, Mich.
> The 47,000 electrically equipped farmhouses represent 27 percent of Michigan's farms, as compared to 13 percent for the entire United States. In addition, Michigan has been the leading State in the total number of farms connected to power lines annually for the last 4 years.

The American spirit of fair play and a square deal should manifest itself in the T. V. A. yardstick as expressed by Dr. Morgan, its director. Let its yardstick be an honest yardstick in which all of the citizens of the Nation can compete on an equal basis, then no one can be heard to complain, be it private or public ownership. The business of Government is not Government in business, and it should not set itself up as an example of economy and saving when it is known that within the last two decades the cost of electric current has been reduced 38 percent to domestic users while the cost of government has increased 830 percent.

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT].

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, the Bonneville Dam will be completed and ready for operation in December of this year, and this is the reason the present bill, H. R. 7642, is before us at this time.

This bill creates an authority for the operation of the Bonneville project. It is in the nature of a compromise bill. In formulating it, the committee took what it thought to be the best features of the several individual bills introduced upon this subject, and I believe that in H. R. 7642 the committee has carefully drawn and thoroughly considered a bill, which will prove to be satisfactory not only to the people of Oregon and Washington but to all the people of the United States.

Something has been said here regarding the policy of the United States with respect to the development of hydroelectric projects. Whatever may be the opinion of some in this regard, I think it is now definitely settled that this is the policy of our Government, and I think, moreover, it will continue to be the policy no matter what may be the political complexion of future administrations. It has become the settled conviction of the people of this country that hydroelectric power and energy in our public streams, which belong to the people, should be publicly developed and used for the benefit of the people. That is my own belief and conviction, and it always has been. The Bonneville project is one of such hydroelectric developments, and it is the purpose of this bill to make the power from Bonneville immediately available to the people at as low a rate as may be consistent with sound financial principles.

This bill provides that the Corps of Army Engineers shall have jurisdiction of the dam and of the generation of the power up to the switchboard, after which jurisdiction is placed in the hands of an administrator to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior. This administrator has authority to build transmission lines and sell the power. The bill provides that until 1941, 50 percent of this power shall be reserved for sale to public bodies, cooperatives, rural communities and municipalities, and that after that time these public bodies, cooperatives, and rural communities shall be given preference in all applications for power, whether those applications exceed 50 percent of the power available or not. The policy and the purpose of this bill is to obtain the widest possible distribution of this power and to make it available to the greatest number of people at the lowest rate possible.

This bill, of course, does not completely meet the views of everyone. As I have stated, it is a compromise bill. My own idea, for example, has been that it would be better to have the Army engineers operate the entire project, including the sale and distribution of power as well as the generation of it; in other words, that the adminstrator should be appointed from the Engineer Corps. On the other hand, it was the idea of some of my colleagues, particularly the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE], that the entire jurisdiction should be given to the Secretary of the Interior. The committee evidently felt that neither of us was entirely right. So this bill is in the nature of a compromise, and my opinion is that it is a good compromise. As I have stated, I think it will work out to the best interests of all of our people and that it will be reasonably satisfactory to everyone.

Now, in this connection, Mr. Chairman, may I say a word in behalf of the engineers? I understand an amendment will be offered upon the reading of the bill proposing to take away from the Corps of Army Engineers what little jurisdiction has been given to them in the present bill and to give the entire jurisdiction to the administrator to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior. In my opinion this would be a very grave mistake and could serve no useful purpose whatever. The engineers built this dam, as they have built practically every other great hydroelectric project as well as most of the other great public projects of this country. They have an unblemished record of more than 100 years, not only of unquestioned competency and efficiency but also a record of being absolutely free from politics. This is one of the reasons I suggested before the committee that as much jurisdiction as possible should be given to the Engineer Corps, who, by the way, are already on the Government pay roll and who have a thoroughly experienced personnel who are completely equipped now to commence the operation of the project.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO] mentioned a moment ago the experience of the Engineer Corps in the operation of the Wilson Dam and the other dams on the Tennessee River which are now being operated by the T. V. A. In my opinion, the Army engineers made a wonderful record in the operation of that project prior to the time the T. V. A. Act was passed. During the 5 or 6 years of their operation, without any cooperation either from the administration or from the Congress, they operated the plant and sold five and one-half million dollars' worth of power at a total expense of $1,700,000.

Mr. MANSFIELD. And without any authority to put in transmission lines.

Mr. MOTT. Yes; they had no authority under the law at that time to put in transmission lines and sell it to private individuals. They were obliged to sell it to large operators and to power companies.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOTT. I yield to my colleague from Oregon.

Mr. PIERCE. Will the gentleman give us the figures of $25,000,000 that the utilities that bought that power got for it when the Army engineers sold it to them?

Mr. MOTT. I cannot give the gentleman those figures, but the record is that the Army engineers sold the power to the only customers they were permitted to sell to under the law; that they sold that power for $5,500,000; that it cost $1,700,000 to generate and sell it and that they turned in the balance to the Government, and that is a record for efficiency that no agency of the Government has ever duplicated.

Mr. PIERCE. It was practically 10 times what they paid the Government.

Mr. MOTT. That is not the point I am making. I simply stated, as a matter of record, that the Engineer Corps, which built the Wilson Dam, without the cooperation of anyone, undertook the operation of that project and sold the power to the only available customers there were, and in the years they operated it they sold $5,500,000 worth of it, and the total cost of operation was $1,700,000, and I repeat that that is a record for sound business efficiency and competency that no department of the Government has ever equaled.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOTT. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. Does not the gentleman think in connection with that statement he should add that that was simply the cost of operating the plant, with the plant given to them, and there was nothing allowed for expense of maintenance or upkeep or depreciation or interest.

Mr. MOTT. That, perhaps, is true, but that was not the fault of the engineers. They had to take the situation as they found it and work within the very narrow limitations of existing law.

Mr. SNELL. And that is quite important.

Mr. MOTT. If that project had been under the operation and control of some political agency of this Government, it probably would have spent more for the operation of the plant than it received from the sale of power.

Mr. SNELL. I admit that the Army engineers did a good job, so far as that is concerned, but I do not want it to go out that they made money out of it.

Mr. MOTT. Those are the figures, and they are of record, and I contend it is a record which has not been duplicated.

The Army engineers also built the Madden Dam and the Panama Canal, and they operate that project now. They operate it very successfully, furnishing all the light and power to the Canal Zone.

Mr. MANSFIELD. And they are also operating the railroad down there.

Mr. MOTT. There are a great many business projects that have been built and are now operated by the Engineer Corps, comparable in size with the Bonneville Dam. I merely say this apropos of the effort which I understand will be made here this afternoon to take what little jurisdiction remains with the Engineers Corps away from them and turn it over to an agency of the Government which has had no experience in the operation of power plants. I think the Congress would make a great mistake in doing that. The committee has restricted the jurisdiction of the engineers solely to the operation of the power plants, and that jurisdiction should not be disturbed.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOTT. I yield.

Mr. MAY. Would it not be more in keeping with the contention of the President with respect to economy and more in line with recent platforms of the Democratic Party with respect to the abolishment of bureaus, to let the Army engineers handle all of our river problems?

Mr. MOTT. That was the idea I advanced before the committee, and I still think I am right about it. However, let me say that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House had this matter under consideration for many weeks, they heard a great number of witnesses, and their hearings cover several hundred pages of testimony. All of these matters were carefully considered and threshed out in committee, and, as a result, they reported, by a unanimous vote, the Mansfield bill which we are now considering.

Mr. Chairman, I trust the House will not seek to change in any material respect the bill which the committee has reported or try to undo the painstaking work the committee has put upon it.

The Committee on Rivers and Harbors is held in very high esteem and confidence by the general membership of the House. It is a hard-working, conscientious, and thoroughly competent body. Furthermore, it has always had the reputation of being extremely liberal. None of its members are of the so-called reactionary type, as some who have written to me apparently seem to think. All members of the committee favor public ownership of hydroelectric-power projects. None of them want private power companies to receive any benefit from this or any other Federal hydroelectric power project. All of them favor the widest distribution of power from Bonneville that is economically feasible, and they have all repeatedly expressed the opinion that this power should be sold at as low a rate as is consistent with good business and the safety of the taxpayers' investment in the project. They are also in favor of the rates being as nearly uniform as possible so that the territory immediately adjacent to the plant will not receive an undue share of the benefits to the detriment of the more remote territory. They believe, finally, that this huge Federal investment should be safeguarded by as competent and experienced a management as can be obtained, and that its administration should be divorced as much as possible from politics.

Mr. Chairman, after months of study this great committee has reported a good bill, a fair and a just bill, and I trust in considering and voting upon it, particularly in view of the fact the report of the committee is unanimous, the House will make no material amendments to the bill and that it will pass the measure virtually as it is now written. [Applause.]

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD].

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, the part of this bill that interests me is the fact that we are moving in a direction which puts our people in a position, through the use of electric power, to mix agriculture and industry.

It seems to me that national defense must always consist largely of privately owned property, privately operated, and privately fought for. The most discouraging thing I find in the entire power program is the fact that it is so impossible to get accurate foundations for a determination of operating costs and capital costs.

I can appreciate that in the legal field an attorney would not have very much patience with a case which came into court if there were no facts on which to proceed. At the same time, in a discussion of a measure of this kind, it is most difficult to make progress unless you have accurate cost figures to determine a basis of comparison. The situation which governs here today as evidenced by the absence of certified accurate figures and absolute fair play on the part of those charged with the responsibility of presenting the figures for the guidance of Congress, is further proof of the difficulty of securing accurate information from political and Federal administration. I am satisfied in my own mind that we shall have to go through years of experience and disappointment before we will learn to place all comparisons, as between Federal administration and private ownership and administration, on a fair and square basis. In political matters it is entirely too easy to demagogue, ignore facts, and get away with it for "the time being." Sooner or later, however, long-term debt increases, unsatisfactory operating results show up the absence of efficiency, the public wrath becomes operative and then we go on our way wiser and with more experience and less money, and a greater tax burden. This is all perhaps a cost of constitutional democracy in a country with such vast resources, expanse of territory, and the slow operation of such a democracy.

As one experienced in cost, I can appreciate why it is so difficult to get that foundation of fact. While construction is under way, who knows what the total cost will be with construction running over a long period of time and with direct labor and material costs rapidly advancing as they have during the past several years and months in particular. Before the organization is set up, who knows what the operating cost will be to perpetuate and carry on that organization, both from the standpoint of direct labor costs and material cost? We have these different projects under way being carried on with public funds and by Federal operation. Throughout the United States, everywhere you go, you find all types of jobs being carried on by the Federal Government. The private operator is almost passing out of the picture. To me that is highly destructive, and I think in due course we shall have to learn by experience that that, in turn, will destroy itself, and perhaps destroy the people of this country and our whole economic policy.

This is a Government of private ownership. It seems to me that if the other plans which we are carrying out and working on are to succeed, eventually we must stop financing with public funds, and get back to private ownership and private financing.

Going back to the thought of national defense, I hope some day that I may live to see electricity in all the farm homes of the country, so that those farm homes can some time participate in the fabrication of the industrialized products which, in turn, may move into the great stream of finished goods to supply the needs of our own people as well as to enter the channels of export to the other parts of the world.

Through visitation and research, I find that other countries of the world not nearly so well supplied with capital as we are, have undertaken such projects, and put them into operation, and that the farmers who are poverty stricken compared with that class of people in this country, in other countries have electricity in their homes, and are contributing to the great flow of industrialized products. I see no way whereby the farmers of this country can make such contribution in the absence of electricity in the farm home, and I hope we will not overlook that fact when we come to the time where we are discouraged with the financing of these products with public funds and are trying to get back to private initiative.

Mr. HILL of Washington. In those countries the gentleman mentioned which have electrified their rural districts was it done under private or public ownership?

Mr. CRAWFORD. The project was initiated by the so-called federal or central government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I think when we are considering this bill we should have in mind some of the facts that the hearings show about what the result will be for the Government if we go ahead with the same kind of figuring that we have presented to us here. On page 15 of the hearings you will find that General Markham stated toward the bottom of the page that 7 percent is the proper figure for depreciation. If you go over to page 17, you will find that when they came to figure the unit cost in figuring up the cost of electricity that they used $197,200 depreciation on a cost of upward of $30,000,000 which is a little less than two-thirds of 1 percent. All the way down the line in figuring up that cost they have left out substantial items. It is proposed by this bill to pay an administrator $10,000 a year. They figure that administration at only $20,000. The result of that situation is going to be that that cost will be $75,000, and that they are at least $50,000 out of line. On page 18 they figure the cost per kilowatt of the electricity which is to be produced, and instead of it being 4.6 mills as it shows at the top of the page for 2 units, the actual figure is a little over 1 cent, and instead of it being 2.196 mills, with 6 units in operation, the actual figure is upward of a half cent. Instead of its being with 10 units, the complete set-up, 1.737 mills, the actual figure is 4.4. When they come to you with that kind of a set-up and propose that they shall charge 3 mills a kilowatt for electricity and have the project pay for itself, the figures just do not go together and they are not there, and we ought not to authorize any more expenditures for this operation.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. MAY. I think section 2 of this bill is the most vicious thing in it, because it authorizes the appointment of an administrator at $10,000 who is responsible to nobody except the Secretary of the Interior, and without confirmation by the Senate.

Mr. TABER. It is a tremendously dangerous proposition and it ought not to be allowed. If these people in the Northwest wanted to operate two units already in operation, let them put it under the Army engineers and have it done honestly, and let them pay what it costs for electricity and see if it will work.

In the T. V. A., as far as I can figure, the cost of electricity which we are selling for a peak of about a half a cent a kilowatt is somewhere around 4 or 5 cents a kilowatt. That is using honest figures, depreciation and interest on the investment. If we are going to do this thing and call it a yardstick, let us do it honestly and fairly to the people of the United States and the taxpayers, and not on a subterfuge and set-up which deceives the people. That is what I do not like about this bill, aside from some of the things that other Members have referred to, like this continuing appropriation and the appointment of this administrator, without any control by Congress, without any report to Congress, without any control whatever by the people, but just running absolutely hog wild. Is it not about time that we consider these bills on their merits? Let us amend this bill so that it will not be a menace to the people of the United States.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is not a quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise, and on that I demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN (after counting). One hundred and one Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my motion.

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK].

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, since this Congress has assumed leadership, then responsibilities greater than they have ever had before fall upon this Congress. Before this Congress adjourns, in my judgment, the American people demand of the Congress that they take action on certain measures now pending. Before this Congress adjourns that should be done. While I am not officially connected with any advisory committee as to what this House should do, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and indicate, in my opinion, what action this Congress should take before it adjourns. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

CONGRESSIONAL RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, since Congress has conclusively demonstrated that it is not a rubber-stamp Congress, but on the contrary, is an active, coordinate branch of the Federal Government, new responsibilities appear which this Congress must assume. Certain legislation is now pending which will bring some measure of relief to the people, and we cannot blame the President for not carrying out this program. We are in control of our own business and therefore we must accept full responsibility for what is done or what we fail to do before adjournment.

At this late hour, we cannot hope to pass measures that involve a new philosophy of Government; we cannot hope to pass measures that are not only highly controversial among Members of Congress but the people generally. There are, however, a few things we can do before adjournment, and if we fail to act, this Congress alone must assume the responsibility. No Member of this Congress should vote for an adjournment before we have accomplished this task. Without saying whose fault it is, the fact remains that we have accomplished very little during the six and one-half months we have been in session. The people do not care whose fault it is; they want and demand action.

If I occupied a position in the Congress where I could officially suggest what measures we should consider, at this late hour, I would suggest the following:

First. In the last deficiency appropriation bill, I would include another billion-dollar appropriation to continue the work of the P. W. A., W. P. A., and the enlargement of the activities of the Resettlement Administration.

Second. Pass the moratorium resolution, House Joint Resolution 27, which provides that in the drought area all forced collections of debts due the Government or any agency thereof be suspended for the next 12 months.

Third. Pass a workable crop-insurance bill to sustain the farming operations of the country without driving farmers on the general relief rolls. Such a plan is a money saver, as we have spent, since 1927, $600,000,000 on this general relief program for farmers, which a crop-insurance law would have avoided.

Fourth. Pass a new farm bill that will recognize that farmers are entitled to a living wage while engaged in a business that is a national necessity. Acts of this character are now before this Congress in the form of the Eicher and the Massingale cost-of-production bills.

Fifth. Since the time is too short to hope to pass the Townsend recovery act or any of the similar measures before Congress, we can at least make amendments to the Social Security Act, that will make the act more than a mere abject dole. I would suggest amendments to the Social Security Act to provide incomes for the aged wherever located without regard to legal residence as long as they are citizens of the United States, and increase the amount to $50 per month without regard to the contributions made by State governments. Any contribution made by State governments shall be in addition to the income provided by the Congress and that in the distribution of the said $50 it shall be done under rules and regulations that will not require the aged to deed over their property in order to secure such aid. We should provide in this act that no Indian citizens should be excluded from the benefits of the act. The Bigelow bill, and several others now before Congress, would, with proper amendments, accomplish this purpose. On no account should we adjourn and leave this Social Security Act to function as it is. The dire fact stares us in the face that the present act gives no more relief to the aged of this country than they would secure on the general relief rolls. Can we afford to adjourn and have this program continued?

Sixth. Pass the Peterson farm-tenant bill, as the act already passed pertaining to tenants only suggests the relief of one tenant in each of the 3,000 counties in the United States. What about the rest of the tenants? In many States the title to the land cultivated remains with only 23 percent of those who till the soil, therefore, do we not need to give some attention to the other 77 percent? The Peterson bill will give relief to all, not merely one out of every hundred.

Seventh. The Black-Connery bill providing for maximum hours of labor and minimum wages and the eradication of child labor, offers an opportunity to do something for labor. Properly amended, this bill would come close to doing the job, as far as we are able to do it. The bill should be so amended as to make it certain that there is an exact equality between men and women. Women want no protection not given to the men, but they do demand equal rights, which they are entitled to.

Eighth. Prohibit the Government from purchasing gold of the world at $35 per ounce or at any price, since we do not use this gold as a medium of exchange. This program of gold purchase at $35 per ounce, when countries like Russia can produce gold at $1 per ounce, enriches the Russian Government at the expense of the taxpayers of the United States.

Ninth. Refinance the farm mortgages of the United States and save 2,000,000 farm homes that are now in danger of being foreclosed. The Frazier-Lemke bill offers a solution, but by all means pass some bill.

I do not want to be understood as saying this program will adjust our economic affairs—none of these acts or all of them will make a final adjustment—but these acts offer needed repairs to a badly run-down system. I do want to be understood as saying that until we change our monetary system, we can expect no permanent improvement. Private persons must be completely barred from any control over the Nation's money. Interest must be abolished and the Nation's money used for all the people, or we cannot hope to extricate ourselves from financial bondage. With a public and private debt, created by private control of public money, of $300,000,000,000 drawing an annual interest charge of $15,000,000,000, where is there anyone who can say that this debt can be paid? A fair valuation of all our property today, both public and private, would not amount to the debt we owe.

In other words, we are worth nothing and our only outlook is to pay interest. Every dollar spent today does not buy a dollar's worth of merchandise, as 33⅓ percent of every dollar has to be expended for interest. Taxes take another 16⅔ percent, so actually our dollar is worth only 50 cents. This means that our purchasing power is cut, and we are purchasing only half of what we could and should purchase. I mean on this one score of interest and taxes alone we have reduced our purchasing power one-half. That is the trouble with us. We have had no overproduction, as Secretary Wallace thinks we have. We have had underconsumption. We could and should purchase annually in this country at least three times what we are purchasing. We cannot purchase what we want because we have no adequate means of exchange. We have permitted private persons to control our money, and they can, at a single meeting, determine whether credit should be extended or withdrawn. When credit is extended our national business expands, when it is withdrawn, as it was in 1920 by the Federal Reserve Board, we experience panics and ruined business. If I had my way, this private control of the Nation's medium of exchange would cease at this session of Congress. I realize how difficult it is to get the people of the country to see this. Not enough people in this country are yet aroused to this money situation.

In suggesting this outline of what we can do I am predicting that with this legislation, we can continue with a minimum of relief until the next session of Congress when we should tackle this money question and free the entire people of the United States from the clutches of a privately controlled money system that will eventually destroy the Government or continue it under the direction of money dictators while the people will live as financial slaves.

It is now up to the Congress to act. Especially it is the duty of the House of Representatives to act. We are close to the people. We more directly represent the American people than any other branch of the Government. Do we want to go home and face the people with a record such as we have made to date? This Congress has assumed leadership. Are we capable of it? [Applause.]

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. FORD].

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Chairman, I am supporting H. R. 7642 for the following reasons:

First, I am in full accord with the Federal Government's power-development policy, because I believe it is for the benefit of the American people, and will be for the conservation and proper use of the national water-power resources of the country.

The Bonneville Dam will shortly go into operation, and it is a natural conclusion that when that event occurs, machinery ought to be set up for the proper operation of that utility, so that it may begin a proper return, through the sale of electricity, to the United States Government of some of the funds that have gone into its construction. I do not believe any man would say that is not a wise policy at this time.

Furthermore, I want to say a word about section 6. Section 6 of this bill merely authorizes the President of the United States to appoint an agency for the purpose of investigating the set-up at Boulder Dam with a view to ascertaining whether or not all conditions surrounding that proposition are fair to that proposition, in the light of the new policy that the Government is carrying out in regard to Government-owned power projects. We do not ask for any specific thing. We merely ask that the question be gone into by a competent body, and if we are entitled to modification in any shape or form, that we should get it. If we are not, we do not ask for it.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORD of California. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. In the Boulder Canyon Act it is specifically provided that the Government shall not have anything to say about the resale rate of electricity under power contracts, if there is a State set-up controlling that within the State where power is delivered. Under the Bonneville Act you have just the reverse of that, and it is specifically provided that the administrator shall not only control the rate at which he sells, but that he shall also control the resale rate. This act says that any modification of the Boulder Canyon contracts will be the standards of the Bonneville Act. I am wondering if the gentleman from California [Mr. FORD] is willing to go as far with the California contracts on the resale control as the Bonneville bill goes?

Mr. FORD of California. Our distribution system in the city of Los Angeles is publicly owned, and we sell the power at just exactly what it costs us to get it from the dam and deliver it to our customers.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. But it is controlled, is it not, by the Utilities Commission of California?

Mr. FORD of California. No, sir. It is controlled by the city of Los Angeles, under this charter.

Mr. VOORHIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORD of California. I yield.

Mr. VOORHIS. It is also true that the city of Los Angeles is the largest city in America that does own its own power distributing system?

Mr. FORD of California. Yes. It has the most successful municipally owned power system in the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. FORD] has expired.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] 2 minutes.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to use the 2 minutes but will get what time I can under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE].

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, I preface my remarks by stating that I will reply to the gentlemen from Minnesota and New York who spoke so eloquently about the Canadian system some time within a week. Whether I get time to deliver it in the House does not matter; I will put it in the RECORD if I get the opportunity.

In regard to the Bonneville Dam, there is to be ready for delivery in January about 86,000 kilowatts of electrical energy. The question has been asked, What are you going to do with it? I am looking at my colleague now from the adjoining district on the west. If the lady will look at the chart on the blackboard, she will notice that Portland takes 1,110 residential kilowatt-hours per person annually; Tacoma, 1,565. If Portland would use electricity as freely as they use it in Tacoma, it would take 40 percent more than the 200,000 kilowatts now used, or 80,000 kilowatts, practically the output of these two units at Bonneville. Why does Tacoma use more than Portland? Because it is cheaper. If they would use as much electricity in Portland as they use in Winnipeg or Fort William, it would take the entire ultimate capacity of Bonneville to supply Portland alone. It is just a question of the price of the electricity. I have been an owner; I have been a manager of an electric power plant. I came out of the private game thoroughly convinced that the only solution was public ownership, and it is.

I am going to offer an amendment to this bill—but I shall vote for it as it stands if I am not successful in improving it—an amendment providing for unified control. I do not want two generals on the battlefield; I do not want two men running a threshing machine around me; I do not want two sources of responsibility, a divided responsibility between the agency that makes the electricity at Bonneville and the agency that sells it. One hand should direct all. My amendment takes out the language on pages 1 and 2 and down to line 19, on page 3, and provides unified control—one man in charge, one man responsible. To whom is he responsible, you ask. To the Secretary of the Interior, and he to whom? To the President of the United States.

Mr. McSWEENEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE. I yield.

Mr. McSWEENEY. Is it not true that in private industry we find one group producing an article and another group selling it? Would not the gentleman's proposal throw the Army engineers into a field they have never been in before T. V. A.? And would we not be going against the best business experience?

Mr. PIERCE. The Army engineers will never stand for public ownership. They are private ownership adjuncts, helpers, and assistants.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. The gentleman said that the Army engineers would never stand for public ownership.

Mr. PIERCE. No; they do not believe in public ownership.

Mr. MOTT. Is it not a fact that every project operated by the Army engineers is a publicly-owned project?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, criticism was offered a little while ago by the gentleman from Minnesota to the effect that the Ontario power system is showing a deficit, but in his argument he did not even attempt to show that he had even heard from Ontario since 1932. As a matter of fact, I have on my desk the report of the Ontario Power Commission for 1936. It is true they had a little trouble sometime ago, caused by the power interests. They tried to give them trouble, but they got rid of that influence and today they are on a sound basis. If the people of Minnesota and of every other State in the Union got power at the rates enjoyed by the people of Ontario they would save about $1,400,000,000 a year.

My distinguished friend from New York, the minority leader [Mr. SNELL], criticized my figures because I said that an overwhelming majority—I said I thought 90 percent—of the power generated by the Niagara-Hudson Co. was sold to a monopoly up there that uses most of it for the production or manufacture of aluminum. That is true. By the time the power gets down to Potsdam, where the gentleman from New York lives, one of his constituents pays $1.91 for the same power for which we in the city of Tupelo pay 75 cents, under the T. V. A. rates.

My distinguished Republican friends shed a lot of tears about the fact that we were getting power so much cheaper. Let me tell you what was happening when they were in control of Muscle Shoals. You were selling power to the Power Trust at 1.56 mills per kilowatt-hour and they were selling it to the average domestic consumer at 10 cents a kilowatt-hour. The average domestic consumption in the tri-city area of Tuscumbia, Florence, and Sheffield was only 30 kilowatt-hours a month. A thousand kilowatt-hours that you were selling to the Power Trust for $1.56 cost those householders $100. Then you undertake to compare that condition with the condition we have today.

All kinds of irrelevant statements are made here in order to try to disparage public ownership of power facilities.

Why did not some of you have the courage to attack Tacoma, Wash.? Do you not know anything about this subject? Why did not you gentlemen who criticized public ownership attack the Tacoma, Wash., rates or her public power system? They have $23,000,000 invested and have it paid down to $7,000,000. This utility serves a population of 110,000, and the city has the cheapest power rates of any city in the continental United States. If all other points in the United States secured their power at the same rates they are getting in Tacoma, Wash., the American people would save approximately $1,300,000,000 a year, enough to pay the national debt in 20 years.

Oh, no, Mr. Chairman; this insidious influence that undertook to destroy the Ontario power system has attempted to destroy the Tennessee Valley Authority and is now attempting, and will continue to attempt, to destroy the Bonneville project.

Mr. McSWEENEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. McSWEENEY. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] spoke about the fact we had no real way of getting at the actual cost of developing power at the T. V. A. and other places. Are there not private groups that have gone into the cost of furnishing power by water and coal and did they not find the cost of one about equals the other?

Mr. RANKIN. Certainly.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO].

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Chairman, I am very much interested in the passage of this legislation and intend to vote for it. As others of my colleagues will discuss at length the provisions of this bill concerning the Bonneville project, and since the Members from the Northwest are directly interested in that project, I shall confine my remarks to section 6 of the bill. This section is exclusively concerned with the Boulder Canyon development and so is a matter of direct concern and deep interest for the people of southern California.

The purpose of this section is to allow the President to appoint an agency, before which hearings can be held, looking to a readjustment of some of the provisions of the existing Boulder Dam contract. Due to the fact that the Boulder Dam contracts were entered into in the year 1930, and because certain binding obligations have been incurred in keeping with the policy of the Federal Government at that time, it now appears that an unwarranted hardship is placed upon the people of southern California. Were it not for a complete change in the policy of the Federal Government regarding flood control and power projects, and were it not for the more beneficial terms of contracts made in connection with more recent power developments, we would not now be asking for this opportunity for a hearing and possible revision of some of the provisions of our contract.

The changes which we would like to have made, are briefly the following: First, a reduction of the interest rate from 4 percent to 3 percent, or else in keeping with the approximate cost of money to the United States or in line with what is being charged on other major power projects. While this may mean a considerable saving to the people of southern California of possibly $1,000,000, it is not an unreasonable request, since it is not the intention of the Government to make a profit for itself from the money loaned for the original development of this project, but merely to secure to the Government the repayment of the cost of the project together with the repayment of such interest thereon as the Government has had to pay out on the money which it has borrowed for this purpose.

Secondly, we should like to have the charge for interest on the cost of the flood-control features of the project eliminated. Again we stand on firm ground in making this request, as the Boulder Dam project is the only development of this type to which the Government has even made a charge for flood-control costs. In every other case the Government has itself stood the entire cost of flood control and has not charged this item against the project. We are not asking, and do not intend to ask at the hearing, that this cost of $25,000,000 be written off, as has been done everywhere else, but merely are seeking to eliminate the 4 percent interest charge on this sum. Also in this connection, it would be desirable to have the repayment of this flood-control cost deferred until after the other costs have been completely reimbursed, thus allowing the other costs of the dam construction and the power development to be paid off first.

The third matter to have considered at the hearing would be the question of rates to be charged. As the present rates were established in 1930, and since there is no provision for any revision thereof before 1945, it is only equitable that a reconsideration of these rates should be made at this time in view of the changed economic conditions and to have the rates in keeping with those charged at other power projects of this kind. Identical rates cannot be had, as we in southern California have the cost burden of transporting our power over a great distance in order to bring it to the point of distribution and use. But comparable rates should be permitted, so that this one project will not be entirely out of line with like developments. In this connection it should be kept in mind that 92 percent of all the power generated and used is being sold to public agencies, hence a reduction of rates will be a direct benefit to consumers, and only of benefit to private corporations in regard to 8 percent of the power developed. Moreover one of these private power companies is required to pay for one-half of the power allocated to the States of Arizona and Nevada and which they fail to use. The heavy expense of providing the necessary transmission facilities for this power, which is subject to withdrawal by the States at any time, really makes of this privilege an arduous obligation, so far as the private corporation is concerned.

The fourth item to be considered would be the proposal to allow the States of Arizona and Nevada to receive a fixed annual payment of $300,000 in lieu of their present right to receive 18¾ percent of any surplus revenues remaining after meeting the normal annual charges for amortization. This would be left up to the legislatures of each State to determine under which procedure they would prefer to operate. Since the amount of the surplus revenues is an indefinite item, this would make it possible for each State to know in advance the exact amount which they could anticipate receiving each year. The sum of $300,000 is the anticipated 18¾ percent to which they would be entitled, and while in some years the percentage amount might vary, it is estimated that it would approximate this sum.

That is all that is sought under the terms of section 6 of this bill, and it will be noted therein that no reference is made to any of the upper-basin States, although in one or other instances there appears to be some opposition on the part of these upper-basin States to this section. The reason that the upper-basin States are not mentioned in this section is that they are in no way affected by it, since they do not in any way share in the Boulder Dam project other than very indirectly. The only possible interest which these States can have in the financial operations of Boulder Dam would be an expectancy to receive something from the separate fund that would be created from surplus revenues. But whatever interest the upper-basin States might have, it cannot assume material form until after the complete amortization of this entire project.

The upper-basin States have been guaranteed under the terms of the Colorado River compact that they will be entitled to approximately 50 percent of the waters of the river. The question of prior rights due to usage have thus been waived on the part of the three lower-basin States, although they might have been in a position to acquire title by usage to a greater amount of the water than 50 percent. This matter is definitely settled, and is not of concern to us in this instance.

Thus it will be seen that as far as this legislation is concerned, the only possible effect it can have on the States of the upper basin would be in connection with the surplus revenues. Section 5 of the Boulder Canyon Project Act states:

> After the repayments to the United States of all money advanced with interest, charges shall be on such basis and the revenues derived therefrom shall be kept in a separate fund to be expended within the Colorado River Basin as may hereafter be prescribed by the Congress.

What the Congress may hereafter prescribe to have done with any such surplus funds some 40 or 50 years hence is entirely a matter of conjecture. So, likewise, the direct interest of the upper-basin States is extremely remote and will depend entirely upon what the Congress may determine at such time as the amortization has been entirely disposed of and the Government fully repaid the moneys it has advanced with interest thereon.

No opposition to section 6 of the pending bill comes from any one of the three lower-basin States. What little opposition does appear originates in one or more of the upper-basin States, States which have no rights nor direct interest in the matter, but which seemingly would attempt by their opposition to force the granting to them of some special benefits or privileges to which they are not now entitled. The enactment of this section, will work no hardship upon any of the States of the Colorado River Basin, but instead will relieve from certain inequalities those who have underwritten the complete cost and financing of this project. These inequalities and discriminations have occured by reason of the change in policy on the part of the Federal Government in regard to such projects, a change which has occurred since the signing of the contracts relating to Boulder Dam. Had the same contracts and the same provisions and obligations been required in connection with the Tennessee Valley Authority, the Grand Coulee or the Bonneville projects, as were required in the case of Boulder Dam, we would not now be asking for any revision of the terms of our contract. But since the Government itself has not pursued the course established in developing Boulder Dam, we feel that we have a right to ask for equal treatment along with these other projects, especially since it is but a matter of time before the Federal Government will be repaid every dollar of cost that it has incurred in connection with this very splendid and worth-while project. I do hope that the members will defeat any attempt to eliminate this provision of the bill or to modify it in any way. I urge the retention of section 6 in the bill and also a favorable vote on its passage.

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of the time on this side.

Mr. Chairman, I want the Members to know this bill is not the result of one mind. The committee had before it four or five bills submitted by different interests in that section of the country, and we have recommended here what the majority of the Members thinks is a sound bill. I am going along with the bill, although I am not at all in accord with the administration features of the bill. I hope an amendment will be offered which will put the Army engineers in charge of the building of this project and its administration.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK].

HARRY HOPKINS—LOST IN THE BILLIONS CONGRESS UNLOADED

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Chairman, Harry Hopkins, until just a short while ago, has been much in our mouths and on our minds. We have not heard much of him lately. We seem to have lost sight of him in the billions of dollars we have turned over to him.

Several weeks before and during the debate on the relief appropriations I suggested, along with others, that we have an investigation of the W. P. A.; that we definitely establish some policy, and have congressional committees for the purpose. So far Congress has done nothing about it.

We have failed to act on this issue for 5 years. If we leave Congress without doing anything, it will be a reflection on all parties and every Member of Congress.

And, my colleagues, strangely enough, this is something on which we can all agree, so pray let us do something about it!

Around $2,000,000,000 we hand out every year; a billion dollars every 6 months, and five hundred million every 3 months, and we do not know what is being done with it. We do not know what it is all about; we do not understand it; we do not know whether our money is going down a political rat hole or a social sewer—or, on the other hand, whether the expenditure is doing good and rebuilding the Nation.

Why, my colleagues, this situation is really ridiculous. For a few weeks before each term we have a relief bill, violent accusations are made against the W. P. A. We swear by the beard of the prophet that we are not going to vote any more money unless it is earmarked, and unless we know what is going to be done with it. Then the relief bill is brought on the floor, we have all kinds of antagonism and ill feeling—and then we always end up by giving Harry Hopkins all the money just the same, just as we did before, and still without knowing what is going to be done with it. I know of no better man to give it to than Hopkins, but what I say is still true.

WE SHOULD START PLANS NOW TO AVERT A FARCE

If we wish to really know what we are doing and intend to earmark funds, why not start right now making plans? If we ignore the problem now, and pass it over until the last minute, we will have the same farce next year as this year.

A worse thing may happen, for all I know, and that is without adequate information we may next time, in an election year, earmark relief funds for everything but relief, thereby diverting the fund from its real purpose. Or, still worse, we may get tied up in a big wrangle and do nothing.

The time to act is now.

BITTERNESS AND STRIFE CAN BE ELIMINATED

I wish again to make it plain that I am not criticizing Harry Hopkins. I have always believed he is doing an excellent job. But I believe Congress ought to know what is going on; that Congress ought to make the policies; and then something can be accomplished for the Nation, and, moreover, much of the bitterness and strife can be eliminated.

People are still making protests by the thousands about being taken off the W. P. A. roll. In my own city all groups of the American Federation of Labor have asked that W. P. A. be abolished. I do not understand all this, because at the same time, those who oppose the W. P. A. and the New Deal, some of our leading businessmen and industrialists, demand that the W. P. A. be continued.

I still get letters saying there is graft; I still get letters from people saying that the W. P. A. is causing people to refuse good jobs. We have spent billions and billions of dollars—the exact number of billions not mattering very much, since there have been billions enough—yet we do not know how this matter is being conducted.

THREE SPECIFIC PROPOSALS TO MEET SITUATION

Mr. Chairman, I have proposed three specific things by the introduction of bills and House resolutions.

One, is to have an investigating committee; that is, a House select committee. (For more detailed discussion, see below, I, to investigate unemployment, House Resolution 224.)

Two, is to have an unemployment commission composed of three Senators, three Congressmen, and six citizens, and all to serve without pay. (See below, II, United States Unemployment Commission, H. R. 7503.)

Three, is to establish, as soon as possible, a permanent committee on unemployment, public works, public health, social security, and old-age pensions. (See below, III, standing committee, "Public Works and Welfare.")

PUBLIC OPINION FAVORS ACTION—HUNDREDS OF EDITORIALS APPROVE

I have made an analytical study of public opinion of the United States, and I can report that in general hundreds of newspapers have editorialized in favor of action in line with the bills and resolutions I have introduced. Thousands of newspapers have written stories about the matter.

All of these editorials and news stories seem to indicate a genuine interest in the matter, and not a partisan or political one. Nothing has been written in a spectacular manner. (See below, IV, Press Comment of Nation.)

All groups, of whatever political faith, conservative, liberal, or radical, seem to agree that the idea is good, and should be adopted by Congress. All seem to be in approval.

Of all the hundreds of newspapers in America which I have checked, I have not found one single paper which is opposed.

SELECT COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE, REPORT IN JANUARY

Now, let me discuss the investigating, or select committee first. My idea is for it to go to work at once and report its findings the 3d of next January when we return.

This committee should go into the whole question of unemployment and relief, the number of employables and those unemployed, and also the number of those who cannot work, and need relief. Also the general situation as to how the Government should handle the situation, and how much money is really necessary.

UNITED STATES UNEMPLOYMENT COMMISSION—12 MEMBERS

The second is the United States Unemployment Commission, on which I have introduced a bill and which may be superior to the special committee. I say this because it will have six citizens, three Senators, and three Representatives, and therefore, generally representative.

It seems to me this committee would be preferable, because it could present a coordinated job to both Houses simultaneously, and in which the six citizens will represent the people of the United States.

This commission would have broad authority of general study and investigation concerning the whole situation of unemployment security, its nature, the matter of rural and urban destitution and ill-health, and the problems of youth and old age. In addition to this, the question of relief and unemployment insurance could be studied.

Mr. Chairman, I have described the special investigating committee of the House, to be accomplished by simple House resolution, and unemployment commission of mixed membership, to be created by a bill.

Considered opinion indicates we should establish one, or both.

SENATE HAS PROVIDED COMMISSION—BILL BEFORE LABOR COMMITTEE

The Senate has provided for an investigation and has passed a bill for a commission somewhat similar to that provided in my bill, and it is now before the House Committee on Labor. I believe the most important thing for us to do in reference to relief and unemployment is to be ready for the next term of Congress rather than facing it without any knowledge of what we are going to do.

Looking into the very near future, and that is the third thing I mentioned, we ought also to establish a permanent committee to deal with the problem of unemployment, relief, and disasters of all kinds which must be dealt with by the Government of the United States. If we have the other committees first, we can then create this new standing committee, which will be a permanent one like that of the Naval Affairs, Public Lands, Agriculture, or what not.

NEW STANDING COMMITTEE—PUBLIC WORKS AND WELFARE

In the House resolution which I have introduced this standing committee would be called the Committee on Public Works and Welfare, and would concern itself with the following:

All proposed legislation concerning public works, public health, social security, the relief of unemployment, and the relief of destitution caused by floods, drought, and other emergencies.

It might be said that there is no committee to handle any of these matters now. That is, no policy-making or standing committees as in other matters.

The new standing committee would handle public works, which is now only handled by the Appropriations Committee; it would also handle public health, a specialized subject now rapidly developing. This latter subject is now handled by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, which is very faithful, but greatly burdened by this extra work which they are not equipped to handle. It was before Interstate and Foreign Commerce that we had the cancer bills which we passed today. There is certainly no similarity between cancer and interstate commerce.

Mr. Chairman, at the present time the Committee on Ways and Means handles social security and old-age pensions—and everyone knows that committee is burdened enough with the problems of taxation. As for relief of unemployment and emergencies, no committee handles them now—except the matter goes before a Subcommittee on Appropriations. I think it quite plain that we must develop proper committees for all these recent and rapidly developing functions of government.

Mr. Chairman, the matters which I have discussed today are absolutely nonpartisan and in the interests of honest management, intelligent spending, and efficiency. Are we to make the same old mistakes year after year? Are we to shut our eyes and wait until next year and, just as the relief bill comes up, have some acrimonious discussions, and then unload some more billions with our eyes still blindfolded?

I tell you, my colleagues, that this is something the best friend or the worst enemy of W. P. A., the Republican, Democrat, Farmer-Labor, or Progressive, can support. I ask the Members of this House to give these matters their sympathetic consideration. [Applause.]

I. TO INVESTIGATE UNEMPLOYMENT, HOUSE RESOLUTION 224

For study by House alone; select committee

This committee would be composed of Members of the House alone, appointed by the Speaker. The idea would be to begin a study and investigation now, reporting at the very first of the next term.

The studies should include all phases of W. P. A. and unemployment. The report should include present-day practices, recommendations as to future policies, and the recommendation for a standing committee to be established.

Authority of committee for broad powers

Excerpts from the House resolution are as follows:

The committee is authorized and directed to conduct an investigation of unemployment within the United States with a view to determining—

(1) The number of employables who are unemployed;

(2) The number of unemployables who are in need of relief;

(3) The distribution of each of the foregoing among the several States; and

(4) Generally the manner in which the relief of unemployment shall be handled by the Government of the United States.

The committee shall also investigate from time to time the extent of any destitution caused by floods, drought, and other emergencies with a view to determining the manner in which the relief of such destitution shall be handled by the Government of the United States.

Political connections, administrative costs shall be investigated

The committee shall also conduct a thorough investigation of the Works Progress Administration with a view to determining—

(1) The extent, if any, to which relief is granted or denied because of political affiliations;

(2) The extent to which appointments to positions in the Works Progress Administration are governed by political affiliations;

(3) The administrative costs of furnishing relief and work relief through such offices of the Works Progress Administration throughout the United States as in the opinion of the committee are representative; and

(4) Such other matters connected with the administration of relief and work relief as in the opinion of the committee will furnish Congress with useful information in the formulation of a relief policy by the United States.

Mr. Chairman, the above matter explains in detail the purposes. This resolution has only been submitted after research and consultation with many different groups of people. I believe I prefer the "Unemployment Commission" for reasons I will submit under subhead II. But either committee would assist greatly in establishing permanent policies and of leading to the solution of our serious problems.

II. UNITED STATES UNEMPLOYMENT COMMISSION, H. R. 7503

Twelve members—three each House and Senate, six citizens

The establishment of a Commission by legislative enactment seems to me to be the best of the various approaches submitted. I say this because the Members of both Houses will have an opportunity of studying together, as in joint committees, with the further benefit of the advice and experience of citizens, probably businessmen, labor, religious, and professional leaders, directly representing the public.

Here are some of its provisions:

The Commission is authorized and directed to make a study and investigation of the problem of unemployment and insecurity throughout the United States with a view to determining—

(1) the nature and extent of unemployment;

(2) the nature and extent of rural and urban destitution, of ill health, of insecurity of youth, and of the aged and other destitute groups caused by or related to the problem of unemployment; and

(3) the relation between relief and unemployment insurance.

The Commission is required to report to the President and Congress immediately at the beginning of the second session of this the Seventy-fifth Congress. The submission of the report will at the same time give the matter to the public, who will be informed by the press. Also, no doubt several thousand copies of the report would be available for citizens throughout the Nation.

Recommendations—relief, financial, creation of employment

The report to be filed requires that it shall include "recommendations with respect to a comprehensive and permanent policy", with reference to the following:

(1) The relief of unemployment and destitution by means of work relief, direct relief, or otherwise;

(2) The division of the financial burden of relief, and the division of the responsibility for the administration thereof, between the United States and State and local governments;

(3) The coordination of a long-term relief and security program with various governmental agencies concerned; and

(4) The means of creating greater private employment.

Cost, $75,000—and not wasted

I make reference to the bill for further detail; but in order to give the worst, I have set out the amount as necessary for the investigation as $75,000. This may seem an extraordinarily large amount to spend, but considering the fact that billions upon billions have been, and will be, spent on relief, this is small in comparison; and, as I have already said, the members serve without pay.

When the grave importance of this question be considered, the money can be spent in good conscience. Moreover, it may lead to the solution of important problems, and the saving, rather than wasting, of huge sums of money. It may therefore be termed good business, too.

III. STANDING COMMITTEE, PUBLIC WORKS AND WELFARE

In line with Navy, Public Lands, and others

A committee for a designated purpose is naturally fitted to develop and carry out its own policies. This committee, charged with public health, social security, and old-age pensions, would soon become expert, and, what is just as important, would be sympathetic to such problems.

The members of this committee would also have the matter of relief destitution when caused by floods, drought, and other emergencies.

Supreme Court decisions—New power, new committees

All of the present committees in the House were created before the recent decisions of the Supreme Court on the Wagner labor relations bill, social security, and others. Previous to that time the conduct of Federal affairs was upon a narrow definition of the commerce power. This power of the Federal Government has been greatly widened.

Hence new committees are necessary to meet these new concepts.

IV. PRESS COMMENT OF NATION

Unanimously approve permanent policies relief

Mr. Chairman, several hundred editorials, as I mentioned before, have been written in recent weeks, principally during June and July, concerning the resolution and bills which I have introduced concerning unemployment, relief, the W. P. A., and the establishment of permanent policies in reference to those subjects.

Naturally, I would not place all these editorials in the RECORD, because it would take too much space. They have appeared in Republican, Democratic, and nonpartisan newspapers, besides industrial trade journals, farm and labor weeklies. I have haphazardly picked up a few of the editorials from the daily press, merely to indicate opinions as shown in every part of the United States.

For instance, the St. Joseph (Mo.) News Press approves of investigation in an editorial entitled "Billions Spent Blindly", and adds that there should likewise be an unemployment census.

Grand Rapids (Mich.) Press says:

Since policy making is the function of Congress, it should equip itself to declare policies intelligently and effectively.

The Middletown (Conn.) Press ends an editorial entitled "Wanted, Facts on Relief" as follows:

Those who desire completely disinterested inquiry favor the Maverick proposal.

SOUTHERN NEWSPAPERS STRONGLY FAVOR PERMANENT POLICIES

But let me quote some of the editorials from southern newspapers, and start with a small newspaper in Texas, the San Benito Light, which says, in part, as follows:

Right there the Congressman from San Antonio was talking horse sense. If his very active mind and lively energy can persuade his fellow Congressmen to dive intelligently into the muddy relief puddle and come out with some accurate information, he will have done the country a big service.

No two bureaus of the administration make the same guesses on unemployment. Harry Hopkins' guesses on relief requirements vary as his master's voice is devoted to announcement that recovery is here and "happy days are here again", or denouncing economic royalists (those citizens with incomes large enough to be taxed.)

The Cleveland (Tenn.) Banner says there should be a permanent agency; the Atlanta (Ga.) Constitution says that the relief policy should not be determined by a small group in an emergency administration, but by Congress with all possible information at its command. Likewise it is approved by the Birmingham (Ala.) Post, and concerning the situation the Birmingham (Ala.) News says that the sooner the country knows that (necessity for permanent policies) the better, ending with the statement that the proposal for a commission is timely.

Going back to Texas again, I read the following from the Dallas (Tex.) Journal:

MAURY MAVERICK, Texas Representative, is on the right track in demanding a real and impartial investigation of the country's relief needs and a clear-cut policy in dealing with them.

NEW JERSEY PAPERS URGE END OF CONFUSION

Here is another from the Hackensack (N. J.) Record, which says:

The present committee set-up of the Congress was established years ago, and a few changes have been made to meet altered circumstances. The result of this is much confusion, such as referring Mr. MAVERICK's own cancer bill to the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, coupled with a situation in which there is no stated committee to deal with what is probably the greatest of current long-range problems.

And then to make the point clear this New Jersey newspaper says that the committee set-up suggested is genuinely necessary. Numerous other New Jersey newspapers approve.

We find the Springfield (Ill.) Journal starting out by saying in reference to me:

While we would be happy to think that he is all wrong about this, the chances are that he is right.

The editorial is ended by saying that in the present situation we are all guessing, and demands that definite policies be adopted.

RANDOM EDITORIALS FROM ALL OVER UNITED STATES

It would be impossible in the time allotted to read even the excerpts of the dozens of editorials which I hold in my hand. At random I see one from the Minneapolis (Minn.) Journal, Nashville (Tenn.) Banner, Boston (Mass.) Christian Science Monitor. The Suffolk (Va.) Herald says any sane person knows we will have this problem for generations; another from Staunton, Va., urges attention; there are especially good editorials from Oklahoma papers. Various western papers are also included.

From the Miami (Fla.) News it is stated that these resolutions are an attempt "to cut straight through the fog that has enveloped all our estimates about relief."

SOUND PUBLIC OPINION FAVORS STANDARDIZED PRACTICES

Mr. Chairman, I have not checked every State in the Union, but I think I can safely say that several editorials have been written in every State in the Union urging permanent policies and the adoption of the resolutions I have submitted, or similar measures. I do not mean that Congress should adopt this merely because newspapers have printed editorials. But as well as I can judge, all of the editorials are without bias and, although I have had diligent search made of the newspapers in the country, we have found no paper that opposes. All seem to agree that in relation to unemployment and relief we should at least know what we are doing.

Mr. Chairman, when an enemy of Harry Hopkins rises on the floor to denounce him we can consider that there is some personal bias in the statement. When a member of the minority party rises and makes a blast against the W. P. A., Harry Hopkins, and the "brain trusters" it may be only an opposition speech.

But when specific resolutions or bills are offered which can be projected as a nonpartisan, congressional duty, and accepted by all, it seems to me that we should do something about it. If I am any judge of sound public opinion, the people favor at least knowing what we are doing, along with permanent policies. I do not say that all the American people are storming Congress to pass these resolutions. There is no march on the Capital. But I do say that whatever thoughtful persons have given the matter any consideration favor the proposals (or at least generally the ideas involved), as far as I have been able to find.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of improving navigation on the Columbia River, controlling floodwaters, promoting the national defense, and for other purposes, the dam, locks, power plant, and appurtenant works now under construction at Bonneville, Oreg., and North Bonneville, Wash. (hereinafter called Bonneville project), shall be completed, maintained, and operated under the direction of the Secretary of War and the supervision of the Chief of Engineers, subject, however, to the provisions of this act relating to the power and duties of the Columbia River Administrator provided for in section 2 (a) (hereinafter called the Administrator) respecting the sale and distribution of surplus electric energy generated at said project. So far as may be consistent with the purposes aforesaid, and to effect such purposes with the greatest possible public benefit and to avoid the waste of water power, the Secretary of War shall provide, construct, operate, maintain, add to, and improve at Bonneville project such machinery, equipment, and facilities for the generation of electric energy as may be necessary to develop salable electric energy as rapidly as markets may be found therefor by the Administrator. The electric energy thus generated and not required for the operation of the dam and locks at such project and the navigation facilities employed in connection therewith shall be delivered to the Administrator, at a switchboard to be installed in or near the power plant, for disposition as provided in this act.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is not a quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and ten Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BEITER: Page 1, line 10, strike out the comma after the word "Engineers" and insert a period. Strike out the remainder of line 10 and all of line 11, and, on page 2, strike out all of lines 1, 2, and 3, and line 4 down to and including the word "project."

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Chairman, if the amendment I have just offered is adopted, of course it will be necessary to offer perfecting amendments throughout the entire bill, particularly wherever reference is made in the bill to the administrator.

During the general debate on this bill much has been said with reference to the administration of the Board of Engineers. In my opinion, a division of power would be a detriment rather than an asset to the project. In view of the splendid reputation of the Board of Army Engineers on all projects they have handled in the past, if the matter were placed in the hands of the Board of Army Engineers from the time construction started until the time power is delivered, including control of switchboards and everything else that has to do with the project, we would have a better administration of the whole business. Furthermore, there would be a saving to the Government in that a salary of $10,000 a year, the cost of maintenance of the office, and so forth, would be saved.

I hope the amendment will be agreed to, and if it is, the other perfecting amendments will be offered.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, one of the worst mistakes we could make at this time would be to adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

In the first place, this is not a military proposition. It is a question of the operation of a dam for the purpose of the generation and transmission of electric energy throughout that area. Further, I do not think the Army engineers want to operate this project, but even if they did, I feel that the administration is right in asking that we have a civilian administrator to carry out the program with reference to the Bonneville project.

I sincerely trust the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEITER] will be voted down.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am very much in sympathy with the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York. So far, this entire project has been carried on under the direction of the Secretary of War by the Chief of Engineers, and I think it should continue to be carried on by these same men. They are experienced engineers, electrical as well as civil.

Mr. VOORHIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. I yield.

Mr. VOORHIS. I think all of us will agree with that statement, but is it not a little different question when you come to administering the matter of the sale and distribution of power?

Mr. CARTER. No; I do not think there is much difference in efficiency. Wherever you may meet it, it is the same. There is not a gentleman here who can rise on the floor of this House and dispute the efficiency of the Corps of Engineers.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. CARTER. I decline to yield.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. The gentleman asked for a gentleman to rise, and I rose.

Mr. CARTER. I did not ask any gentleman to rise, and I hope the next time this particular gentleman does rise he will rise in a parliamentary manner.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. I decline to yield.

It is not necessary to establish another commission in order to administer the affairs of the Bonneville powerhouses and dam. We are talking about economy here, and

I think the time has about come in the history of this country when we should begin to practice economy. I am just as eager as anybody to see this project carried on in an efficient manner. I am just as eager as anybody to see that this plant is administered in the interest of all of the people in that section of the United States. Because I believe the Corps of Engineers will administer it more efficiently than any administrator we can possibly get, I favor the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, there is already an argument brewing out there, and it has reached the floor of the House, with regard to who this administrator is going to be. May I say that the man who handles this job should be removed from politics entirely, and therefore, I shall be happy to support the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the proposed amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this proposition is not new to the committee, which has been working on this matter for more than a year. It may be new to a great many Members of the House.

The Secretary of the Interior has recommended that this entire operation be put under an administrator. The Secretary of War has recommended that the entire operation be under the War Department, which this amendment would provide. The committee, after weeks and weeks of trying to iron out these controversies and differences, not only between individuals out there in the several States but also between officials in our Government, decided that the proper thing to do was for the engineers to complete the navigation project, to have complete control of that operation as they have today, and as they have for 120 years had control of all navigation projects, to let them continue to operate the locks and dams, the fish elevator, and everything in connection with the dam itself, but turn the power over at the switchboard at the top of the river bank to the administrator to be appointed under the Secretary of the Interior. If you have two types of engineers operating together on this project, you are going to create more trouble than has ever been created before at any time.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. Can the gentleman from Texas, as chairman of the committee, tell us anything about the amount of money this administrator may spend without reporting to the Congress or anybody except the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. MANSFIELD. He would expend the same amount that would be expended if this amendment is agreed to.

Mr. MAY. How much will that be?

Mr. MANSFIELD. He will spend what is necessary to distribute and sell this power to be appropriated by Congress. Neither one of them would expend more.

Mr. MAY. Did the gentleman determine in the hearings anything about the distance or the remoteness of the market for power from this dam? How far away is the market?

Mr. MANSFIELD. This bill does not provide, but the Army engineer in charge out there estimates that it will be necessary to put a trunk line down to Portland, about 40 miles, and another short trunk line in another direction, which would go to a place where the lines of the cooperatives are expected to meet the trunk line and take the power from it. The distribution and sale of this power is not a proper function of the Army engineers. They can do it, and they can do it efficiently, so far as that is concerned.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BEITER. Does not the Corps of Engineers handle the entire power project in the Panama Canal Zone?

Mr. MANSFIELD. They handle the entire power project there, but they do not sell power to the public. They provide power to the Government and provide power for the operation of the Canal as well as the railway. They sell a portion of the power to ship lines which operate through the Panama Canal. They sell no power to the public. They are doing a good job. There is no question about their efficiency, their honor, or their integrity. No man has ever defended the Corps of Engineers more than I have on the floor of this House and elsewhere. I will do it again whenever and wherever it is necessary, because I will not allow any slander to go unchallenged that may be brought against them. However, I consider that this is out of their line.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. COLDEN. Did not General Markham himself state that he did not care for this job?

Mr. MANSFIELD. General Markham himself wrote that provision in this bill, and he brought it in with the assurance that it had the approval of the President of the United States. After considering all these controversies, it is the best solution we can possibly work out.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Utah.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Is it not possible to strike section 6 from this bill without in any way interfering with the bill insofar as the Bonneville project is concerned?

Mr. MANSFIELD. The gentleman is entirely correct. That would not affect Bonneville.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEITER].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BEITER) there were—ayes 17, noes 68.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion.

Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes had it.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, on that I demand tellers.

Tellers were refused.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MAY moves that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I hope that my colleagues in the House will understand my purpose in this matter. This is one of the most important measures that has been presented to the House during this session. It involves the most serious question this Congress has been called upon to consider. It involves the simple question of whether or not the United States Government and this country, built upon the capitalistic system, have definitely decided by vote of the representatives of the people to depart from that principle and become a socialistic nation.

The question at issue is whether or not the Government of the United States shall become a business concern rather than a governmental concern, and go into the business of producing and selling electricity indiscriminately.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I do not yield, as I have not the time.

The next most serious thing is passing upon the various features of this bill. Within the last 2 hours the House voted overwhelmingly to prohibit the United States Navy from being given a blank check to spend an additional $10,000,000 on some battleships because they said it was bad policy to open the door and let any agency of the Government spend money without restriction, and yet under the provisions of section 2 of this bill you authorize an Administrator, appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, without even the consent of the Senate, on a salary of $10,000 to go out and acquire land, acquire transmission lines, acquire substations, acquire systems of transmission lines, and do anything and everything he wants to do without limit as to expense.

You not only do this, but you issue a blank check and put in his hands $500,000 a backlog to check against, and then say, "Now, get all of the earnings of this concern and do as you please with them, and you have a checking account here to do whatever you want to do." He can go out and divest a citizen of his property by condemnation proceedings, a thing unauthorized and unheard of in this country. He can do this under section 46 of the Judicial Code, which authorizes him to pay the money into the county court and then say to the land owner, "Get off—I have your property and you will get the money when you can show what it is worth", when everybody in this House knows that the soundest and most fundamental principle of law known to American jurisprudence is that the property of a citizen, for public purposes, is exempt from the hands of the Government or anybody else until he is paid for it. Yet this legislation does that very thing, and there is a spirit here this evening to push it through this House without consideration, with a mere handful of the Members present—less than a quorum of the House.

I say this is unwise and unnecessary, and so long as I live, so help me God, I shall never vote to turn this Government over to a bunch of irresponsible bureaucrats, without bond and without accountability to the appropriating authorities of this Government. In other words, you bring in a bill here that provides that a man can spend $1,000,000,000 if he wants to, without ever having seen the Appropriations Committee, of which you are a member.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. Certainly; I shall be pleased to yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Would the gentleman from Kentucky go further and undertake to oust all the bureaucrats we have now?

Mr. MAY. I would like to oust 101 percent of them that we do not need.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. We have just listened to the argument of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] to the effect that this is socialism. It is the very antithesis of socialism. It is taking to the individual home the resources of America, building up the individual, growing up a generation of responsible individuals.

Mr. Chairman, there was not any complaint from certain sources when the Power Trust attempted to regiment the American people and rob and plunder them in every conceivable manner, when it flooded the country with watered securities and at the same time controlled elections and even attempted to control the Congress of the United States.

No; Mr. Chairman, this is not socialism. This is Americanism. We are saving the resources of America for the American people, for the common people, the masses, and not for certain utilities that are now trying to control every phase of American life.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] complains because this bill gives the right to this administrator to go out and under the right of eminent domain secure rights-of-way. That same privilege has been exercised by the utilities, the power companies, the railroads, and every other so-called public utility.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. No; I cannot yield, but I will answer the gentleman without yielding. I know what he wants to ask. It is said that the administrator can go and take property and then pay for it. Oh, we made the Power Trust sick when we placed that provision in the T. V. A. Act. They wanted the T. V. A. to first go out and sue, and then they could drag them into the Federal court under the law, where there is a diversity of citizenship, because the power utilities are now incorporated in Delaware or Maine or in distant States in order to dodge responsibility in the State courts. So they wanted T. V. A. to have to sue for these rights-of-way, and for cutting down trees, and for taking the right to build a line across a 10-acre field. Then they could have gone and employed high-powered lawyers with whom they had been trying to deceive the courts for 2 or 3 years, and could have dragged T. V. A. into interminable litigation and kept it from building any lines at all. Of course, they would like to do that at Bonneville.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. No; I must decline to yield. They would like to do the same thing at Bonneville, in order to prevent the Bonneville project from succeeding. But we have had some experience along this line. My Republican friends have been accusing the T. V. A. of paying people more than their property was worth. Every foot of ground, every right-of-way, everything the Bonneville project takes in order to extend this program will be paid for and the people will be satisfied. But, of course, the Power Trust will not be.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. It has been intimated that whatever is spent by the Administrator, it would not have to be accounted for to the Appropriations Committee. Of course, he has to account for it.

Mr. RANKIN. Of course, and everybody seems to know that except my distinguished friend from Kentucky [Mr. MAY]. They have to go before the Committee on Appropriations and get the money before it can be expended.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. MAY. Is the gentleman from Mississippi in favor of the T. V. A. or the Bonneville or myself or anybody else taking a citizen's property without trial before a jury?

Mr. RANKIN. No.

Mr. MAY. That is what the T. V. A. Act does.

Mr. RANKIN. It does not. Nor I am not in favor of the power trust taking it in the corrupt manner they have been taking it, and that is what we are fighting against here, and that is what we want to end by the passage of this character of legislation. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my motion.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky is withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PIERCE: Strike out all of section 1 and insert the following:

"That for the purpose of maintaining, operating, and improving the hydroelectric-power facilities now owned by the United States in the vicinity of Bonneville, Oreg., and North Bonneville, Wash. (hereinafter called Bonneville project), such facilities, (subject to the completion of the construction of the dam, locks, lifts, fishways, power plant, and appurtenant works by the Secretary of War, and the continued operation of the locks, lifts, and fishways by the Secretary of War), shall be administered by the Columbia River Administrator, as hereinafter provided. The Columbia River Administrator (hereinafter called the administrator) shall be appointed by, and responsible to, the Secretary of the Interior, shall receive a salary at the rate of $10,000 per year, and shall maintain his principal office at a place selected by him in the vicinity of Bonneville project. No administrator shall, during his continuance in office, have any financial interest in any public-utility company, holding company, or subsidiary company of a holding company, as such terms are defined in the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935. The form of administration herein established for Bonneville project is intended to be provisional pending the establishment of permanent administration for Bonneville and other projects in the Columbia River Basin.

"SEC. 2. (a) The administrator is authorized to operate, maintain, and improve the Bonneville project, as hereinafter provided. So far as may be consistent with the promotion of navigation and the control of floods, the administrator shall provide, construct, operate, maintain, and improve at Bonneville project such machinery, equipment, and facilities for the generation of electric energy as may be necessary to develop salable electric energy as rapidly as markets may be found therefor. The administrator shall, as hereinafter provided, make all necessary or appropriate arrangements for the disposition of electric energy generated at Bonneville project not required for the operation of the dam, locks, lifts, and fishways, and the navigation facilities employed in connection therewith. Upon the requisition of the Secretary of War, the administrator shall allot and deliver to the War Department without charge so much electric energy as in the judgment of the War Department is necessary for use in the operation of such locks, lifts, and fishways, and the navigation facilities employed in connection therewith."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. The amendment that has been offered is an attempt to amend sections that have not been read, and to strike out sections that have not been read. It is not a motion to strike out all after the enacting clause.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understands the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon, he offers to substitute two sections for two original sections of the bill. He moves to strike out section 1, and serves notice that if his amendment is adopted he will then move to strike out section 2.

Mr. TABER. But the gentleman from Oregon did not do that, as I understood it, when he offered his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has the opportunity of stating his position. Does the gentleman from Oregon offer his amendment as a substitute for the two sections, with the intention of moving to strike out the second section in the event his amendment is agreed to?

Mr. PIERCE. Yes; that is the idea.

The CHAIRMAN. That being the case, the Chair overrules the point of order and recognizes the gentleman from Oregon for 5 minutes.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MAY. As I understood the amendment, it changed all of the sections down to section 4?

The CHAIRMAN. The motion is to strike section 1 at this time and substitute two sections for sections 1 and 2 of the bill, with notice that a motion will be made to strike section 2 when read.

Mr. MAY. I may be under a misapprehension, but I thought it undertook to strike section 3, down to section 4.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not so understand.

Mr. MAY. Section 1 is the only section that has been read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not so understand the motion. The point of order is overruled.

The gentleman from Oregon is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, this is just opposite to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York. It is my belief that this is what should be done. This is what I call unified control. This puts the administrator in charge not only of the generation but of the sale of electric current at Bonneville. I think it should be so. The hand that controls the levers that let the water in and out should be the same hand that sells the energy to the people who are to buy it. I do not believe in divided authority. I am willing to admit the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has gone some distance with us in taking the Army engineers out of the sale part. I think he did so because the Army engineers did not want the job, but I want them to retire now from the management of the wheels, and when they want power to operate the locks or any of the facilities that they need for navigation, they can easily get it from the man who is operating the electric plant.

Just think for a moment: Electricity moves at the speed of light, 186,000 miles a second. Water moves slowly. When the administrator wants to sell power he wants to know that he can have it on the spot. He does not want to have to wait and figure out whether he can get it or not. He does not want to take the telephone to call up Washington to beg for more current. He wants to be able to say, "Deliver it", and to know that it will be delivered. It does not matter so much with the men who want power for the locks. They can wait, if necessary. It is a matter of minutes or hours, but the man who operates a factory down at Portland wants it immediately, and it is all-important that delivery can be made as he wants it, and smoothly and continuously.

As a man who has operated a small plant, I can affirm that I would not want to have the Army engineers or any other group of men tell me what power I could have or when I could have it. I do not want to criticize the Army engineers. I know of their efficiency. I know what they have done; but, as I said before, they are not public-ownership people. They do not drift that way. A man who is in charge of Bonneville should be sold on public ownership in order to make a success of it. If he is, he can make as much of a success as they have in Tacoma.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. This will leave the Army engineers in charge of navigation, in charge of the locks and in charge of the fishways, will it not, just as they are along the Tennessee River, if this amendment is adopted?

Mr. PIERCE. Yes; that is so. The same man who sells the electricity, who contracts for the sale of it, should be the man who directs the amount that is being made. You understand that at this big dam a time will come when, instead of generating 86,000 kilowatts in these two units, that may drop down one-third, when the tailrace fills with the floods of the Columbia River. The administrator must be ready to face that, and provide a continuous supply of firm power. He does not want a man in there directing how much juice is going to be generated. He wants to make his own arrangements for leveling up. Perhaps he will run a line to some of the public-ownership plants where the rivers are in flood at the time he is short, and can generate extra power for him; for instance, on the Mackenzie or on the Skagit. But that operation must be in the hands of a unified control if it is going to be a success. You cannot divide authority on a battlefield. This is a battlefield.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE] has expired.

Mr. HILL of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Bonneville! Just about to be completed. The first dam to be completed in that wonderful river, the Columbia. I have told you before that one-sixth of the potential water power of the United States is in our State of Washington. Now we have completed the Bonneville project. There was a group that was and is fighting the building of any dams on the Columbia or anywhere, and that group now is fighting to place control of these dams, when completed, in the hands of those who favor private power companies instead of favoring the ultimate consumer. I have voted consistently in favor of these power dams, but I shall never vote again for any appropriation for any dam unless I am convinced that this power will go to the ultimate consumer at cost, and not through the hands of private companies unless they will observe the yardstick as explained and urged by the President since he first assumed the duties of his office in 1933. I have nothing against private companies as long as they are compelled to compete with municipal or other public utilities as in Tacoma and Seattle, Wash. There they must reduce their rates as often as the municipal plants, and the people of those cities are getting electric power at one-third of rates charged in the Yakima Valley, where the power companies have a monopoly.

Much is made of the taxes paid by power companies. They pay no taxes. They are paid by the ultimate consumer in overhead expenses. Moreover, in the State of Washington the valuation of all our private electric utilities for taxation purposes is only one-thirtieth of the valuation for rate-making purposes and hence the tax is insignificant.

In Tacoma, Seattle, and other cities of Washington that have municipal ownership, the city governments which generate the power also distribute it to the ultimate consumer. Of course the dams were built by engineers but the distribution is in the hands of civil authorities. So at Bonneville Dam, although it has been built by the Army engineers, the distribution to municipalities, power districts, cooperatives, and any surplus, if there is any, to private companies, should be under supervision of some civil administrator of the Federal Government in compliance with the section of the law which provides for cost of production.

My friend from Kentucky calls this socialism. I would ask him who owns the Army and the Navy of the United States? Is that socialism?

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL of Washington. No; I cannot yield. The gentleman can answer in his own time. I would ask also who owns and operates the post offices in the United States? I ask any Member of this House if they think that the rural communities of this country would get their letters today if the post office was owned and operated by private companies?

My friend from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] mentioned the fact that the rural people of certain foreign countries were getting all these fine electrical conveniences in abundance in their homes. I asked him and he admitted the fact that the public utilities were owned and operated by the countries themselves. I am proud to come by descent from old Norway, which has used her streams for the people of that country, and that is all we are asking for in the State of Washington, in the Northwest, and in the United States. I might add that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON], who berated public ownership on the floor of this House yesterday, to just remember the land of his birth, Norway.

The pending question is, Who shall operate Bonneville Dam? We believe that there should be an administrator. They ask, To whom is he responsible? He is responsible to the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary is responsible to the President of the United States. Others say that it should be in the hands of the Corps of Army Engineers. To whom are they responsible? They are responsible to the Secretary of War and he is responsible to the President of the United States, and in the final analysis, Congress alone has the authority to appropriate the funds provided for in this bill. What difference is there? None whatever as far as responsibility is concerned. The only thing is what has been established here and has been emphasized, that the administrator would administer this so that the ultimate consumer would get it at cost. We do not believe that the Army engineers would do that, and in support of our contention we ask you to consider what the Army engineers did at Muscle Shoals for 15 long years before one of the finest Americans in the United States, Senator Norris, and such men as Allman and Quinn, and my friend Rankin, here in the House, got the Muscle Shoals bill through. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment may not prevail. In my opinion, if the Committee should adopt this amendment it would be one of the most unfortunate things that the Congress has done.

The gentleman from Washington seemed to be arguing against putting the Army engineers in charge of this project as administrator. There is no question of that kind before the House. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE] was to take the operation of the power plant itself away from the Corps of Army Engineers and place it in the hands of the civil administrator—a political appointee of a political agency of this Government. Let me call attention to the fact that the House Rivers and Harbors Committee has reported out this bill giving to the Corps of Army Engineers jurisdiction to operate the power plant. The Commerce Committee of the Senate has reported out a bill giving jurisdiction over operation of the power plant to the Corps of Army Engineers. No committee of this Congress has ever suggested to the Congress that the operation of the power plant itself be placed in the hands of a civilian administrator or in the hands of anyone except the Army engineers who built it.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOTT. I cannot yield in my very limited time. I am sorry.

This proposal was thoroughly threshed out before both the Senate and House committees. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE] offered his amendment before the House committee. It was thoroughly considered there, and I do not believe I am violating any confidence when I say that it received no support whatever from any single member of that committee.

This dam was built by the Corps of Army Engineers. A great many technical problems had to be met and solved. They were all met and solved by the Army engineers alone. When the dam is completed this year the greatest volume of water will flow over the spillway that flows over any dam in the world. The engineers built that dam under the authority of Congress with the thought and upon the supposition that they would operate it, as they have always operated all of our great dams with one or two exceptions. No one had any idea that the engineers would not operate it. It is necessary that an agency of this Government having an experienced personnel should operate this power plant up to the switchboard and then turn it over to the administrator.

That is what the bill as it stands before you now proposes to do. That is the considered judgment and the unanimous recommendation of the committee.

I told you when I took the floor an hour or so ago that when the proposal was before the committee I offered a bill which would place the entire jurisdiction in the Corps of Engineers. I did this because I thought they were the most competent, the most experienced, and the most free from politics. The committee did not concur in my point of view and likewise it did not concur in the point of view of my colleague from eastern Oregon. It has recommended this compromise bill, with which I am satisfied, and I think all the people of the States of Oregon and Washington are satisfied with this bill. I believe we should accept the judgment of the committee and pass this bill as it is written.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I am one of the six Members of the House from the State of Washington. All of us favor this bill.

Personally I am in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon because I believe it will incorporate a principle which is almost universally supported by the people of my State. Most of the Members of the House from the State of Washington have received resolutions and letters asking that the principle incorporated in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon be written into this law.

Mr. Chairman, I come from the city of Tacoma, Wash., which is an outstanding example of the success of municipally operated light and power in America. We do not have to apologize to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] for the operation of the Tacoma light and power plant. I think it was significant that in the discussion today when reflections were cast upon the operations of publicly owned plants in the Province of Ontario, no statements were made reflecting upon the city of Tacoma's operation of the power plant.

Public ownership is a big issue in the State of Washington and any man who aspires to office as either a Member of the House or Senate from the State of Washington cannot, with impunity, oppose public ownership of power. The city of Tacoma sells power at a rate lower than any other city in the United States. The city of Tacoma sells power to its citizens at a rate so low it is universally used night and day by the residents, in great abundance. The record stands by itself.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. I have not the time. The lowest rate shown on the chart for any city in the United States is that of Tacoma, Wash.

Mr. Chairman, the municipally owned power plant of the city of Tacoma turns into the coffers of the public treasury more than a million dollars a year in the form of profit. It also pays in 7½ percent of its gross earnings to the city of Tacoma, which averages more than $200,000 a year.

How is that for taking property off the tax rolls? In lieu of taxation, it turns into the city's treasury more than $200,000 a year.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Chairman, we feel very strongly about public power and any man who has the political philosophy of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] in my State would not last 5 minutes in the Democratic Party. [Applause.]

The President of the United States in 1932 and 1936 favored publicly operated power plants, and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] should be loyal enough to his President to back him up when he is fundamentally right. [Applause.]

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. I am sorry, I cannot yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MAY. The gentleman mentioned my name.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. I have not the time within 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I want the Members of the House to realize that under public ownership of power we can have operation free of politics. In the city of Tacoma the light and power plant is run exclusively from the top to the bottom by employees under the civil service. We do not know whether they are Republicans or Democrats who operate our light and power plant. We have had the same general manager—the commissioner of public utilities—for 20 years. He is still there. In the city of Seattle they have had Jim Ross for more than 18 years running the city's light plant.

I know about the success of public ownership of power in the city of Tacoma. The arguments advanced by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] about earthquakes in the State of Washington do not carry weight with us, because there are more earthquakes in New York City than in our section of the country, particularly the State of Washington, and we are not worrying much about that. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McSWEENEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by my distinguished friend, feeling that if the Army engineers construct this dam it is only a matter of good husbandry on the part of the Government to allow those same engineers to have control of the intricate operations of a great dam of that kind. I have had experience myself as a civil engineer. I can remember right after the war America had interned a number of German ships. The best engineering ability in America was unable to go into the intricate operations of some of those ships, even though they had the blueprints, because in the construction of any great enterprise you will always meet with difficulties that only the ones who did the actual constructing know about. I say to my distinguished friend the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE] that the Army engineers should be the men to maintain and operate this dam and bring the power to the switchboard.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWEENEY. I yield to the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Does the gentleman think the men who build the locomotives ought to be hired by the railroads to run them?

Mr. McSWEENEY. I do not think that is a comparable proposition at all. This is a great dam that will meet different emergencies. There may be flood problems. There may be a shifting of soil. Breaks may occur. The walls may not stand the pressure. Under the plan of Governor PIERCE he admits he will have to have a batch of engineers to cooperate with the administrator. The engineers who do cooperate with the administrator are much better operating men and they ought to have something to say about the enterprise.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWEENEY. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. MOTT. The gentleman who spoke just previously stressed the fact that the Members should support the President. May I ask the gentleman if it is not a fact there is contained in the testimony of General Markham given before the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House a statement and a letter in which the President himself recommends the operation of the power plant at this dam by the Army engineers? That is in the record.

Mr. McSWEENEY. Yes. The gentleman is correct.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, what I said awhile ago against the other amendment applies with even greater force to the present amendment. If this amendment is adopted, we shall be in the attitude of taking a navigation dam project out of the hands of the Secretary of War, where such projects have been for 120 years. With more than 400 waterway projects in this country, Alaska, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and in Hawaii, this will be the only one which will have been taken out of the hands of the War Department by an act of Congress.

Mrs. HONEYMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the gentlewoman from Oregon.

Mrs. HONEYMAN. If this amendment is adopted it would mean the taking of a navigation project out of the hands of the engineers, when the navigation aspects of the dam, the sea locks, and so forth, are left with the Army engineers.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I do not know about that, but it would be preferable to do that than to put these two engineers in there on the operation of the same dam. Whenever you put an engineer of the War Department and an engineer of the Department of the Interior on the same project so that they are messing around together with the same dam and the same machinery and the same locks, you are going to cause more Kilkenny stuff in this country than you ever heard of before. [Applause.]

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. PIERCE. Who will operate Grand Coulee when it is completed? Will it not be the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. MANSFIELD. That is not a War Department project. It is a reclamation project.

Mr. PIERCE. Will it not be the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes.

Mr. PIERCE. Why should it not be the Secretary of the Interior at Bonneville? Give us unified control on the Columbia River.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Who operates the navigation locks and dams on the Ohio River and on the Allegheny and all other navigation projects?

Mr. PIERCE. We are not generating power there.

Mr. MANSFIELD. We are generating power at a half dozen dams on the Ohio River, and we are generating power on the Mississippi River at Keokuk and at Rock Island. We are generating power at various other places all over the country. The War Department has jurisdiction over all of them at the present time.

Mr. KELLER. Who operates them?

Mr. MANSFIELD. The War Department does and always has.

Mr. KELLER. And administers them? Who owns the one at Keokuk?

Mr. MANSFIELD. That was built by a private corporation, but the Government has taken it over.

Mr. KELLER. The Government is not administering the price and the sale of that power.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I do not know whether the Government administers the sale there or not. In this bill we are putting it in the hands of an administrator, but we are not putting another engineer on the dam, with two engineers operating on the same proposition.

Mr. PIERCE. Oh, no.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes; the gentleman's amendment does that.

Mr. PIERCE. No; my amendment provides that the administrator provided by Congress is the sole administrator.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Then the gentleman's amendment takes the operation of the locks and dam out of the War Department, as I stated at first.

Mr. PIERCE. Yes; and places it in the hands of the administrator.

Mr. MANSFIELD. That is the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. PIERCE. Yes.

Mr. McSWEENEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes.

Mr. McSWEENEY. Would it not be necessary to have a corps of engineers to advise this administrator, anyway? They will be private engineers.

Mr. MANSFIELD. What reason is there for taking one of more than 400 projects out of the hands of the War Department and putting it in the hands of a temporary official?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. If this amendment carries, would there be a duplication of the work of these various engineers?

Mr. MANSFIELD. The power facilities in the Bonneville Dam consist of 10 units, 2 of which are practically completed now. There are eight more to be installed, if and when the sale of power will justify it. If you put one set of men in there under the Corps of Engineers and another set under another department of the Government, one operating a portion of the turbines and the other a portion of the machinery, there will be trouble. It is all the same machinery. You can hardly divide the functions. It is a far better one to operate to the switchboard, and the other from that point to the consumer. The line of responsibility would be at the switchboard.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Then there would be duplication of work there?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Absolutely; there would be duplication of work and duplication of costs if this amendment is adopted. The Army engineers there now are costing the Government nothing, because their salaries and their work go on just the same whether they are there or anywhere else.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will it not be absolutely necessary to keep the Army engineers there as far as navigation is concerned?

Mr. MANSFIELD. It is absolutely necessary, unless you amend all of our laws.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. If this amendment is adopted, then, you will have to have the engineers anyway?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Absolutely.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. FERGUSON. Is it not true that in the gentleman's own experience with the Corps of Engineers he has found that it has always been a body that carries out the dictates of Congress and never has established any policies whatsoever?

Mr. MANSFIELD. No man can point to any act by which the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army has ever violated a mandate of Congress, and I defy any man to show me such an act. [Applause.]

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for one further question?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. PIERCE. Did not Scattergood, who is the manager of the Los Angeles plant and the most eminent authority in the United States on public ownership of utilities, say before the gentleman's committee that it would cost him $1,000,000 a year if they had divided control at Boulder Dam?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I do not recall that.

Mr. COLDEN. But navigation is not the primary purpose at Boulder Dam.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Neither did the Army engineers construct Boulder Dam. It was constructed under the authority under which the gentleman from Oregon now wants to put this dam.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PIERCE and Mr. RANKIN) there were—ayes 47, noes 67.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. PIERCE and Mr. COLDEN.

The committee again divided and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 50, noes 79.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. (a) The surplus energy generated in the operation of the Bonneville project shall be disposed of by and through the Administrator as hereinafter provided. The Administrator shall be appointed by and be responsible to the Secretary of the Interior, shall receive a salary at the rate of $10,000 per year, and shall maintain his principal office at a place selected by him in the vicinity of Bonneville project. No Administrator shall during his continuance in office have any financial interest in any public-utility company engaged in the business of generating, transmitting, distributing, or selling electric energy to the public, or in any holding company or subsidiary company of a holding company as such terms are defined in the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935. The Administrator shall, as hereinafter provided, make all necessary or appropriate arrangements for the disposition of electric energy generated at Bonneville project not required for the operation of the dam and locks at such project and the navigation facilities employed in connection therewith. He shall act in consultation with an advisory board composed of a representative designated by the Secretary of War, a representative designated by the Secretary of the Interior, and a representative designated by the Federal Power Commission. The form of administration herein established for Bonneville project is intended to be provisional pending the establishment of permanent administration for Bonneville and other projects in the Columbia River Basin.

(b) In order to encourage the widest possible use of all electric energy that can be generated and marketed and to provide reasonable outlets therefor, and to prevent the monopolization thereof by limited groups or localities, the Administrator is authorized and directed to provide, construct, operate, maintain, and improve such electric transmission lines and substations, and facilities and structures appurtenant thereto, as he finds necessary, desirable, or appropriate for the purpose of transmitting electric energy, available for sale from the Bonneville project to existing and potential markets, and for the purpose of interchange of electric energy to interconnect the Bonneville project with other Federal projects.

(c) The Administrator is authorized, in the name of the United States, to acquire, by purchase, lease, condemnation, or donation, such real and personal property, or any interest therein, including lands, easements, rights-of-way, franchises, electric transmission lines, substations, and facilities and structures appurtenant thereto, as the Administrator finds necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of this act. Title to all property and property rights acquired by the Administrator shall be taken in the name of the United States.

(d) The Administrator shall have power to acquire any property or property rights, including patent rights, which in his opinion are necessary to carry out the purposes of this act, by the exercise of the right of eminent domain and to institute condemnation proceedings therefor in the same manner as is provided by law for the condemnation of real estate. In respect of condemnation of any property or property rights, the Administrator shall have the rights conferred by the act of February 26, 1931 (46 Stat. 1421, ch. 307, secs. 1 to 5, inclusive), as now compiled in sections 258a to 258e, inclusive, of title 40 of the United States Code.

(e) The Administrator is authorized, in the name of the United States, to sell, lease, or otherwise dispose of such personal property as in his judgment is not required for the purposes of this act and such real property and interests in land acquired in connection with the construction or operation of electric transmission lines or substations as in his judgment are not required for the purposes of this act: Provided, however, That before the sale, lease, or disposition of real property or transmission lines the Administrator shall secure the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

(f) Subject to the provisions of this act, the Administrator is authorized, in the name of the United States, to negotiate and enter into such contracts, agreements, and arrangements as he shall find necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of this act.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WILCOX, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7642) to authorize the completion, maintenance, and operation of the Bonneville project for navigation, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

STILL FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A still further message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6958) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes."

PERMISSION TO FILE A REPORT

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have until midnight tonight to file a report from the Library Committee on the Jefferson Memorial bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, simply to find out when the Bonneville bill will be taken up again. Can the gentleman from Texas tell us?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I think the gentleman will have to ask the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The majority leader is not on the floor, but I think it is quite proper for the Chair to state that although we have made arrangements for the consideration of another bill on Monday, the Chair would be inclined to recognize this bill first after the disposition of District of Columbia business.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks made this afternoon on the Bonneville bill and to insert certain telegrams and a letter from the President of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. EICHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks upon the cancer research bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CONFERENCE REPORT—INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL, 1938

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, I submit a conference report and statement upon the bill (H. R. 6958) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior, for printing under the rule.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday after the disposition of all business on the Speaker's desk and other special orders I may address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. DEMUTH, for July 26 to 28, inclusive, on account of attending to conferences on flood control at Pittsburgh.

To Mr. MAAS, for 1 week, on account of illness.

To Mr. ARNOLD, for 1 week, on account of public business.

To Mr. BULWINKLE, for 15 days.

To Mr. HOFFMAN, on account of illness.

To Mr. DEEN, for 10 days, on account of important business.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to authorize the reservation of minerals in future sales of tribal lands of the Choctaw-Chickasaw Indians in Oklahoma, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

ORDINANCES, ETC., OF MUNICIPAL COUNCILS IN VIRGIN ISLANDS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate two letters from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to law, copy of an ordinance passed by the Municipal Council of St. Thomas and St. John, and also copies of several ordinances, resolutions, etc., passed by the Municipal Council of St. Croix, all approved by the Governor of the Virgin Islands, which, with the accompanying papers, were referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following memorial of the Legislature of the State of Florida, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Whereas agriculture is one of the most important industries of the State of Florida; and

Whereas the growing of cigar leaf tobacco is an important part of the agriculture of this State; and

Whereas the cheap competition of this product in the markets is the cigar leaf tobacco imported from the East Indies, which is produced by labor which has a standard of living so low that the production of these countries can be sold much cheaper than American products produced under the American standard of living unless the American product is given ample protection in the form of tariff; and

Whereas the continuation and development of the tobacco-growing industry in the State of Florida is of vital importance to the State and furnishes employment to large numbers of farm laborers as well as large numbers of laborers in the packing and processing plants: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Florida, That the President and the Congress of the United States are hereby memorialized to enact such laws and promulgate and enforce such regulations as will afford ample tariff protection to the American growers, packers, and shippers of cigar leaf tobacco and such protection as will enable them to maintain the American standard of living and at the same time compete with the foreign producers of these commodities.

That the Secretary of State of the United States, the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States, and the Secretary of Commerce of the United States, and the United States Tariff Commission are urged to take such action as to effectuate these results.

That the secretary of state of the State of Florida is hereby directed to transmit a copy of this memorial, under the great seal of the State, to the President of the United States, to the President of the United States Senate, to the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, to the Secretary of State of the United States, to the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States, to the Secretary of Commerce of the United States, to the Chairman and each member of the United States Tariff Commission and to each member of the Florida delegation in the Congress of the United States.

Mr. LODGE presented petitions of sundry citizens of Springfield and East Braintree, Mass., praying for the enactment of legislation to abolish the Federal Reserve System as at present constituted and also praying that Congress exercise its constitutional right to coin money and regulate the value thereof, which were referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. COPELAND presented a resolution adopted by the Fiftieth Annual Convention of the New York State League of Savings and Loan Associations, at Saranac Inn, N. Y., protesting against the enactment of the so-called Federal mortgage bank bill, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Commercial Telegraphers' Union, Eastern Broker Division, New York City, N. Y., endorsing the so-called Schwellenbach resolution, being the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 176) favoring employment by the Works Progress Administration of persons unable to find employment in private industry, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Branch No. 186 of the Workmen's Sick and Death Benefit Fund of Woodhaven, Long Island, N. Y., favoring the placing of embargoes against Germany and Italy in connection with the present civil strife in Spain, and also revision of the existing embargo against the present Government of Spain so as to allow that Government to buy all commodities necessary for its defense, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the New York Board of Trade, of New York City, protesting against the enactment of legislation providing for the establishment of a Labor Standards Board, and so forth, which was ordered to lie on the table.

SAFEGUARDING WELFARE OF APPRENTICES

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I have received a letter from the Commissioner of Labor and Industries for the State of Massachusetts with respect to the bill (H. R. 7274) to enable the Department of Labor to formulate and promote the furtherance of labor standards necessary to safeguard the welfare of apprentices and to cooperate with the States in the promotion of such standards, and I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Senate Committee on Education and Labor and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS,
DEPARTMENT OF LABOR AND INDUSTRIES,
State House, Boston, July 20, 1937.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I have for many years been keenly interested in the apprentice question. I have felt that the training of mechanics for the skilled trades was one of the most important questions facing both labor organizations and employers, particularly in the construction industry.

During the last few years considerable progress has been made in Massachusetts in arriving at a common understanding of the desirability of a stable system of apprenticeship. The National Youth Administration and the State committee on apprentice training have done some very effective work along these lines. It was my privilege as commissioner of labor and industries to assist these efforts by calling employer and labor groups to separate conferences at the State house for the purpose of interesting them in cooperating with the Federal and State agencies. The attendance at these sessions was very representative, and both groups expressed themselves as ready to go ahead on cooperative efforts for an adequate and substantial apprentice system.

The city of Boston has during this school year assigned a man as apprentice coordinator to devise a school program for the allied education of the apprentices, and, in general, to work with the interested trades in meeting their apprenticeship problems. This condition is significant also, as it is the first time to my knowledge that organized labor in this community and the vocational education system have been able to find a common ground of procedure and cooperation.

I am strongly of the opinion that labor departments, both State and Federal, have a responsibility in this apprentice question, insofar as standards of wages and working conditions and the protection of both apprentices and journeymen are concerned.

I am gratified, therefore, to learn that a bill is now before the Senate, having passed the House, providing for lodging in the Department of Labor responsibility for supervision of such labor and employment phases of apprenticeship.

While not entirely familiar with all the terms of the bill in question, I thoroughly endorse it in principle, and write you my views in the hope that they may be of some service to you in deciding your position on this legislation.

Sincerely,

JAMES T. MORIARTY, Commissioner.

FEDERAL SOCIAL SECURITY ACT

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I have also received a letter from the executive secretary of the Massachusetts Unemployment Compensation Commission with respect to taxation of certain instrumentalities of the Government under titles VIII and IX of the Federal Social Security Act, and ask unanimous consent that it be printed in full in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Senate Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS
UNEMPLOYMENT COMPENSATION COMMISSION,
Boston, July 22, 1937.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your attention is respectfully directed to the necessity of legislation relative to taxation of certain instrumentalities of the Government under titles VIII and IX of the Federal Social Security Act.

Under the rulings of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, national banks members of the Federal Reserve System, members of the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporations, and members of the Federal Credit Union are all instrumentalities of the Federal Government. By a ruling of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue it has been held that where a company manages improved real estate as agent for the owner, hires employees on behalf of the owner, and pays employees with the owner's funds the owner is the employer within the meaning of titles VIII and IX of the Federal Social Security Act. Under the provisions of chapter 151A employers who are subject to the Federal Social Security Act are subject to the Massachusetts unemployment compensstion law; consequently, owners of realty held to be employers under titles VIII and IX are employers under the Massachusetts unemployment compensation law. It is necessary for the practical administration of the Massachusetts law for the commission to follow the rulings of the Internal Revenue Commissioner so long as these are in force and effect.

The commission has submitted to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue two questions:

1. Whether an instrumentality of the Government which owns real estate used exclusively in connection with its banking business and which supervises, pays, and discharges employees is an employer under title IX.

2. Whether instrumentalities which employ agents under a typical agency contract to manage property owned by the instrumentalities, said property not being used in the banking business, are employers under title IX.

The Commissioner has held in both cases that where the relationship of employer and employee exists, as is generally the case, between the instrumentality of the Government and the individual rendering services in connection with the property, such individual is an employee of the Government instrumentality, and his services are excepted under the provisions of titles VIII and IX of the Federal Social Security Act.

The result is this: Instrumentalities of the Government, of which there are several hundred, including national banks members of the Federal Reserve System, cooperative banks, etc., in the Commonwealth pay no excise tax and are not subject to contributions under the Massachusetts law and under the rules of the commission. These instrumentalities have acquired in recent years, in consequence of the depression and other causes, an amount of improved realty unprecedented in the history of the Commonwealth.

Under title VIII, in 1937 the employees pay a Federal tax of 1 percent and the employers pay a tax of 1 percent. Under title IX and under the Massachusetts law, in 1937 the employers pay a Federal tax and a State contribution amounting to 2 percent; under the Massachusetts law, in 1937 the employees pay a State contribution of 1 percent. There is at the present time a differential of 5 percent on the total pay roll against the private owner of real estate, which differential will steadily increase until, in time, it will amount to a total of approximately 10 percent.

If the Federal Social Security Act is not amended as to the instrumentalities of the Government we shall experience a situation in which private owners of realty will seek the opportunity, and in many instances will be forced, to throw the ownership of improved realty over to instrumentalities of the Government. The continuance of the law on the books in its present form will, in a brief period of time, practically eliminate the ownership of improved realty from private ownership. The illustration given as to ownership of improved realty by Government instrumentalities may, under present operation of the law, be experienced by private employing units in other fields of activity.

The need of legislation to correct the above situation is urgent.

Respectfully yours,

MASSACHUSETTS UNEMPLOYMENT COMPENSATION COMMISSION,
By LAURENCE P. HARRINGTON, Executive Secretary.

REORGANIZATION OF FEDERAL JUDICIARY—LETTER FROM PATRICK HOGAN

[Mr. MINTON asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a letter addressed to him by Patrick Hogan, of Columbus, Ind., with reference to the proposed reorganization of the Federal judiciary, which appears in the Appendix.]

CONSIDERATION OF JUDICIAL PROCEDURE BILL BY JUDICIARY COMMITTEE

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I do not know that I am in order, but I should like to make a statement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. By unanimous consent, the Senator from Arizona may proceed. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, it will be remembered that on July 22 the Senate recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary Senate bill 1392, proposing to reorganize the judicial branch of the Government, and the Senate, as it had a right to do, instructed its Committee on the Judiciary to report another bill within 10 days.

I take pleasure in advising the Senate and the country that a meeting of that committee was called the next day. A subcommittee of eight Senators, composed of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] as chairman, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. MCGILL], the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] was appointed. Within 24 hours after that order of the Senate, that subcommittee addressed itself, with assiduity and ability, to the subject of perfecting a so-called compromise bill strictly within the agenda or program announced and in accordance with the instructions given by the Senate to the Committee on the Judiciary. The members of that subcommittee have requested me, as chairman of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, to convene that committee tomorrow morning at 10:30 o'clock, which will be done.

Although I do not wish to attempt to prophesy, I am of opinion that the bill which will be reported to the Senate will receive the approval of practically all the Senators. Unanimity is, perhaps, impossible with such a subject matter.

I ought further to say that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], who is a member of the subcommittee, brought to our attention, as, indeed, he has done before, the need for some correction of the glaring abuses that have been perpetrated in connection with unnecessary and improvident receiverships and bankruptcy proceedings. The subcommittee considered that subject, although the subject was not upon the agenda which the Senate instructed the committee to consider. Therefore any one Senator could, by his objection, for all practical purposes, prevent the incorporation into the new or compromise bill of any legislation as to bankruptcies or receiverships, even though we are all eager to correct this undesirable situation as to receiverships, which is a disgrace to those of our Federal judiciary who have assisted in perpetuating it. So it does not seem to me possible at this time to embody in the compromise bill legislation as to receiverships and bankruptcy, much as we should like to do so.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. CONNALLY. With all due respect to the able Senator from Arizona, it is not exactly a "compromise" bill. It is simply a bill to carry out the instructions of the Senate, confined to particular matters.

Mr. ASHURST. No, Mr. President; it is not a "compromise" bill. The word was unfortunate.

Mr. CONNALLY. In fact, I do not believe the bill will compromise anybody! [Laughter.]

Mr. ASHURST. It will not.

Mr. President, in conclusion, allow me to say that for some time I served as chairman of the special committee to investigate receivership and bankruptcy proceedings, but owing to the pressure of my duties as chairman of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, I resigned the chairmanship of and membership on that special committee. I was succeeded as such chairman by the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO], who addressed himself to that subject with much ability and diligence. I give the Senate the assurance that not only the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], but also the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO] and the members of his special committee, as well, have given that subject, which is a difficult one, their best attention.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point a copy of the report of the Special Committee to Investigate Receivership and Bankruptcy Proceedings and the Appointment of Receivers and Trustees, which report was submitted to the Senate on February 26, 1934, by Senators Ashurst, McAdoo, Van Nuys, Herbert, and Austin.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Pursuant to Senate Resolution No. 78 of the Seventy-third Congress, your special committee convened at Los Angeles, Calif., on Monday, October 30, 1933, and, with the exception of Saturdays and Sundays, continued in session there through Thursday, November 16, 1933. Thereafter, on November 20, the committee met in San Francisco, Calif., and sat in that city 3 days until the close of the hearings, on November 22, 1933. This report is upon the evidence so far taken.

There are two Federal district courts in California—the northern, with its headquarters at San Francisco; and the southern, with headquarters at Los Angeles. Three United States district judges sit at San Francisco and four at Los Angeles. San Francisco has two referees in bankruptcy; Oakland, one; and Los Angeles, four. No receivership or bankrupt estate whose principal business was located outside of these three cities was considered.

The committee heard several of the Federal judges, most of the referees in bankruptcy, many lawyers engaged in receivership and bankruptcy practice, a number of equity receivers, some trustees in bankruptcy, and other witnesses.

EQUITY RECEIVERSHIPS

Two hundred and seventy equity receiverships were examined by your committee. They were all cases arising during the period of approximately 3 years next preceding the time when the hearings began. With few exceptions they were of the "consent" type, brought into being by the managements of the corporations. For the most part, creditors had no voice in the appointment of receivers and were accorded little, if any, consideration after their appointment. In order to create diversity of citizenship and bring some of the cases within the jurisdiction of the Federal courts, fictitious nonresident creditors were brought into being, and thus pseudo jurisdiction was had.

Coincident with the agreement of interested parties for a receiver, attorneys were selected to file the bill and the answer, and usually all the papers in the case were drawn before the presentation of the petition for receivership to the judge, such presentation being made invariably in chambers. Once a determination to have a receiver was reached, the receiver selected, and his attorney agreed upon, the court was merely asked to give the arrangement the stamp of judicial approval by affixing his signature to the documents presented to him. In no case brought to our attention was this program upset. Immediately the appointment of of receiver was had, then upon the application of the attorney for the petitioners, the judge invariably approved as the attorneys for the receiver those who had participated in the arrangements for the receivership. In many important cases these proceedings resulted in the continued control of that management under which the corporation had been brought to ruin, and afforded protection, if not relief, from improvident contracts theretofore entered into by such managment.

In the bills in equity praying for the appointment of receivers for the period examined, the value of the assets of the companies for which receivers were appointed, was alleged to amount to $473,313,877.39, and the debts were $161,051,114.11. The recklessness with which the assets were alleged in the bills of complaint, and the total disregard of any reasonable scale of values set up on the books of the companies at the time of the application for the appointment of receivers, are shown in the final reports of those officials of the court where they are given a book value of $199,977,648.13—a decrease of $279,336,229.26, or 59 percent in process of receivership, revealing either an utter contempt for the truth of the allegations set out in the petitions, which were verified under oath, an attempt to prove solvency in order to secure the appointment of receivers, or wasteful and incompetent management. The evidence adduced does not favor one of those theories of decline over the other. It showed them all to exist in approximately equal degree.

In the cases which we examined the secured obligations amounted to $121,898,368.49. Total general claims amounted to $214,653,646.26. Secured obligations and general claims together totaled $336,552,014.75, against which there were assets as shown in the final reports submitted for our consideration having a book value of $199,977,646.13, or about 58 percent of the secured and general claims, thus showing a condition of absolute insolvency justifying, if not requiring, immediate liquidation to avoid the additional and unnecessary dissipation of a large part of those assets in the receivership proceedings.

The operating loss of the receiverships examined amounted to $12,992,000.21. In many cases receivers who appeared before our committee to testify contended that there had been an operating profit, but no evidence was offered to prove that any receiver considered there had been a profit for income-tax purposes, or that any such tax was ever paid.

The total general claims approved for the period under inquiry amounted to $74,582,670.09. Total dividends to creditors, both secured and unsecured, amounted to 8.46 percent of their aggregate claims. The general creditors received 6.17 percent of the total of their claims.

Purely administrative expenses, including the fees of receivers, attorneys, auditors, and appraisers, totaled $4,494,622.42. These expenses account for 34 percent of the operating loss of $12,992,000.21. The total amount paid general creditors in all these cases together was $4,664,153.34. For every dollar that was paid to a general creditor 96 cents was paid in fees. In the case of the receiverships arising before one of the Federal judges, the sum of $4.97½ was paid in fees for every dollar paid to general creditors.

Secured creditors whose claims aggregated $121,898,368.49 received 7.1 percent of their claims in the way of dividends. Strictly speaking, secured claims are not involved in a receivership proceeding, except that the proceeding usually operates as a permanent brake to all movements looking toward their collection and settlement.

The above are the facts disclosed from an examination of 207 receiverships for the period named. During the last 5 years there have been altogether 283 receivership proceedings brought in the two districts of California. With the exception of 1 of some magnitude and 5 minor ones, the 207 cases examined all originated subsequent to January 1, 1930.

The statutes of many of the States prohibit the conveyance by the board of directors of all the property rights and franchises of a corporation without the consent of two thirds of the stockholders. The appointment of receivers, however, at any rate in the manner in which it has been done in the Federal courts of the State of California, has been tantamount to a transfer of all of the property of the corporations involved, including their franchises and their right to do business, and in legal effect has brought about their dissolution. Under State laws this cannot be done without the consent of two thirds of the stockholders. Under the laws of some States this consent is not required, it is true, but in those cases such a provision is made a part of the articles of incorporation.

We found in the cases which we examined that the corporations in receivership had first lien liabilities consisting largely of first mortgage bonds in the amount of $121,898,368.49. The general form of the mortgages given as security for those bonds provide that in the event of a default in the payment of interest or of sinking fund, or upon the appointment of a receiver for the corporation, foreclosure proceedings could be had. The bonds were largely held by investors of moderate means. In some instances life savings were invested in them.

The conditions of the indentures securing these bonds justified the owners of them in believing that in the event of a default, a recovery of the principal could be had through foreclosure proceedings, and the sale of the property held as security. Through receivership proceedings, however, these secured creditors are prevented from a recovery to which they are entitled, through interminable delays and the continuance of receiverships. In no case coming under our observation did a court permit a bond issue to be foreclosed and the property sold for the benefit of the bondholders. The bondholders had to stand by and see the properties which they thought were held as security for the payment of their bonds, shrink to the vanishing point under the wasteful, inefficient, and protracted management of receivers. All efforts to sequester the property for the benefit of the bondholders were restrained under the "general equity powers" of the Federal courts by the application of blanket injunctions.

True, there were some foreclosures by way of sale of all of the property of the receivership estates. In the few cases in which this was done it was resorted to for the purpose of coercing nonconsenting creditors into a reorganization. The results of reorganization have been universally disappointing. The largest one has gone back into receivership. The next largest is, after 2 years, still striving to pay the fees of the attorneys for the receiver of the old corporation which were made a lien on the new corporation's property by order of the judge, though the new corporation was never a party to the receivership action.

The first great failure of recent times in California occurred in May 1927. It involved the affairs of the Julian Petroleum Co. A receiver was appointed for the concern in the Federal court. This failure was brought about by a tremendous overissue of stock, said to amount to $51,000,000. Under the law of California then in force, the holders of this spurious stock could make claim against the corporation for the amount paid for the securities. They also had the right to sue the holders of the valid outstanding stock of the corporation under an unlimited stockholders liability, in the proportion of the number of shares held. Since receivership proceedings were had, this corporation has undergone a reorganization and has again been petitioned into receivership, where it remains at the present time. No creditor, secured or unsecured, has ever been paid a dollar.

The exhorbitant fees paid to the receivers and their attorneys in this case appear to have the standard for those that were allowed in cases which followed. The receivers were allowed compensation of $210,000 for a period of 18 months, and their attorneys received the sum of $178,250 for their services. Whether or not these services have been of benefit either to the corporation or to its creditors, the fact remains that the creditors received not 1 cent by way of dividends, and the reorganized corporation is itself now in the custody of receivers appointed by the courts.

The Supreme Court of the United States, in a recent decision (Shapiro v. Wilgus, 387 U. S. 348), held that the appointment of receivers by the Federal courts must conform to the public policy of the State in which the appointment is made. It might well be that the situation as it was disclosed to us in our investigation in the State of California could be solved there by an act of Congress which would prohibit a Federal court from appointing a receiver in equity except where the laws of the State would permit an appointment in the State court.

The Federal courts in California have ignored the force and effect of the decision in Shapiro v. Wilgus. They have appointed receivers for all classes of corporations, including purely State organizations, such as building and loan associations, for which, in California, a complete scheme of liquidation is provided by statute.

Under California law it is provided that a building and loan association of that State, in the event of insolvency, shall be liquidated under the direction of the State building and loan commissioner, who may employ deputies as liquidating agents and fix their compensation at not to exceed $8 per day. This law also provides that the attorney general of the State shall render all the legal services required without any compensation other than his usual salary. This statute of the State of California has been absolutely ignored, and the Federal courts there have appointed receivers for a number of building and loan associations. In one case the fees allowed to one receiver amounted to $40,000 and to his attorneys $125,000. In the case of Bank v. Hawkins (C. C. A., 5th Cir., 42 Fed. (2d) 209) it was held that a Federal court has no jurisdiction to appoint a receiver for such an organization. It was claimed in the case of the Guaranty Building & Loan Association that the lack of jurisdiction was supplied by consent, but such consent in the large majority of cases is found to have been given without ostensible authority and always without legal right. It follows then that the Federal courts in the State of California have failed to follow the rule laid down in Bank v. Hawkins, supra.

Most of the receiverships into which we made inquiry were found to have been inefficiently operated. The receivers were, for the most part, inexperienced. In some cases, attorneys without executive training or any considerable knowledge of business were appointed receivers, and the effect was nothing more than the imposition of a highly expensive superstructure upon the business.

There is no Federal statute or rule of the Supreme Court of the United States affecting the appointment of receivers in equity. Such receivers have been appointed in the two districts in California, ostensibly for the conservation of estates having an aggregate book value of more than half a billion dollars, and they have been administered under the direction of the Federal courts in pursuance of that vague and uncertain authority called the "general equity powers." Prior to the time of our hearings there were no rules in the United States district courts in southern California regulating either the appointment of receivers or the management of estates. Each judge administered the receiverships coming before him in his own discretion by the exercise of his "general equity powers." In one case (Richfield) where such discretion was exercised and the receivership continued over a period of 2 years and 8 months (and which still continues) no creditor, secured or otherwise, received any part of his claim. The book value of the assets showed a shrinkage during that period from $130,000,000 to $41,949,009.14. A subsequent appraisal made for foreclosure purposes disclosed assets of $23,821,000, against which there is a first-mortgage bond issue of $35,000,000, in addition to which there is an accumulation of interest amounting to more than $6,000,000. In the 2 years and 8 months of this receivership the receiver incurred an operating loss of $10,594,210.38. In the meantime, there was paid on account as fees to the receiver, his attorneys, auditors, and appraisers the huge sum of approximately $1,500,000.

In the consideration of these receiverships the judges of the Federal courts in those cases which we have examined appear to have disregarded the principles laid down by the Supreme Court and the circuit court of appeals in the matter of the limitation of jurisdiction as well as the allowance of fees. Their disposition of the cases has in practically all instances been based upon consent agreements of attorneys for the receivers and the parties to the action who were not real parties, except through the interposition of legal fiction.

We are not unmindful of the possible disturbing influence upon business recovery of the operation of corporations in receivership. Under the protecting arm of the courts, receivers are not amenable to any cooperative plan and are free from all restraints imposed upon competitors. A business in receivership is not under obligation to pay any fixed charges on its invested capital, including the interest upon any bonded indebtedness, and thus it is in a position to take unfair advantage of others engaged in similar lines of business.

The theory of receiverships is that they will enable a business temporarily embarrassed to recover to such an extent that the entire proceedings will result beneficially to the owners of the concern placed in the custody of the court, as well as to those having claims against it. Like bankruptcy, it voids preferences at least temporarily as between persons who hold claims. It is always possible that during the process of receivership a composition may be brought about with the creditors and then the business may be permitted to continue on its way. In practically all the cases which we examined in the Federal jurisdictions in California this theory amounts to nothing but a hope which we believe will be long deferred. At any rate, such a hope has not been realized. In bankruptcy, on the other hand, while compositions are possible, the usual result is the winding up of the business of the bankrupt and the liquidation of its affairs. Seldom in those cases is there ever a rehabilitation.

If we are to continue the practice of appointing receivers in the Federal courts and placing about concerns the protecting arms of the injunctive process, then it is our conclusion that the proceedings should be surrounded by proper safeguards, sufficient, at any rate, to prevent a recurrence of the abuses which have come to our attention.

In the course of our investigation most of the judges in the Federal courts in California voluntarily appeared before us and afforded us the benefit of their experience and observations in the conduct of receivership proceedings. One of them recommended what he admitted might be considered rather a radical change. He would restrict by act of Congress the jurisdiction of the Federal courts. He would provide by a uniform rule for a schedule of fees to be paid to receivers. He suggested that one corrective would be by affording relief to the Federal courts in the State of California, which, he stated, are overloaded. These receiverships, Judge James said, impose a tremendous amount of work, and then he concluded (p. 137, hearings):

"Think of the judge being placed in the position of a business manager for all the diversified businesses that come in here of varied kinds. It is impossible to gain comprehension of the real inside of that business as it goes along. No human being can do it. The receivers have to be relied upon. We try to see that they are at least honest, straight men in the first place. Then their qualifications. They may work out successfully and they may not. One receiver may be a better man alongside of another, and yet make a failure, while the other man may make a success."

Judge Hollzer testified to the same effect, saying (p. 439, hearings):

"I knew this much, that our court was not equipped to keep track of receiverships, either this one or any other; we have no experts to assist us; we have no investigators who go around finding out what is happening within a receivership; we are in no position to supervise the management, if you please, of any business organization."

It is our conception of the duties of a judge who grants a petition for the appointment of a receiver to ascertain by whatever means at his disposal—and they are many—the condition of the business the conduct of which he is about to assume and supervise, its nature, if possible the cause of its failure to prosper, and whether, in his judgment, one can reasonably anticipate that receivership proceedings will be beneficial both to the owners of, and those who have legitimate claims against the concern. Manifestly, to do this intelligently, the judge must do more than listen to what, in the cases we have examined, at least, were the observations of men wholly unfamiliar with the conditions which then obtained, or, on the other hand, of suppliants less regardful of the interests of others than of their own.

Our view is that in such proceedings the court might well say, in substance, to those who come before them:

"The court is wholly unfamiliar with the details of this business. The court does not feel justified in taking the action you desire taken in the absence of a disclosure of all the facts. A temporary order may be entered for, say, 10 days, but you must at the expiration of that time be prepared to outline in detail the status of your affairs, the causes which brought about its condition, the remedy you desire to apply, and the means at your disposal for doing what you propose, and how much it will cost."

With the facts adduced in this way and to this extent, the court would then be in position to give directions for future management, at least with some knowledge of the problems to be solved, and some estimate of the probable outcome of the undertaking. At any rate, we venture to say that any court would, under such circumstances, hesitate to command the doing of what, to our minds, has resulted so disastrously to the interests of so many citizens who, justifiably or otherwise, have been led to place their confidence in the wisdom, the prudence, and the good sense of the judges of our courts.

Your committee is not impressed by the attitude of the judges when they say they are not equipped to handle such matters as receiverships. They have the power to supervise. The appointment of receivers is one of their inherent functions. To admit that they cannot meet the exigencies of such proceedings is, to our minds, tantamount to an admission of inability to function at all. One familiar with court procedure and with the trial of cases cannot conceive of a situation where a judge might be heard to say to litigants that the time at the disposal of the court cannot admit of a full and fair hearing of the issues involved, and then proceed to make findings upon a mere ex-parte statement. Yet that is about what, in the opinion of your committee, has been the course of action in most of the receivership cases we have examined.

Unfortunate as this experience has been, and however much the course of action of the courts in handling receiverships has fallen below our conception of the accepted standards of jurisprudence, it is yet less reprehensible than has been that conduct of a bankruptcy proceeding brought to our notice in the course of our investigation, and to which reference is made elsewhere in this report.

As we review in perspective the tortuous course of that proceeding, we are led to pause and to wonder how long a system of laws so administered can endure or continue to have or to merit the confidence of the people.

Several of the judges testified that certain rules had been adopted a short time previous to the date of our investigation, and which were to go into effect on the day following the date of the appearance of the judge before your committee. Briefly, those rules provide that no receiver shall be appointed without notice to all known creditors; that an order to show cause shall issue, returnable on the first law date after 20 days of the issuance of the order to show cause. The rules further provide for notice to creditors and other interested parties upon petitions for allowances to be made to receivers and for counsel fees and expenses.

All the judges who appeared before your committee were interrogated upon these points and they all agreed that the rules adopted for their guidance would be salutary. However, those rules, as we analyze them, do not go to the root of the difficulty. To our minds, there is much more to the problem than to adopt and follow mere rules of procedure. We realize that schedules of fees may not be adhered to in every case, that discretion might be reposed in the judge who is called upon to fix the compensation of receivers and the fees of counsel, and others performing duties in connection with receiverships. But we submit that the responsibility rests upon the judges and upon no one else, and it does not relieve the judges of that responsibility merely to consider the testimony of so-called experts who are brought before them, who, for the most part, are not disinterested, and who, in our judgment, have been willing to recommend the payment of fees wholly out of reason, compared with the services that have been rendered. It is not a sufficient excuse for those judges to say that they have not the time to familiarize themselves with the nature of the work involved in any particular case, to know about the business which has been transacted by a concern in receivership, to visualize the problems that have been met and which receivers and their counsel have endeavored to solve; and then divest themselves of responsibility on the testimony of persons called on behalf of those seeking remuneration.

To our minds, the judges should make it clear to those citizens of whatever rank in life, who are considered as competent to become receivers, and hence officers of the court, that theirs is a public duty and that there are other than money compensations in the performance of that duty. It is not unlike in principle to jury service—a duty which every citizen has to perform when called upon to do so. The Federal Government and the governments of every State impose that duty upon their citizens and fix their compensation at a very moderate figure, much less in most instances, than the men who are called would be willing to accept in compensation for their services in everyday life. But there is some compensation in performing the duties of citizenship, aside from the money that may be received; and public-spirited citizens realize that is so, and willingly devote their time and their best thought and most mature judgment to the consideration of cases arising between person and person, without thought of money compensation. Such an attitude of mind on the part of those who assume the obligations of a receiver appointed by a court, whether Federal or State, thus showing that our judicial tribunals repose implicit confidence in them, since they are made officers of the court, would merit and receive the commendation of their fellow citizens.

We regret to report that in our investigation of the cases in the courts of California, we have observed little, if any, such disposition on the part of those charged with receivership functions, or on the part of those acting as counsel for receivers.

BANKRUPTCY

In the course of our investigations in California some of the evils attendant upon proceedings in bankruptcy were brought to our attention. In the main, they were not such as to lead to the conclusion that they are unique in their nature, though it may be said they are unusual in their effects, to say the least.

As an example, one case which came to our notice appears to have been instituted to relieve the corporation involved, by what may be described as unconscionable means, from obligations the validity of which could not be questioned, and the results of which effectively destroyed and made impossible of enforcement the rights of a large group of citizens. Lessors looked on helplessly and saw their obligations made void and of no effect. Holders of preferred stock were denied that security of investment which they had been led to believe they had safeguarded and made to suffer losses which they could ill afford to bear. In fact, in some instances it meant the loss of their entire life savings. These proceedings which brought about such results, deplorable in themselves, are yet more to be criticized than deplored, since they were instituted by men who were unscrupulous, aided by attorneys who, to our minds, had little, if any, regard for their obligations of citizenship, much less for the canons of legal ethics, and were prosecuted with the full knowledge and at least the tacit acquiescence of the judge whose duty it was to pass judgment upon the merits of the objects sought to be attained.

In the particular case we have in mind, through the device of holding companies, by the organization of subsidiary corporations which functioned throughout the proceedings and thus maintained the separate entities as going concerns, and finally by the forced sale of the bankrupt estate in its entirety, the former owners have again come into possession of all the assets of which they divested themselves in the bankruptcy court, though relieved of real-estate leases which the interests formerly in control considered onerous or disadvantageous, and freed of the obligation of accounting to the holders of six millions of dollars of their preferred stock which has literally been wiped out.

The cost of bankruptcy proceedings at least in those cases which we examined, all of which arose in California, was brought forcefully to our attention. From the examination made thus far, we are convinced the expense with which estates are burdened cannot be justified, since it amounts virtually to a confiscation of the rights of creditors.

In the counties of Los Angeles and San Francisco for the period of 2 years from July 1, 1931, to July 1, 1933, for example, the total of claims allowed in bankruptcy cases considered was $47,468,846.65; trustees received $10,882,895.14 and paid to creditors $6,134,149.76. The balance, or $4,748,745.38, or 43 percent of all receipts, was disbursed for expenses of administration, including fees of referees, trustees, and attorneys.

As a result of the fee and commission system in effect in the bankruptcy courts, instances were brought to our attention where the income of referees exceeded the salary of judges of the United States district courts. In San Francisco the total fees of one referee amounted to more than $12,000 for 1 year; in Los Angeles they rose to as much as $30,000, or three times the salary of a United States district judge.

In some cases in bankruptcy not only have the referees passed upon the validity of claims of creditors, but in cases of involuntrary bankruptcy they have acted as masters to determine whether petitions should be granted, thus passing upon matters in the outcome of which they themselves had a pecuniary interest.

In the consideration of the cases which came under our observation we were impressed by the relatively enormous cost involved in receivership and bankruptcy cases.

A comparison will illustrate more forcefully the existing situation.

The total fees and expenses paid on account of such proceedings in the three cities in California for a period of 2½ years were $9,243,407.

As compared with this total, the salaries paid to the President of the United States, the Vice President, the 10 members of the Cabinet, the 96 Senators, the 9 members of the Supreme Court, the 37 justices of the circuit courts of appeal, and the 145 justices of the district courts of the United States, for the like period amounted in the aggregate to $7,782,500, or but 84 percent of the amount disbursed on account of receiverships and bankruptcy fees in those three cities of the United States.

CONCLUSIONS

To disregard the conditions existing elsewhere, and about which we are not informed, might work serious injustice if drastic remdies were to be applied, as we believe we would be justified in proposing from what we have already learned.

We believe that your committee should pursue its investigations into conditions in other parts of the country, as authorized by Senate Resolution 78, under which we are acting, and which specifically authorizes and directs your committee "to make investigation of the administration of receivership and bankruptcy proceedings in the courts of the United States." When these investigations shall have been concluded a final report of our findings will be submitted, together with recommendations for such modifications of existing law and practice as the entire survey may justify.

Respectfully submitted.

FEBRUARY 26, 1934.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I was interested in the statement of the Senator from Arizona with reference to the situation under which any Senator could object to any matter being considered which was not in the so-called agenda. It was not my understanding that the matter was recommitted to the Judiciary Committee under the unanimous-consent rule. I am wondering if there is not some misconception on the part of the Senator from Arizona in that respect.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator from Washington is correct, as usual. When I spoke of one objection keeping out of the new bill any particular matter, I had reference to the "common law" of the Senate and not to any specific agreement. It was understood in the Committee on the Judiciary that any one member of that committee who objected to the consideration of new matter, not within the agenda, might offer his objection and the objection would be valid and would be supported by his fellow members of the committee. For all practical purposes, the only subject which the new bill could embrace would be that comprehended within the so-called agenda which was approved at the time of the agreement.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The Senator was referring merely to the Committee on the Judiciary and not to the Senate?

Mr. ASHURST. That is correct.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I desire to address myself to the statement of the Senator from Arizona. If the able Senator, chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, meant to leave the impression that there is any understanding of this body anywhere that a certain set of gentlemen, Members of the Senate, can make an agreement limiting subjects which may be incorporated in a bill relating to the judiciary, and that such agreement is to forego or obstruct any Senator from making any allusion to any other subject or introducing any subject matter apart from that which is in the bill, I cannot give that understanding my approval.

I wish to have the able Senator understand, when he says he feels that what will come out of the committee will meet the approval of the Senate, that it will not meet my approval. If what I read in the press is correct as to the purported contents of the bill, I am opposed to such. If the newspaper statements be correct, the bill will not meet with my approval. I desire the Senator now to understand my position, lest my silence might mislead him.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Illinois for his statement. When I tell him that his able colleague the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH] has cooperated as a member of the subcommittee, and, with his learning and experience, has approved the new bill, I believe the senior Senator from Illinois will withdraw any objection he may have.

Mr. LEWIS. Not because my colleague may have approved it. Much as I may respect my colleague and his judgment, I must let the judgment of JAMES HAMILTON LEWIS, commissioned agent from the State of Illinois, guide me. [Laughter.]

Mr. ASHURST. The whole country, indeed, the whole world, has learned to respect not only the brilliancy but also the judgment of the learned senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS]. Brilliant men, as a rule, are not men of judgment, but the brilliancy of the Senator from Illinois is eclipsed only by the judgment he possesses and has exercised for the good of his country in the House and the Senate during the last 30 years. In fact, one may not easily have brilliancy and at the same time have good judgment, but the able Senator from Illinois is an exception to that rule.

Mr. LEWIS. It is perfectly clear the Senator from Arizona is showing excellent judgment and great brilliancy in his immediate observations as to me. [Laughter.]

WORK OF THE SESSION

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the press this morning carried a very interesting statement issued by the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], who is a powerful and influential force in the present administration, to the effect that we are to have a rather ambitious program during the remaining days of this session of the Congress. I doubt not that he spoke the voice of the President.

Accompanying the President with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] was the able Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], our new leader. I am very anxious to know about this situation. I shall be distressed to learn that we are to follow the leadership of the Senator from Wisconsin and remain much longer in session. I have felt, since the capitulation which occurred last week under the management of our able Vice President, that we would probably adjourn soon, at any rate by the 5th of August. I see no reason to remain longer in session. Whether victor or vanquished, neither side is able to perform services at this session for physical reasons and on account of the emotional state of mind which has kept us here since February 6 until this time.

There are several bills which may be called major in character which should go over until the next session of Congress. I want to make my reservation for home; indeed I expect to do so. I think we are all going to be humanitarian toward each other. In expressing the view that we might conclude our session, which I not only hope but believe could be done by the middle or latter part of next week, I should like to have an expression from the able Senator from Kentucky, our new majority leader, in regard to the statement made by the Senator from Wisconsin after leaving the President on his yacht last evening.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have nothing to say concerning the statement issued by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] in the morning newspapers, except to say that in that statement he said he was speaking for himself alone and for nobody else. I assume that to be true.

With respect to the matter of final adjournment, I recognize the desire of many Members of both Houses to adjourn at the earliest possible date consistent with the performance of our duty. The question of the program for the remainder of the session, of course, has to be canvassed not only by those responsible in this body, but also by those responsible in the other body, in cooperation, of course, with the President, in undertaking to work out the whole matter. Conversations on that subject are in progress, I will say to my friend from Oregon. I am not now prepared to make any definite statement with reference to it, but hope to do so within the next few days.

Further than that, I do not feel at liberty to speak at this time.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, before this matter is closed I hope, when the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] is considering the question of the program to be adopted before we adjourn, he will not overlook the question of sugar legislation. The Senator will recall that early in the session the President sent a message to Congress in which he stated that the Jones-Costigan Act had worked satisfactorily and had been helpful, and that he favored a reenactment of that act.

The sugar-beet growers accepted the President's statement as indicating with some degree of certainty what the legislation would be on that subject at this session, and they proceeded to the planting and preparing of their crops upon the basis that the present law would be reenacted. A bill looking to that end has now been reported to the House from the House Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. They have been unable thus far to secure a rule for the consideration of the measure.

Let me suggest to the Senator from Kentucky that it is, in my opinion, within the power of the administration to see that that legislation is enacted. There is no opposition to it upon the part of the producers or those most interested. They are satisfied with the measure proposed in the message of the President, and there is no opposition in Congress. The opposition comes from sources over which the administration is supposed to have some influence.

If that measure is not passed, due to the fact that the Jones-Costigan Act expires on the 31st of December 1937, great loss and great injury will result to the sugar-beet growers of the United States, not only because of the fact that they will be injured without any exceptional circumstances but, owing to the fact of the message being sent in and their action upon it, their loss would be much greater than it would have been under other circumstances. So I trust the Senator from Kentucky, in considering matters of legislation, the bills which are to be considered, and especially the matter of aid to the agricultural interests of the United States, will remember that we need some specific legislation of this kind much more than we need this "every empty granary" proposal that is being talked about. I trust the Senator will bear that in mind when he is considering the program.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho yield to me?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. The Finance Committee of the Senate has taken no steps with reference to sugar legislation, because a tax feature is involved. I may say to the Senator, as I have already advised others who are interested in sugar legislation—and I know of nothing that is more important to the sugar producers both in the West and in Louisiana and in Florida—that just as soon as the House of Representatives shall have passed legislation on this subject, the Committee on Finance will begin hearings, or will have no hearings unless they are demanded, and will expedite the measure in every possible way, and report it to the Senate, and try to have it enacted into law. I may say further that it seems to me that if the House should fail to act, a joint resolution ought to be passed extending the law for at least 1 year, so that it will be one of the first matters to be taken up at the next session of Congress.

Mr. BORAH. I greatly appreciate what the Senator has to say. I shall rely on his statement.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator realizes how impossible it is for the Senate to have a program with reference to a bill that must originate in the House of Representatives, and that has not as yet passed that body, but I have today talked with Members of this body as well as the other with reference to the matter. I am in sympathy with the desire to secure action upon it, and I am very hopeful that an accommodation may be arrived at which will result in action on that proposed legislation before we shall adjourn.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, of course, the Senate itself cannot outline a program where the House is concerned, but I assume that in making up a program the leaders of the House will be in consultation with the leaders of the Senate. I assume both Houses will seek to reach an agreement on a program on the bills to be considered. I earnestly urge that sugar legislation be included.

LIMITATION OF THE SIZE OF TRAINS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 69) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce", approved February 4, 1887, as amended and supplemented, by limiting freight or other trains to 70 cars.

Mr. McCARRAN obtained the floor.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. I observe that the pending bill is to go into effect after July 1, 1937. In common with the other Members of the Senate, I am sure none of us want to lay an undue burden upon any industry in this country. Recently Congress passed what is known as the railroad retirement bill, which imposes a tax on the railroads as well as on the employees of the railroads. They will have to bear that tax. I think, from the reports I have seen, that the railroads are beginning to "come back." I believe, however, that we ought not to do too much at one time, but ought gradually to play the matter along.

I was wondering if, instead of making the bill effective July 1, 1937, the Senator wolud not be willing to make it effective July 1, 1938, so as to give the railroads at least an opportunity somewhat to adjust themselves to it. The ultimate result would be the same, and we should have the law upon the statute books.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I will say that if that amendment is offered——

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. McCARRAN. I have yielded to the Senator from Mississippi, and I am about to answer the question which the Senator asked.

Mr. WHITE. Will the Senator yield in order to enable me to ask a question to be answered in connection with the question propounded by the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield for a question.

Mr. WHITE. Of course, the Senator realizes that there have been no hearings on this bill during the present Congress. There were hearings something over 2 years ago upon a different bill. If the effective date of this proposed legislation is to be postponed for a year, why should we not postpone the consideration of the bill itself in order that there may be hearings upon the merits of the matter?

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I will reply to that question by saying that hearings were held on this bill by a different number. The bill on which there were hearings was identical in language in all respects with the bill now before the Senate, excepting the date, as referred to by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]. Hearings were conducted on that bill, together with another bill, by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BROWN]. Hearings were conducted and both bills were considered together. These hearings were printed and extensively published. The entire country, the Senate, and the legislative body at the other end of the Capitol have had an opportunity to study and to understand the entire question.

Together with that——

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield right there?

Mr. McCARRAN. Let me finish the sentence, and then I will yield. Together with that, the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce at that time published a most comprehensive report, which has been before the Senate during all this session.

I yield further to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. WHITE. Will the Senator inform me what other bill was heard at the same time this bill was heard?

Mr. McCARRAN. Senate bill 27 and Senate bill 344.

Mr. WHITE. What is Senate bill 344?

Mr. McCARRAN. Senate bill 344 corresponds to Senate bill 69 of this session; and Senate bill 27 corresponds to Senate bill 1108 of this session.

Mr. WHITE. What is Senate bill 1108 of this session?

Mr. McCARRAN. It provides for a limitation in the number of cars in freight and passenger trains. It goes further than Senate bill 69 in that a passenger train, as I recall, would be limited to 14 cars.

Mr. WHITE. The Senator says this matter was heard by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. McCARRAN. Senate bill 27 was introduced by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. WHITE. I may say that this is the first intimation I have had that a hearing was held on this bill at this session. When I went to the committee room and undertook to obtain copies of the hearings, I was given the hearings of something over 2 years ago, and was told that those were the only hearings on this proposed legislation.

Mr. McCARRAN. I hope the Senator did not understand me to say that hearings were held during this session. What I intended to convey, and hoped I did convey, was that hearings were had on this bill in its present form, except as to the date at which it would become effective; and that bill, which is now Senate bill 69, was then Senate bill 344.

Mr. WHITE. When were the hearings held?

Mr. McCARRAN. They were held from June 4 to June 19, 1935.

Mr. WHITE. That was over 2 years ago.

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. WHITE. And those hearings were on a bill which not only limited the number of cars in a train, but limited the length of the train without relation to the number of cars.

Mr. McCARRAN. I will say to the Senator that that was one of the bills; but Senate bill 344 is the identical bill we now have before us, with the exception of a change in date of effectiveness.

Mr. President, in order that the Senate may have this matter fully and fairly presented, I desire the attention of the Senate while I present it as concisely and as briefly as possible. I assure the Senate that I shall not take up a minute longer than I think is essential to enable the Senate to understand the measure.

At the outset I desire to make myself understood that this is, in my judgment, a beneficial bill for the railroads. In my judgment it is a bill which looks to the promotion of the welfare and upbuilding of the railroad service. When I use the term "railroad service" in this connection I use it in reference to the railroads themselves; and I use that expression as the result of a study made by the Committee on Interstate Commerce of the Senate and from an examination of records furnished to the committee which are a part of the committee hearings.

In the first place, let me lay the picture before the Senate. Today we have what is known under the law as the air brake, essential to every car in freight service traveling between States on the class A railroads. The air brake is a mechanical device, each car being a separate unit unto itself for its operation. The average length of a freight car is 42 feet 6 inches. Between each two cars is slack—a slack action—due to the drawbar extension. Some claim that it is but 7½ inches; but the brotherhoods, the railroad train service men, claim that it is 12 inches, and that contention is not disputed by the Interstate Commerce Commission in any respect. So I am going to take as the basis for my remarks the assumption that there is a 12-inch slack action between every two freight cars in a train on class A roads.

Let us take as a standard a hundred-car train. We have, then, the slack action of 100 feet between the first car and the last car in a hundred-car train. In other words, when the air is applied to the first car, just back of the engine, the last car in the train is still in full motion, and whatever may be the speed of the train, that car is carrying that speed forward, while the first car has received the effect of an immediate application of the air.

Again, the second car receives the application of the air an instant behind, and so on down, until we find that in a hundred-car train there is a difference of some 38½ seconds between the time when the air is applied to stop the forward motion of the first car and when the rear car receives the effect of the air. During that time the rear car is going up on a dead end, so to speak, and whatever may be the speed of the train, the momentum of the rear car is coming up against an impeded car ahead of it.

What is the effect of that? I do not intend to deal at first with the destruction of life and limb which is involved in this subject, but I shall deal with the destruction of property involved, because, as I said at the outset, if the bill can be enacted it will be most beneficial for the railroads themselves. Slack action in railroad trains has resulted in the destruction of property valued at many millions of dollars each year, and that expense has all been borne by the railroads themselves.

Let me inject another thought at this point, lest, perchance, it might be said that I am running counter to the welfare of the railroads. Today the average train of freight cars in America numbers less than 47 cars. The railroads themselves have seen the result of resorting to short trains. In other words, the railroads themselves appreciate that the short train is the economic train, that the short train is the speedy train, that the short train is the train on which property is least likely to be destroyed. When there is a wreck of a freight train, not only is private property in custody destroyed, but the equipment itself is destroyed.

Mr. President, I go back again to the thought which I desire to emphasize, growing out of the hearings, that the average train in freight service in this country numbers 47 cars. So the long train, the train of 150 cars, on which there is such destruction of life and limb and such destruction of property, is the exception and not the rule. If we were endeavoring here so to curtail railroad activity that it would be revolutionary, then, perchance, a valid argument might be made against the bill. But the bill merely seeks to put into law that which the best minds in the study of railroading have already conceded is the best process for the operation of railroads.

Let me say something more, to meet an argument which has been advanced. The railroad is handling the greatest quantum of perishable goods from the west coast to the Middle West and to the East, and handling it most efficiently, is the railroad which has limited its trains to less than 70 cars, and it is today handling the bulk of perishable commodities coming from the west coast, from southern California, and other parts of the west coast to the Middle West and to the East. Why is that? It is because that road has realized that today, in order to compete with bus lines, they must of necessity bring speed into their operations, and a train of less than 70 cars is a train which may go with speed all the way through. In other words, a train of 70 cars passes over a line more promptly, more speedily, more efficiently, than a train of 140 cars. There is less opportunity for breakage, there is less chance of a wreck, there is less opportunity for destruction of property. So those railroads which have looked to an advancement of their own worth in competition with the ever-increasing number of trucks and busses in competition with high-grade Government-aid constructed highways, have seen to it that their trains are curtailed in car number.

Mr. President, if I were to stand here for a week, I could not more tersely or clearly or emphatically place before the Senate the facts behind the bill than they will be found in the report submitted by the Committee on Interstate Commerce. That report deals with cold facts as disclosed before the committee, and if Senators will but give attention to the terse statements which appear therein, those who are favoring the pending bill will indeed be assisted.

Mr. President, I now come to that phase of the bill which has to do with human life as it is engaged in the railroad service. I first tried to bring to the attention of Senators what slack action was in railroad operation. I now desire to bring to their attention the result of slack action.

A train traveling at 45 miles an hour with 140 cars suddenly comes to a dead stop by reason of a broken axle, by reason of a broken wheel, or by reason of the immediate application of the air, we will say. The air is applied to 140 cars ahead of the caboose. Remember that the American Railroad Association in making tests determined that with 100 cars the air took some 38½ seconds to get from the first car to the last; in other words, the application of brakes was retarded in its effect on the last car to the extent of half a minute. If that be true as to 100 cars, what must be true as to 140 cars, what must be true with a train of 200 cars? Must it not be concluded that the slack action which took place in 100 cars has been augmented when it comes to 140 or 150 cars?

The real effect is demonstrated by the fact that men who work in the caboose are killed. They are killed because, without warning, they are catapulted against the sides of their caboose, hurled from one end of it to the other, thrown off trains, maimed, bruised, killed, as disclosed by the records of the railroads and the records of the Interstate Commerce Committee, which held the hearings.

I noticed in the hearings one significant statement which innocently grew into it. A superintendent on a division had it drawn to his attention that one in custody of livestock on a freight train, riding on a caboose, had been injured because of slack action because the train was brought to a sudden unexpected stop. He wrote to his men stating to them that from then on those in custody of stock must be advised to protect themselves against slack action. In other words, that which men employed every day must face every day the public must be warned against. The joke is that the railroads recognize that this condition prevails, that it is ever present, and that their men must be advised of it, but that a shipper should be advised by the men. This is the statement:

All Trainmen, McAlester District:

We recently had an accident where a caretaker with a shipment of stock, riding in the caboose of one of our freight trains, was injured while lying down asleep on the bunk. When the train stopped the slack ran in causing this man to be skidded against the partition, injuring his head. This accident was due to the lack of experience of stock shippers, with reference to what happened to our long trains in stopping and starting, and in the future you will please caution the caretakers of stock the way to ride in your caboose in order that they may not be injured by such occurrences as this.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. Has the Senator ever been in a Pullman car when the train came to a sudden stop, and has he had his head bumped against the top or side of the berth by reason of the sudden stopping of the train?

Mr. McCARRAN. Oh, yes. However, I have never been in a Pullman car when my head was crushed in by reason of a sudden stopping of the train.

Mr. COPELAND. How much less slack would there be than in a train of 70 cars?

Mr. McCARRAN. In a train composed of 10 or 12 cars there would certainly be less than a tenth of the slack action there is in a train of 100 cars.

Mr. COPELAND. Does the Senator mean there is that much difference in ratio?

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes. It would be 10 times greater in a train of 100 cars than in a train of 10 cars.

Mr. COPELAND. Yes; but how much is the difference in the slack action spoken of by the Senator from Nevada in a train of 70 cars as compared with a train of 100 cars? The Senator is contending for a limitation of trains to 70 cars. Would there not be the same slack action and the same danger in almost the same degree in a 70-car train as in a 100-car train?

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, my answer is based on tests made by the American Railroad Association. Some years ago the American Railroad Association, in order to determine the best method of overcoming this slack action, held a series of tests, and a testing rack was set up at Purdue University; but, by reason of the fact that the testing rack did not adequately test all the equipment, it was finally concluded to hold tests on a division affording the greatest opportunity for a diversity of grades. These tests were all witnessed by a representative of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

They selected what is known as the Shasta Division on the Southern Pacific Railroad. That is in northern California and southern Oregon. They selected that division because it had a certain percentage of flat track, a certain percentage of easy grade, and a certain percentage of more precipitous grade.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. SMATHERS. If this bill is written into law, can the Senator from Nevada tell us how many additional employees the railroad companies throughout the Nation will be required to take on in order to provide for the difference in the number of cars?

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I shall answer that question somewhat at length later, and I hope the Senator will bear with me. I wanted to come to a discussion of that phase as I proceeded with my statement. I hope the Senator will permit me to answer it as I proceed with my statement. I wish to answer it from the records if I can.

I now wish to return to my answer to the question propounded by the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND].

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Utah in the chair). Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. I understand that the Senator from Nevada is going to give us a statement as to the additional number of employees that will be required if this bill is enacted into law.

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes.

Mr. OVERTON. Will the Senator also give us an estimate of the additional cost of railroad operation?

Mr. McCARRAN. I will so far as it is possible.

I am now going back to the question asked by the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] as to the effect of the slack action. The Senator will find a statement in the report of the Committee on Interstate Commerce of the Senate concerning tests made on a train of 100 cars, on which were placed a number of dynamometers at various points in the train for the purpose of testing the shock resulting from slack action when a sudden stoppage of the train occurred. When such a stoppage took place, the shock was so great in a number of cases that the dynamometers, which are gauged to register a shock of over 1,000,000 pounds, were unable fully to register the shock. One can appreciate what the shock is when a train of loaded cars is traveling 45 miles an hour, we will say, and the tenth car in the train comes to a sudden stop, and behind it there are 90 cars or 60 cars or 140 cars. As one would anticipate, so great a shock results that the dynamometer, the instrument created for the purpose of registering the shock, cannot record it.

In that test it was determined that the least shock occurred in trains of 50 cars or under. Tests made of trains of 100 or more cars disclosed the inability of present braking facilities adequately and safely to control the train. No tests were made of trains of 70 cars, but the representative of the Interstate Commerce Commission who observed all tests stated that in his judgment the present brakes could probably control a train of 70 cars.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I desire to be fully informed. What would be the reason for the sudden stoppage of the train? Would it be some accident to the air system, or because of the desire of the engineer to stop before going through a crossing somewhere?

Mr. McCARRAN. Any number of conditions may cause a sudden stoppage. The Senator will remember that the air appliances are individual to each car. A broken axle on a car may instantly apply the air to that car. The application of the air may not come from any act on the part of the engineer at all, but the air line may break, and on the car on which the air line breaks immediately the air is applied, and immediately it comes to a dead stop.

Mr. COPELAND. From some defect in the system?

Mr. McCARRAN. That would affect everything behind it. That is one reason for such action. Another reason is that the engineer, having charge of the air on the whole train, may see something ahead of him because of which he must bring about an emergency stop; so he applies the air. That is another reason for applying the air.

Mr. COPELAND. The engineer may do that in order to avoid killing a family in an automobile at the crossing. Is that true?

Mr. McCARRAN. That is true.

Mr. COPELAND. Is it the contention of the Senator that the taking up of the slack, as he has described it, is responsible for a great many accidents to trainmen? Has the Senator statistics to show how many have been injured or killed from that cause?

Mr. McCARRAN. I have statistics covering railroad accidents which I will present to the Senate.

Mr. COPELAND. I shall be very happy to know about that. I have it in mind at a later time, in what I may say, perhaps, to contrast the accidents to trainmen with the thousands of fatalities which take place at grade crossings in the United States.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I continue with the subject, because I desire to enlarge upon the matter opened up by the question of the Senator from New York.

When emergency applications of air take place, whether by reason of application of the air from the engine, or by reason of a breaking of the air line, or by reason of something else mechanical in the train, remember that the men riding in the caboose, where they must ride under the rules, have no knowledge of what is about to occur. The result is that these men are hurled off the train, they are hurled against the stove, they are broken in limb, and frequently some of them are killed. The records are replete with cases of death and injury growing out of this slack action.

Mr. President, it is not to be said, and I am not going to mislead the Senate, that slack action does not to some extent take place in 70-car trains; but it is believed by representatives of the Interstate Commerce Commission that in trains of 70 cars and less there is a minimum of accidents and a minimum of breakage and destruction of property consistent with the most economic movement of goods by rail.

Let me discuss another phase which grows out of the question arising from the question asked by the Senator from New York. We will take the case of a train of 140 cars passing a passenger train, either going in the same direction or in an opposite direction. For some reason or other, either by reason of a break in the air line or other mechanical defect, or by reason of the application of the air from the engine, there is a sudden application of the air. Immediately there is slack action, which may cause a buckling in the freight train, and cars are piled up and thrown across the tracks, and the passenger train is wrecked and destroyed, and passengers are killed as a result. So often do such accidents occur that an order has been issued limiting the application of air in emergency cases where a freight train in passing a passenger train, since it is known that there is always danger that the freight train may buckle and throw the cars across the tracks, with the result of wrecking the passenger train.

A Senator asked whether all this affects the employees. Most assuredly it affects the employees. Thousands of them have been compelled to leave the service because they were no longer capable of serving, being broken of limb and of body. The proof of that, aside from the records of the Interstate Commerce Commission, is found in the fact that the insurance companies which have been established by the railroad brotherhoods as a method of caring for their members year after year are increasingly paying insurance benefits and taking care of those who have been injured and maimed or the families of those killed by reason of slack action on trains.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHAVEZ in the chair). Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. POPE. Does the Senator intend to discuss the matter of the shipment of perishable fruit or vegetables in those regions where such fruits and vegetables are raised? I have received a number of letters and some resolutions from the shippers in my State raising that question.

Mr. McCARRAN. Has the Senator finished his question?

Mr. POPE. Yes. I want to know if the Senator is going to discuss that phase of the matter.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I, too, am interested in the inquiry made by the Senator from Idaho, and I hope I may hear the reply of the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nevada yield to me?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I know the importance of the questions asked by other Senators, but I hope the Senator from Nevada will not be diverted, because I am regarding this matter as one of life and limb, and I hope the Senator from Nevada will be very specific if he has statistics, gleaned from the reports of the Interstate Commerce Commission or any other authoritative body, showing definitely the number of persons who have been killed or injured, due to the taking up of the slack in exceedingly long trains.

I am sure the Senator from Idaho will forgive me if I ask that this particular argument be completed.

Mr. McCARRAN. I will be glad to pursue that point now.

Mr. POPE. That will be agreeable to me, but I wish to be sure that the Senator from Nevada is going to discuss the point raised by me, since it is very important to some of my constituents.

Mr. McCARRAN. I hope the Senator from Idaho will not permit me to forget the question he has raised, and I will be very glad to discuss it later.

Mr. President, in partial reply to the Senator from New York, I desire to read from page 2 of the report of the Interstate Commerce Committee, in which it is stated:

> The Interstate Commerce Commission in its most recent report on railway accidents, Accident Bulletin 104, for the calendar year of 1935, states on page 1 thereof:
> "In the calendar year of 1935 the steam railways reported to the Interstate Commerce Commission 6,551 collisions, derailments, locomotive boiler, and other train accidents. Each of these was of sufficient importance to involve damage to railway property exceeding $150. Of the total number, 6,093 involved no reportable casualties to persons, while in 458 train accidents, 239 persons in the aggregate were killed and 1,056 were injured.
> "In addition to these persons killed or injured in accidents to trains there were 4,650 fatalities and 15,535 injuries connected with the movement of trains, locomotives, or cars without damage to railway property of more than $150. These are called train-service accidents.
> "Compared with the corresponding figures for 1934 the number of train accidents for 1935 increased 8.8 percent. The change was chiefly in the number of derailments, which increased 15.5 percent."
> From official Interstate Commerce Commission reports and from statistics furnished by other reliable sources, we must reach the conclusion that accidents and injuries to employees have been substantially reduced during the period extending from 1922 to 1933. During that decade the railroads achieved a greater degree of safety in operation than ever before, but during the years of 1933, 1934, 1935, and 1936 they have made little if any progress, and the actual number of injuries and deaths suffered by employees on duty increased. However, in the light of above data and in view of the fact that in 1935 railroad employees on duty suffered 6,351 temporary injuries with a resulting loss of 200,088 working days and 221 permanent, though not fatal injuries, it is submitted that there is definitely a vital need for further safety measures in the operation of railroads. One such measure, your committee feels, is this bill. A demand for man-power, an emergency requiring labor or services of men would make the Nation conscious of the tremendous economic loss, both labor and property, it suffers from train accidents, collisions, and derailments. The public is not generally aware of the injuries suffered by railway employees, and this obtains partially because now and for the past few years the supply of railroad labor far exceeds the demand therefor, and partially from the wide publicity given by the railroads to the increased safety of passengers, without mention of the 282 deaths and 6,018 injuries to trainmen on duty resulting from train and train-service accidents in 1935.

Mr. President, in further answer to the inquiry of the Senator from New York, I invite his attention to the last paragraph in the report:

> Improvements in equipment have not kept pace with the increased speed, train length, and tonnage of today. It is important to remember that injuries and deaths caused by railway accidents in 1935 were greater than in 1934, and the Bureau of Statistics of the Interstate Commerce Commission shows that for the year of 1936 there was still another marked increase in the number of trainmen and enginemen so killed and injured. In 1936 there were more than 29 percent trainmen and enginemen killed than in 1935, and paralleling this marked increase in deaths is the more than 31 percent increase in injuries suffered by trainmen and enginemen for the year past.

Mr. President, we find that the Interstate Commerce Commission, to which the pending bill was referred, did not see fit to report against the bill, but very cautiously said that it was a matter as to which it was for Congress to establish a policy. That is true; and the Congress can readily establish a policy in the light of an abundance of need, as shown by the record reaching back through the years.

I shall partially reply now to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS], and then I will refer to the matter suggested by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE] and the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER].

In reply to the Senator from New Jersey, I make the statement—and I do so without fear of successful contradiction—that this bill, if put into effect, will not increase the number of employees in the railroad service. It will increase the speed and efficacy of the service, but a train of 70 cars passing over a division at a sped of 47 miles an hour does not require additional employees.

Remembering that the average length of freight trains in 1935 and 1936 was less than 47 cars, enactment of this bill limiting the length of trains to 70 cars would result in trains of a more uniform length.

The argument is made—and I know the Senator from New Jersey propounded his question based on that argument—that the passage of this bill will require the railroads of the country to double the number of employees now engaged in railroad service. I might answer that argument by the statement that if by this bill we are to preserve the life and limb of those engaged in that service, there can be nothing to the argument. If it is sought to place the possibility of a greater number of employees being needed against the idea of preventing death which now stalks in trains of 140 cars or 150 cars, there is nothing to the argument that the railroads may have to employ a greater number of employees, because we propose to put a stop to the destruction of lives and health of those engaged in this all-important public service. But that is not all.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Can the Senator tell us what proportion of trains engaged in interstate commerce are composed of more than 70 cars?

Mr. McCARRAN. In answer to the Senator's question I can only give the figures taken from the records of the Interstate Commerce Commission, which show that the average of trains moving in interstate commerce on class A roads are composed of 47 cars. That is the general average.

Mr. BARKLEY. I was told recently that about 25 percent of trains actually engaged in commerce among the States, moving across State lines, were over 70 cars in length. I wonder if the Senator knows whether that statement is accurate?

Mr. McCARRAN. I cannot say whether it is entirely accurate, but it is approximately true. In other words, we are dealing with the exception and not the rule. The long train is the exception. The long train is not the rule. More and more it is becoming the exception, because the service demands that something of this kind shall take place. Those roads which have keen competition realize that they must put speed into their service; they realize that in order to handle perishable commodities they must pass them over their lines promptly.

It is also true—and I state it in reply to the question of the Senator from Delaware—that, if enacted into law, the bill would reduce the cost of operation of the railroads. How? First of all, it would reduce the per-diem charge for foreign cars on rail lines. What do I mean by that? I mean the charge for the average foreign car running over a given railroad is $1 per day. Whether it be in service or out of service, the railroad company pays $1 per day for that car. By the use of short trains, speedy trains, these cars will be passed over the lines promptly and thus that element of expense caused by the necessary use of foreign cars will be reduced.

If enacted into law, the bill would reduce the expense which is entailed by the frequent damage to property which results by reason of the wrecks which are brought about by slack action. That damage runs into the millions of dollars.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. McCARRAN. Certainly.

Mr. HUGHES. I do not know very much about railroads and I do not know that I have followed the Senator's argument closely, but, as I understand, the Senator said it would not increase the expense of the railroads, but might save some money for them.

Mr. McCARRAN. That is my contention. In other words, I answer the Senator that it would reduce the expense along some lines, and whatever tendency there might be to increase the expense would be met in other ways. I have tried to enumerate some of the items of expense, as, for instance, the charge for foreign cars, the damage which results by reason of wrecks on long trains, and other elements which I have mentioned.

Mr. HUGHES. I have received a number of communications in relation to the bill. The statements which are made—whether correct or not correct, I do not know—are that it would increase very largely the number of employees and would also increase the expense for equipment, and in that way would be a heavy burden on the railroads.

Mr. McCARRAN. I am going to answer the Senator's question from two angles, and I hope the Senator will bear with me, as my answer is a little involved.

When Congress was considering the bill which for years has been the law, requiring that every car used in interstate commerce should be equipped with air brakes, the railroads declared it would cost $90,000,000 so to equip their cars and that it would destroy the railroads. Today not a railroad would come here and advocate a bill that would take that law off the statute books.

Again, when Congress was considering the automatic coupler law requiring every car moving interstate commerce to be equipped with automatic couplers, the railroads came before the committees of the Congress and said it would cost hundreds of millions of dollars and would destroy them. Today not a railroad would advocate a bill that would repeal the statute requiring automatic couplers, because the automatic coupler has so reduced accidents and the destruction of property that it is now recognized to be an all-important essential. We no longer have men's arms snapped off by the old link-and-pin coupling device, bodies maimed and destroyed because men have to go in between the cars. We no longer have long hospital lists of men who had to go in and about the cars in order to make the couplings.

All such problems have been met as time went on. We are now dealing with a measure which proposes to lessen another great hazard. If we should have to apply it to every train in interstate commerce the argument which is behind the question of my good friend from Delaware would indeed have great force, but we are dealing, as the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] suggested, only with a small percentage of the trains moving in interstate commerce. The greater percentage of trains in interstate commerce are today accommodating themselves to the provisions of this bill without it being a law, because a very large percentage of trains operating in interstate commerce are not under 70 cars, but under 50 cars, in fact, in the neighborhood, on the average, of 47 cars, showing that the railroads themselves realize they cannot longer operate under a system which destroys the lives of their employees and destroys railroad property. They have come to realize that fact, and, coming to realize it, they themselves have reduced the train length so far as cars are concerned.

I say again if we are dealing with the great majority of trains in the country there would be an argument against the bill that might be serious, because then it could be said that we were proposing something which would increase the cost to the railroads in such a way that it would be impossible for them to operate. However, on the small percentage of trains involved the increased cost would not be very great. If the large majority of trains in the freight service now consist of less than 50 cars, where can there be any force in the argument against providing by law with reference to the smaller percentage of trains that they shall be reduced to 70 cars, and that thereby we will greatly increase the employment necessary? Again I say if an increase should be made necessary, it would be a minor increase and not a major increase, such as has been referred to in the propaganda which is behind the opposition to the bill.

Secondly, I say if there is an increase, then it is an increase of opportunity for those who seek employment along a given line, and it is a decrease in that element which destroys life, destroys limb, fills hospitals with injured men, and makes railroading a business into which men do not desire to enter as a vocation.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I am coming to the Senator's question in just a moment.

Mr. POPE. On the point the Senator is now discussing I desire to ask a question. Is the Senator familiar with the case which was decided in Nevada in which the court expressly stated that the element of safety had nothing to do with the length of trains? Will the Senator comment on that decision of the court?

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, let me give the history of that case first so that it may be thoroughly understood. The Legislature of Arizona——

Mr. POPE. If the Senator will yield for a moment I should like to read a part of the decision of the court so that his comments may refer to it.

Mr. McCARRAN. Is that the master's decision or is it the decision of the court?

Mr. POPE. It is from the court findings of fact in the Nevada case known as the Nevada train link case. This is the language used in the decision:

> A careful review of all the evidence warrants the conclusion that, from the standpoint of safety to the public, to travelers on railroads, and to railroad employees, the Nevada train-limit law bears no reasonable relation to safety, but, if enforced would impair and lessen the safety of plaintiffs' present method of freight-train operation in Nevada.
> The frequency of train and train-service accidents is directly related to the number of train units operated, and when more train units are run than are necessary to handle a given amount of traffic the hazard of accidents in handling such traffic is correspondingly increased.

The Senator also is probably familiar with the Arizona case, and I will quote from the decision in that case.

Mr. McCARRAN. Is the Senator quoting from the decisions, or is he quoting from a pamphlet which deals with the decisions?

Mr. POPE. I am quoting from the decision itself in a pamphlet which quotes from the court.

In the Arizona case this is the quotation:

> We are convinced from the evidence that the law—

Referring to the State train-limit law—> bears no resonable relation to safety of persons or property.

That has confused me. Apparently, the court has taken the position that the increased number of trains threatens the safety both of the public and of the employees, and particularly the public, rather than the increased number of cars in the trains; and on that point I should like to have the comment of the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, regarding the Nevada case, the Senator undoubtedly is dealing with the decision of the master in chancery and not the decision of the court, for the matter was submitted to a master in chancery, and he wrote the findings or decision. The conclusion was afterward confirmed by a three-judge court; but I may say to the Senator that the case turned on the question of whether or not the Legislature of Nevada had a right to enact that statute in view of the interstate-commerce clause. Whatever the master may have found in that case has no bearing, as I view it, upon the question before the Senate at this time.

Mr. POPE. In order to make that matter clear, I will say that the quotation I gave was from the decision of a court consisting of three judges, sitting as a District Court of the United States for the District of Nevada.

Mr. McCARRAN. Very well.

Mr. POPE. That is a quotation from the decision of the court, and not from the chancellor.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just a moment?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. As I understand, what the Senator from Idaho has quoted from the master was included in the decision of the court itself.

Mr. McCARRAN. I take that to be true.

First of all, that whole case could only have come before the court by reason of the fact that an injunction was sought and granted on the ground that, under the interstate-commerce clause, the State had no authority to enact that statute. Further than that, any finding the court may have made has no bearing here and no place in this consideration. That is my view of the matter. The court may have made any kind of finding it saw fit. It seems to me that now we are establishing a policy that we propose to write into law to be enacted by the one authority which, under the Constitution of the United States, has the right to enact this particular kind of legislation.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. POPE. In the State statute of Nevada was there a 70-car limitation upon trains?

Mr. McCARRAN. This bill is copied verbatim from the State statute of Nevada.

Now, I desire to answer another question that the Senator from Idaho asked, and also the Senator from Florida. I wish the Senator would again draw my attention to it. I have forgotten the language of the question. It was with reference to perishables.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, I have a number of letters and resolutions from shippers in my State stating that the shipment of farm products, and particularly perishable products, would be seriously affected by the passage of this bill. Also, I suppose, the Senator from Nevada will deal with the question of increased freight rates that may result to shippers in our States if the bill shall be passed.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, the facts answer that inquiry better than I can answer it. The more speedily perishables pass over the country to the point of destination the better the commodities are preserved. What shippers of perishable freight want is speed in transportation. They want to have their products speedily transported from the point of shipment to the point of destination. That the short train is the speedy train, that the short train passes over division after division more speedily than the long train, is not to be gainsaid. It will not be denied.

As to cost to the shipper, again I say that the actual example set today by the railroad which carries the greatest bulk of perishables from the west coast to the East is that it is in direct and keen competition with other railroads, and yet it is resorting to the short train, and is carrying perishables from California to the Middle West and to the East by means of the short trains; so that if there should be an increase of freight rates as a result of the enactment of a short-train law, certainly those resorting to that method of transportation would be up against a competition they could not meet.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. POPE. The Senator probably is aware that the Union Pacific is the only railroad that runs throughout the entire southern and central portion of my State of Idaho.

Mr. McCARRAN. Does not the Oregon Short Line also operate in the Senator's State?

Mr. POPE. The Oregon Short Line is the Union Pacific Railroad.

Mr. McCARRAN. Very well.

Mr. POPE. So we do not have in Idaho the competition in railroad service which exists in some other States. I find from an examination of my mail that a number of shippers' associations and livestock associations in my State, and the president of the State grange, are all protesting because of their fear that our freight rates will be increased and because of the fear that perishable farm products will not be taken care of; and I am very much concerned about that matter.

Mr. McCARRAN. In reply to that statement, I desire to say that I have had the same letters and the same telegrams, and I have been in a quandary as to why the persons who sent them should take the position they do. There is only one answer, and that is the old answer of a desire to placate somebody from whom special service will be asked in times to come. This whole propaganda has been put forward by the railroads in an effort to defeat this bill. They have gone to stock-shipping organizations and perishable-shipping organizations and sought to induce them to send on these messages, so as to turn the minds of Senators against the real aim and purpose of the pending bill.

Let me go a little further into that subject. I repeat that what a shipper of perishables wants is special service, fast service, and the short train is the agency that will supply such service. What the shipper of livestock wants is a speedy train, because he is up against limitation of hours, as the Senate knows; he is up against everything there is, and he wants to put his livestock over the line as fast as possible. If he has only 10 cars to ship, he would rather see those 10 cars move along as an individual unit, than to see, on the other hand, the 10 cars of livestock stand on a siding hour after hour, waiting for a long train to be made up to go out over division after division. If that is done, who is the loser? The man who is shipping the livestock is the loser; and I do not care whether he comes back the next day and endorses the long-train service or not. If he does, he does it by reason of something in the way of pressure that has been put on him.

I know these letters have come in, and I know the Senator has them; but I want to say that not all the farm organizations have attempted to say that this bill would work a hardship on them.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. POPE. The letters and resolutions of protest are not limited to farm organizations, of course.

Mr. McCARRAN. No; I know that.

Mr. POPE. The cattlemen's association, the sheepmen's association, and the mining interests of my State have all protested against the bill.

Mr. McCARRAN. We could expect that, because naturally the railroads have been reaching out to get in touch with all the big shippers of commodities. Every one of those big shippers has come to the railroads and asked for something in the way of unusual service where it was possible to obtain it; and naturally the railroads, in a time of stress, go to those shippers and say, "Here, come on, now. We have accommodated you in times past. Now we look for you to back us up in this protest"; and so the protests have come in. But in the nature of things, as the Senator himself will admit, with all the facts that he knows to prevail with reference to the shippers of perishable commodities and with all the facts that he knows to apply to the shippers of livestock, they cannot be those who would protest against a method of operation that would render the best service to that particular class of shippers.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. POPE. In one of the letters which I have received it is estimated that the increased annual cost to the railroads from the enactment of this bill would be something like $90,000,000 a year. Can the Senator give any figures as to the additional cost which the enactment of the bill would entail?

Mr. McCARRAN. I will answer the Senator's question in this way: My recollection is that the record will show that when the railroads first started out to protest against the enactment of this bill, they claimed that it would cost in excess of $200,000,000 annually to carry out the provisions of the bill. They then came down to $100,000,000.

The latest statement I have heard was that it would cost $90,000,000 annually to put the bill into operation. The fallacy of that claim is so apparent that it does not require an answer. The railroads themselves have already put the proposed service into operation in all but a small percentage of their trains. There is only a small percentage, approximately 25 percent, of the trains in interstate commerce that are not now short trains. So if it would cost $90,000,000 annually to put in 20 percent of the service, what would it cost to put in 100 percent of the service? The statement falls by its own weight. There is nothing to it.

The same argument was made when Congress sought to enact the air-brake law. The same argument was made when Congress sought to enact the automatic-coupler law.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one more question?

Mr. McCARRAN. Certainly.

Mr. POPE. What is the judgment of the Senator as to the effect the bill would have upon freight rates to the farm producers in the West? There seems to be a fear in the minds of the farmers and shippers that is very real, and I am wondering whether there is any basis on which we could determine the effect of the measure in that respect. The Senator knows that perhaps the greatest problem in my State, and in other States in the West, is the freight-rate problem.

Mr. McCARRAN. I understand that.

Mr. POPE. We sometimes cannot ship our fruit and other farm products because of the high freight rates.

Mr. McCARRAN. That is correct.

Mr. POPE. If this bill means an increase in the freight rates, it is a very serious matter. I happen to be sympathetic with this type of legislation. I think I have voted for legislation of benefit to organized labor as often as has any other Member of the Senate. At the same time, the interests of the farmers and the shippers are always very close to my heart. Therefore, I have been having difficulty with the pending bill for that very reason. This matter of increase of freight rates is a very serious problem in my mind, and in the minds of other Senators, and certainly of the people of my State.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Idaho almost answered his own question when he said we have been having difficulty; and as a resident of a neighboring State to his, I know it well. Because of freight rates, we could not ship our perishables. That condition has prevailed with the long train. So there is nothing to be feared if we reduce the length of the train and bring about speed in shipment.

If I thought for a moment that the bill would increase freight rates on commodities upon which the life of my State depends, I would not be favoring the bill; but from an example which has been set by one of the most efficient railroads in this country, which is today hauling perishable fruit in keen competition from the west coast to the East, and resorting only to short trains, I know that it will not do anything of the kind.

Furthermore, I know that freight rates have been reduced as the short trains have been increased in number. In the past 10 years there has been a constant, gradual, careful, systematic reduction of freight rates. True, that was in the hands of the Interstate Commerce Commission, but there has been that reduction, and during that very period, as the able Senator from Idaho will find, the length of the trains has been gradually reduced. So that, from precept and example, I take entire consolation to myself that there is nothing in the preachment that the short-train system will increase freight rates. I say again, if there were any danger, I would not be fostering something which would destroy the life of my own State.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. I have been absent from the Senate Chamber for a while, and I ask the Senator from Nevada as to whether or not the effect of the bill will be to increase the number of employees in the railroad service; and if so, to what extent? Has he any reliable information along that line?

Mr. McCARRAN. I come back to the record, and that is the most reliable information I can have, or that anyone can have. I say frankly that I believe there will be some increase in the number of railroad employees, but not to the extent that has been claimed.

If the Senator will consider the facts as they are and then draw his own conclusion, he will answer his own question. I again refer to the fact that in only a small percentage of the trains of this country are there over 70 cars—approximately less than 25 percent—so that already the question has been answered by a constant increase of short trains. Yet that has not resulted in an increase in the number of railway employees, because the record shows that there are fewer railroad employees today than there were 10 years ago. I think I have the figures here, and I should like very much to put them into the RECORD. They might be of interest also to another Senator who propounded a question a while ago. I will go back 5 years.

In 1931 the number of employees in the railroad service was 1,258,719; in 1932 it was 1,031,703; in 1933 it was 971,196; in 1934 it was 1,007,702; in 1935 it was 994,371.

I will say to the Senator from Louisiana that during all that time there was a continuous, gradual reduction in train length. Today less than 25 percent of the trains in interstate commerce are running in excess of 70 cars. The Senator will find that during the past 10 years there has been a gradual reduction in train lengths. So that while the number of trains has been increased and the number of cars has been lessened, nevertheless, the number of employees has been decreased.

Mr. OVERTON To what does the Senate attribute the decrease in the number of railroad men employed?

Mr. McCARRAN. To more efficiency, and more speed in transportation.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. Is the Senator saying that there would be very little if any increase in employment upon the enactment of the bill?

Mr. McCARRAN. That is my judgment.

Mr. BAILEY. Then the Senator is basing his argument altogether on safety?

Mr. McCARRAN. On safety, and on the uplift and welfare of transportation facilities; but principally on safety to life and limb of employees.

Mr. BAILEY. That is the basis of the argument?

Mr. McCARRAN. That is correct.

Mr. BAILEY. Is the Senator satisfied with the finding by the supreme court of his own State that safety would not be aided by an act similar to the pending bill? That was brought out in response to a question by the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. McCARRAN. The decision was not in the supreme court; it was in the Federal court, by a master. Undoubtedly, from what the Senator read to me, the court adopted the findings of the master, because apparently that decision came from the master. Whatever they may have decided, the point before the court was whether or not the State legislature had the right to enact the law. The question was one of constitutionality, and the court held squarely against the right of the State to enact the law. Any finding beyond that is without the record, and unsupported by the record.

Mr. BAILEY. I should think two trains would increase the danger of operation more than one. Am I right about that?

Mr. McCARRAN. I should say the Senator is in error in that respect, and I will give the reason. We will say there are 2 trains of 50 cars each to supplant or replace a train of a hundred cars. Is that what the Senator has in mind?

Mr. BAILEY. The measure before us would increase the number of trains?

Mr. McCARRAN. Let us put it another way. Say 2 trains of 70 cars each take the place of a train of 140 cars. Let us go back to what I tried to bring out in the first instance: The destruction to property is three times more likely, and occurs in three times as many cases, with trains of 140 cars than with trains of 70 cars. There is more destruction to human life by tenfold on trains of 140 cars than on trains of 70 cars. Yet trains of 70 cars deliver commodities more promptly, pass over divisions more speedily, and result in more efficiency.

Mr. BAILEY. Let me ask the Senator another question. Two trains pass grade crossings twice as many times as one train. That is clear, is it not? The liability to injury at grade crossings is doubled by doubling the number of trains.

Mr. McCARRAN. But we have eliminated grade crossings by the investment of some billion and a half dollars.

Mr. BAILEY. I am sorry to say that that is not as fully true as we could wish. I see grade crossings everywhere I go. There are some overpasses, but there are a great many grade crossings. There are more grade crossings now than there are overpasses or underpasses. I believe it would be admitted that twice as many trains would increase the danger due to grade crossings twofold. Then there are two engines, and twice as many engines would tend to increase—I would not say by a hundred percent, but to a very great extent—the accidents from the operation of the engines.

Mr. McKELLAR. Increase what?

Mr. BAILEY. The danger of break-downs, the danger of blow-ups, the danger of collisions. That will all be increased. I am just getting at the fact that twice as many trains will increase certainly the danger in those respects. Then there is the other feature, when a wreck occurs of a freight train, say, of 40 cars, or 50 cars, or a hundred cars, the wreck will be rather complete in any event, will it not? The property damages on a train of 50 cars, in the event of collision or derailment, would be practically as great, in proportion to the number of cars, as with a hundred.

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes; but the Senator takes a false premise to begin with. The facility of handling a short train is so much greater, the control over the short train is so much more perfect, that there is only a small percentage of possibility of wreck in a short train when compared with a long train because of the lack of control in the case of the long train.

Mr. BAILEY. I did not say it would come in the direct ratio to length. I would not say that two 40-car trains would do as much damage as one 80-car train. There would be some difference; but my point is that the danger is increased. I take it the argument for increased employment has been abandoned, and we are now wholly arguing the question of safety. We will match the question of safety by the use of shorter trains over against convenience, and we will debate the question on that basis.

There is absolutely no plea here for labor. That is gone. It will not affect the labor situation. The increased employment resulting from the passage of the proposed legislation will be very small. Only 21 percent of the persons who work for railroads work in the operation of trains, and only 25 percent of that number, according to the Senator's figures, work on trains having as many as 100 cars or in excess of 70 cars; and that will bring us down to a discussion affecting only about 5 percent of the railway employees. I think the Senator is right about that.

Mr. McCARRAN. The Senator misstates the fact. Less than 25 percent of the trains operating in interstate commerce are trains of over 70 cars in length.

Mr. BAILEY. That is correct; and only 21 percent of the total number of persons employed by the railroads work in the operation of trains. Take the 21 percent and the 25 percent, and I believe we come down to the point where this bill could not possibly affect over 5 percent so far as labor is concerned. Would not the passage of this proposed legislation increase the danger at least 5 percent by doubling the number of trains? That is the point I was driving at.

Mr. McCARRAN. In the first place, Mr. President, it would immeasurably decrease the danger of accident.

Mr. BAILEY. It might if only one train were involved, but there would be two trains to deal with.

Mr. McCARRAN. I shall answer the Senator's question when he has concluded. I did not wish to interrupt him.

Mr. BAILEY. I have concluded.

Mr. McCARRAN. In the first place, when a train is under complete control, as it may be in the case of a train of 70 cars and under, the opportunity or possibility for accident by way of wreck or through the slack-action process is minimized. That has been proven by tests made by the Interstate Commerce Commission, on which tests we have a perfect right to rely.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I do not know whether I have gone far enough in my answer to the question asked by the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. TYDINGS. I assumed that the Senator had answered that question. If not, I do not wish to interrupt the Senator.

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Would the 70-car limitation apply to trains of empty cars as well as trains of loaded cars?

Mr. McCARRAN. It would apply to all trains.

Mr. TYDINGS. Would the argument be substantially the same in both cases?

Mr. McCARRAN. The argument would be substantially the same in both cases; and I will say to the Senator that the tests show the same results in the case of trains of empty cars as in the case of trains of loaded cars.

For instance, the tests made on the Shasta division involved trains of varying lengths, some with loaded cars, some with empty cars, and some mixed. Some trains had loaded cars and empties in the same train. The tests in all cases showed the same results. In other words, a train of 140 cars of empties would have the same slack action, because the run-in between the two cars is 1 foot. The drawbar extends a foot, giving 1 foot to each car in addition to its own length; so in a train of 100 cars there is a difference of slack of 100 feet run-in, and it is because of that run-in that destruction of life and limb occurs.

In regard to that, I desire to read a short report of tests made with power brakes. I think what I am about to read is also in answer to the question asked by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY]; at least, I hope it will be. I shall try to answer it further later on. I desire to read, from page 152 of the American Railway Association's volume on power brakes and appliances for operating power-brake systems, the following:

The road tests—

These were the tests made on the line—

developed the following features of the standard K equipment—

That is the usual air-brake equipment—

which should be improved in any new brake equipment considered for adoption:

1. The quick-service feature is not sufficiently positive to insure a service reduction being propagated through a long train, especially light service reduction with a tight brake pipe.

2. When quick service was propagated through a train of 150 cars with minimum brake-pipe leakage the propagation time was slow and not uniform.

3. Undesired emergency quick action was obtained in 27 different cases when a service rate of reduction in brake-pipe pressure was made at the locomotive. * * *

4. Emergency quick action failed to carry beyond the first few cars when emergency application was made following service reduction of 7 pounds or greater.

5. The distances required to stop the 150 empty-car train with minimum leakage with service reductions were irregular due to the failure of part of the brakes to apply.

6. Practically all service application stops of the 150 empty-car train with 7-pound brake-pipe leakage resulted in excessive shocks.

7. Emergency application at 26.2 miles per hour with 150 empty-car train resulted in heavy shock which buckled the train and derailed 3 cars. This was the only emergency application attempted with the K equipment and the 150 empty-car train.

8. * * *.

9. Emergency applications with a train of 150 loaded cars resulted in severe shocks.

10. * * *.

11. Emergency applications gave heavy shocks with a train of 100 empty cars. The maximum shock recorded was 3.96 inches, and during one trial in which the emergency was made at 10.5 miles per hour, car no. 97 telescoped car no. 98 due to the heavy shock.

12. * * *.

13. * * *.

14. It was necessary to make an emergency application to control the speed of the train of 100 loaded cars on the 2-percent grade, when 7 light service reductions totaling 20 pounds failed to apply the brakes in the rear portion of the train.

Remember that during all of this we must deal with the imperfections of mechanism. The air-brake system is not perfect; and, as perfect as we can make it, still we find some imperfections. We find imperfections occurring along the line of a train carrying air brakes. An application of the air may take place in the middle of the train; and if it takes place in the middle of a train composed of 140 cars, if it takes place at the seventieth car, the other cars are affected by the slack action, and the slack action runs from the seventieth car back to the caboose. We find again that the same conditions arise, not due to emergencies that come about by reason of grade crossings, not due to the fact that wrecks take place at grade crossings, but due to the fact that in a long train there is less possibility of having the train under control. Nine times out of ten grade-crossing accidents occur where a long train is not under control, and therefore the engineer cannot bring his train to a stop in sufficient time to save life at the grade crossing.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I was thinking about the matter of safety to the public. It occurred to me that people who are killed and injured these days are not being killed and injured on the railroads. They are killed on the highways. As I recall the statistics, some 36,000 people were killed last year on highways by automobiles and trucks. That is a serious matter. I should like the Senator to give me the comparative figures as between injuries on railroads and injuries on the highways.

If we are going to deal here with the matter of transportation with a view to safety, what will the Senator say to bringing in a bill to meet the whole situation? It would be a great pity to turn trucks and automobiles loose, killing 36,000 persons a year, and cause the railroads to go to the great expense involved by the proposed legislation, when the number of persons injured on railroads is far less than the number injured on highways. The railroads are insurers of property, and the courts always award damages for injuries and for death resulting from negligence by the railroads.

What would the Senator say about that? If we are dealing with safety here, should we not deal with the highways rather than with the railroads? Is it not on the highways where the danger now is?

Mr. McCARRAN. My good friend the Senator from North Carolina has a very happy faculty every now and then of begging the question, and this is one of the instances in which he resorts to that very tactful method. His interruption really is not a question at all. What he is doing is begging the question. The matters to which he refers are not involved in this proposition. We cannot do everything at once. We are trying to save the lives and protect the limbs of those engaged in this line of industry. When we get through with that we will take another step in another direction, and try to save the lives of those engaged in other industries where the interstate-commerce clause will permit our doing so.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I am willing to have my good friend think I was begging the question, and I will leave to him the decision as to the merit of that statement; but, since the argument here is based on safety and injury to limb and death to some extent, and since automobiles cause 35,000 or 36,000 deaths a year, I thought that, inasmuch as automobile accidents created the major premise, we might proceed by going in the direction of the greatest injury and the greatest danger.

I do not think that is begging the question. I am taking up the Senator's question. It is a question now of safety to the public. It is not a question of transportation. It is not a question of employment. It is a question of the public safety.

Mr. McCARRAN. It is a question of safety to the employees in this industry. That is what is involved.

Mr. BAILEY. Yes; but we are thinking about safety to the American citizen, and in that connection there is no special class that we look at. When we begin to think about safety for our fellow citizens, we must think about safety for all of them.

Can the Senator give me the relative number of deaths resulting from accidents on railroad trains carrying more than 70 cars as compared with the number of deaths occurring on the highways? That is the real question here. We are dealing with the public safety.

Mr. McCARRAN. As a result of railroad accidents more than 5,000 people were killed.

Mr. BAILEY. That is, more than 5,000 as a result of all railroad operations. How many were killed by reason of the operations of trains of more than 70 cars?

Mr. McCARRAN. A high percentage of those who were killed in the service were killed on the longer trains.

Mr. BAILEY. That is as far as the Senator can go?

Mr. McCARRAN. That is as far as I can go at this moment.

Mr. BAILEY. Very well; a high percentage. That would be, say, 3,000 killed by the operation of such trains?

Mr. McCARRAN. That argument would not stand, because the Senator's percentage is wrong.

Mr. BAILEY. And over against that we are faced with a situation where we know that 36,000 are killed every year on the highways. Why not address ourselves to that situation if we want to safeguard the lives of the people?

Mr. McCARRAN. The Senator knows that there are two bills now on the calendar to protect life and limb in bus transportation and truck transportation, and the Senator may employ his useful argument in furtherance of those bills. They, however, have nothing to do with rail transportation.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. POPE. I have certain figures, which purport to come from the record of the Interstate Commerce Commission, to the effect that between 1923 and 1935 the number of cars on the average freight train was increased 16 percent, and that during the same period the frequency of injuries and deaths to freight conductors and brakemen caused by sudden stops, lurches, and jerks of trains was reduced 61 percent on a train-mile basis. Does the Senator have any comment to make on that?

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes; I have. Those figures are computed on a train-mile basis. Into that train-mile basis comes the short train, and the train-mile basis is increased whenever the number of short trains is augmented. So, considering the effect of short trains, of course, there is a reduction of fatalities computed on a train-mile basis.

Mr. POPE. Does the Senator have in the record some facts to show what increase in hazard is due to longer trains, trains over 70 cars in length?

Mr. McCARRAN. I tried to make myself clear. If I have not done so, I am sorry. If I were to deal with the record, I could stand here for days and discuss it. The tests show—I think perhaps the tests made under governmental supervision would be more conclusive to the Senator—that in trains of 110 cars there is by far a higher percentage of wrecks and a higher percentage of opportunity for injury. That was shown by the tests conducted in cooperation with the Interstate Commerce Commission on the Shasta division, to which I have made reference. That being true, the rule applies right down the line, so that in a train of 150 or 200 cars, where the lack of control is ever present, the opportunity for injury increases by leaps and bounds.

Mr. POPE. Does the increase in injuries apply to trainmen, conductors, and others working on the trains and also to the public?

Mr. McCARRAN. No; I am dealing almost exclusively with the injury to those working on the trains. I referred in the beginning of my presentation to one phase of injury to the public that grows out of the long train, namely, that sometimes when the air is applied suddenly the train "buckles", as it is called, and if at the time it is passing a passenger train on a double track an accident results. Many accidents of that kind have occurred. The "buckled" train is immediately thrown over on the tracks on which the passenger train is passing, and injury results, not only to the train service itself, but to those traveling on the passenger train. That has occurred any number of times, to such an extent that the railroads have now issued orders directing their engineers not to make emergency application of the air where a long freight train is passing a passenger train.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President——

Mr. McCARRAN. I will yield to the Senator in a moment. Nevertheless such accidents occur by reason of mechanical defects, such as a broken spindle, a broken wheel, or, as I have said, a broken air line while a freight train is passing a passenger train. In such an event the engineer has no control of the train; there is a "buckling" of the train; and the result is a wreck.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, just one other question. Would the Senator agree that the statement is correct that the frequency of casualties to passengers has decreased 71 percent during the period from 1923 to 1935? I have figures showing that the injuries to passengers have decreased 71 percent during that period. The figures which I have here also show that the frequency of casualties to train-service employees decreased 66 percent on a man-hour basis and 73 percent on a car-mile basis. I am wondering if those figures are correct or if the Senator or his assistant could give us the correct figures if the ones cited by me are not correct?

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, the statistics are all in the hands of the statistician. An ingenious statistician can juggle statistics so as almost to make black appear to be white. I think I heard once of a statistician who sought to prove that a cat had 10 tails, and I think he went about it in this way: No cat has 9 tails; 1 cat has 1 more tail than no cat; therefore 1 cat has 10 tails. [Laughter.] With the same degree of accuracy, I think the Senator's figures may be considered.

I desire now to read again from the report, and I refer to the bottom of page 2:

> The public is not generally aware of the injuries suffered by railway employees, and this obtains partially because now and for the past few years the supply of railroad labor far exceeds the demand therefor, and partially from the wide publicity given by the railroads to the increased safety of passengers, without mention of the 282 deaths and 6,018 injuries to trainmen on duty resulting from train and train-service accidents in 1935. Typical of such publicity is a statement made by the Committee on Public Relations of the Eastern Railroads in their Yearbook of Railroad Information, 1936 Edition, which reads as follows:
> "In none of their achievements do the railways take more pride than in their record of safety. In the calendar year 1935 only one passenger was killed in a train accident on the railways of the United States. This single fatality occurred in November, in a freak accident which was in no way connected with the actual movement of train; it resulted from the explosion of a heater in a passenger coach, while the train containing this coach was standing motionless."
> However, the Interstate Commerce Commission, in Accident Bulletin 104, states:
> "The railways had no reportable passenger fatalities in collisions and derailments in 1935. This fact was interpreted by some persons to mean that no passengers were killed in accidents on steam railways during the year. One passenger was killed in the explosion of a heater in a passenger coach of a standing train and as the resulting damage exceeded $150, the occurrence is classifiable under the rules as a 'train accident.' In addition to this fatality, there were 17 pasengers on trains killed in train-service accidents * * *."

This is an example of how some persons seek to discredit or to detract from the necessity of this bill through statistics.

I make mention of that to show the Senator that some well-wishing person has undoubtedly placed in his hands statistics which if taken in one light will mean one thing and if viewed in another light will mean another thing.

I am going further even than the report which the Senator had in his hand. I am going to say that the railroads of the country have put forth a splendid effort during the past 20 years to reduce fatalities. They have been successful to the point that passengers now traveling on passenger trains may look forward to a very high degree of safety.

I am not willing to say that the railroads of the country are blind to the safety of their employees. They are not blind to it, for on every hand we see the sign "Safety first"; everywhere we see appliances for safety; and with the idea in mind of bringing about safety, the railroads of the country have reduced the length of their trains from year to year, from month to month, and from time to time, and now they—and when I say "they" I mean a high percentage of them, if not all of them—realize that if the length of trains could be shortened the trains would be brought under better control, and with the trains brought under better control there would be overcome in great degree that element which all too frequently has caused the destruction of human life in the railroad service.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President——

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield to the Senator from Florida, and apologize to him for not yielding sooner.

Mr. PEPPER. Apropos the safety feature of the bill, I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Nevada to the last proviso on page 2, reading as follows:

> Provided, That this act shall not apply in cases of engine failures between terminals.

I am not a railroad man, and I have no peculiar railroad information, but it strikes me that possibly there may be some kind of mechanical failure between terminals on a line of railroad other than engine failures giving rise to an emergency which arises in spite of the exercise of good faith by the railroad, and that if a showing of the bona fides of such an emergency were required to be imposed upon the railroads that that would be an adequate safeguard. Therefore I should like to inquire of the Senator from Nevada if he would consent to an amendment to strike out the period after the word "terminals", at the end of line 3, page 2, and to insert the following:

> or to other mechanical failure on the line of road: Provided, That in claiming an exception for such an emergency the burden shall be upon the railroad to show that it has acted in the exercise of diligence and good faith.

Mr. McCARRAN. Would the Senator do me the courtesy of reading the proposed amendment again? My attention was diverted for a moment. I apologize to him for making the request.

Mr. PEPPER. At the end of line 3, after the word "terminals", on page 2, I propose to strike out the period and to insert the following:

> or to other mechanical failure on the line of road: Provided, That in claiming an exception for such an emergency the burden shall be upon the railroad to show that it has acted in the exercise of diligence and good faith.

So that if the amendment were adopted, the proviso would read:

> Provided, That this act shall not apply in cases of engine failures between terminals or to other mechanical failure on the line of road: Provided, That in claiming for an exception for such an emergency the burden shall be upon the railroad to show that it has acted in the exercise of diligence and good faith.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, after listening to the amendment, I think it is in keeping with fairness, and I am willing to accept it.

I have taken more of the time of the Senate than I intended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator desire to accept the amendment of the Senator from Florida?

Mr. McCARRAN. I accept the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, in order that the record may be straight, permit me to say that this morning the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] offered an amendment which I accepted. I should like to inquire if the amendment has been adopted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was suggested, but not adopted.

Mr. McCARRAN. Then I ask for the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, what is the amendment?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I suggest that the amendment be stated by the clerk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 7, it is proposed to strike out "1937" and insert "1938", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 26a. After July 1, 1938, it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this chapter to run, or permit to be run, over its line of road, or any portion thereof, any train consisting of more than 70 freight or other cars, exclusive of caboose: Provided, That this act shall not apply in cases of engine failures between terminals.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, has the Senator from Nevada concluded his remarks?

Mr. McCARRAN. I am just concluding them.

Mr. WHITE. Is the Senator discussing the amendment or the bill?

Mr. McCARRAN. I have been discussing the bill in my opening remarks. I now ask the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITE. I desire to be heard on the amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator desire to proceed before the Senate acts on the amendment changing the effective date of the measure?

Mr. WHITE. I do not think it makes any practical difference.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest that we vote on the amendment first and then that the Senator proceed.

Mr. WHITE. I am perfectly willing to do that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I am reluctant in the extreme to speak in opposition to a bill denominated a safety measure. If I believed the proposed legislation conduced to the safety of the employees upon the railroads of the United States I think it would be impossible to bring myself to oppose it, notwithstanding other important considerations which are raised by the bill.

Mr. President, I think the bill in its origin was a device for spreading employment on the railroads of the United States. I think its garb has been changed and it has become a safety measure principally because of the fact that as we emerged from the depression men were again being employed upon the railroads of the country in increasing number. It is called a safety bill, but I think all the evidence before the committee 2 years or more ago, and such information as one can glean now from other sources, demonstrate that the bill will not bring about increased safety to our employees engaged in this hazardous employment.

I invite attention, in the first place, to the fact that there have been no hearings in this Congress on the proposed legislation. There were hearings more than 2 years ago upon a bill almost identical in terms with the pending bill and upon another bill which proposed both a limitation upon the number of cars in a train and a limitation upon the length of the trains—a limitation in feet, a limitation providing that a train should not exceed one-half mile in length. Notwithstanding the fact of the pendency of a bill practically identical with this, I think an examination of the hearings of 2 years ago discloses that the testimony was in large part directed to that other bill which limited the length of trains to one-half mile.

Mr. President, that bill very much more contributed to the safety of employees than does the present bill, if there is any basis at all for the suggestion that a limitation upon the length of the train adds to the safety of the employees.

The proponents of the measure make two principal claims in its behalf. One is that as the length of trains is increased there follows increased difficulty in properly interpreting and understanding the visual signals used in the operation of trains. That is one contention in its behalf.

The second contention is that as the trains are increased in length there comes difficulty in the braking of the trains and that, as a result, through the slacking and jerking and sudden starting and stopping due to braking of the train, injury results to the employee.

As to the second reason asserted for the introduction of the bill, I submit that in the hearings there is no testimony of real probative force that these accidents occur more frequently or with more serious results in long trains than in the shorter trains. On the contrary, the investigations of train accidents show that for 10 years of time there has been an almost continuous decline in accidents involving slack surges and jerks and starts and stops of trains, while at the same time there has been a constantly increasing length of trains. Such accidents in 1933 were not one-third in number of those in 1923.

As bearing on this question I wish to read somewhat from the testimony taken more than 2 years ago. In the hearings appears a table taken from the Interstate Commerce Commission's own statistics dealing with casualties in all train and train-service accidents, involving sudden stops, starts, jerks, and slack surges from all causes, including negligent handling of air brakes. That is one of the reasons advanced by the proponents of the pending measure—accidents of that general character—for the presence of the bill here.

The statistics show very clearly that from 1923 up to and including 1933 there has been a marked decrease in the number of casualties. There are the casualties resulting fatally to the men and there are those resulting in injuries which did not prove fatal.

The total of casualties dropped from 3,299 in 1923 to only 650 in 1933. In other words, in 1933 casualties of this character were approximately one-fifth of the number in 1923.

The testimony goes on and says:

Inspection of this column 6—

In the table to which I have just been referring—reveals a rapid and almost uninterrupted decrease in the yearly casualty rates, the rate for 1933 being 68 percent less than that for 1923. These very casualties, which proponents of this legislation would lead you to believe are aggravated by the modern practice of hauling more cars per train, are actually not one-third as prevalent as they were in 1923. These casualties include all the men in train service, yardmen, and switchmen, as well as road trainmen, and include those on short trains or cuts of cars in switching, as well as those on longer ones. It constitutes the whole picture of the stop, start, jerk, and slack surge situation from the standpoint of personal injuries to trainmen.

Those are the figures compiled from the statistics of the Interstate Commerce Commission itself; and it seems to me they effectually do away with and overcome the suggestion urged in behalf of the proposed legislation on this phase of the matter.

It is also said that another cause of accidents is the difficulty of distinguishing the visual signals, and that it is necessary to reduce the length of trains in order that the signals of the brakemen may be made clear and may be understood by others in charge of the operation of a train.

In the testimony of 2 years ago there was evidence that the length of cars in use on our railroads averaged 44 feet. There was evidence that tests had been conducted as a result of which it appeared that on a train of 60 cars—that is, a train of the length of 2,640 feet—33 out of 35 signals were seen and were understood by the crew charged with the operation of the train; in other words, there were 2 errors out of 35 tests.

The same tests indicated that on a train of 70 cars—that is, a train of the length of 3,080 feet—13 signals were understood, and 22 signals were misunderstood; and that with 90 cars, or a train of a length of 3,960 feet, out of 25 tests only 1 was understood, and 24 were misunderstood. Yet, those who rely upon this evidence are sponsoring a bill which permits a train of a length of approximately 4,900 feet, or a train 1,000 feet longer than was referred to in the last test, where only 1 signal out of 25 was understood by the trainmen.

I submit that if there is any merit at all in the proposition that the length of the train has anything to do with the understanding of the signals, we have disregarded in the proposed legislation the impact of that testimony, because here we are authorizing 70 cars in a train. Those cars may run to a length of 70 feet each. That is, by the proposed legislation we are permitting a train at least 4,900 feet in length, which is a thousand feet more than the length of the train in these tests where it is said that only one signal out of 25 was understood. I say to the Senate that that just does not make sense, and that alone condemns the proposed legislation.

The railroad executives say, furthermore, that there is nothing to this claim of not understanding visual signals from the rear of a train anyway, because they say that when a train is moving there is just one signal that a brakeman on the rear of the train is authorized to give, and that is a signal to stop the train; and whether they see the signal clearly or do not see it clearly, the operators of the train know, when any kind of signal at all is given from the rear of the train, that the train must stop. That is the rule of the railroads of the United States in the operation of their trains.

More than that, Mr. President, there is some further testimony to be read in this connection.

In the hearings there is a table dealing with train accidents caused by misunderstanding of or inability to see hand signals. These are the visual signals which it is said cannot be seen as the train increases in length, and therefore that it is a dangerous thing to increase the length of the train. The facts are that in the 3 years 1931, 1932, and 1933 there was just one casualty due to a failure to understand visual signals. The testimony is—and I read briefly from the testimony:

> By totaling the accidents and casualties from these lines in both tables—

These figures relate, I think, to some particular railroads—

> By totaling the accidents and casualties from these lines in both tables we get all cases of train accidents recorded as involving misunderstanding of hand signals or inability to distinguish them, whether due to negligence or poor visibility.

It will be noted that there was not a single casualty in 1931 or 1933, and only one in 1932. It is obvious, therefore, that misunderstanding of hand signals seldom results in accidents in actual practice.

In the 482 accidents investigated by the Interstate Commerce Commission in a period of some 6 years, running from 1928 to 1933, there were only eight where transmission of hand signals was a contributing cause. All of these eight occurred in station and yard-switching moves. Not one involved a road freight train; and there was not a single instance of misinterpretation of the meaning of a signal or inability to pass signals because of distance.

There is the testimony, taken from the records of the Interstate Commerce Commission, dealing with this phase of the question, and, in my judgment, it completely refutes the suggestion which has been made that as train lengths increase it becomes impossible or in any event difficult to see and to interpret hand signals.

The fact is that, over the years, accidents have decreased. From 1923 to 1935 the number of cars had increased by 16 percent, and the number of accidents had decreased 61 percent. In the face of that record of increasing car lengths and decreasing accidents, I ask, what is the necessity for this legislation at all?

The railroad executives contend that the enactment of this bill would increase accidents at crossings, and would increase accidents through collisions. As bearing on that subject, let me read something from the hearings.

In the testimony there appears this analysis of the situation and this comment on the possibility of increased accidents through collisions from the operation of shorter trains:

> If you are running on a single-track railroad one train in each direction, you have one train-meet. If you are running two trains in each direction you do not have two train-meets, but four train-meets, and if you are running three you have nine train-meets. If you are running four trains you have 16 train-meets, and if you increase that by just one train each way during the same period of time to five trains, you would have 25 train-meets.
>
> This bill would increase the number of freight trains about 25 percent, so that where we are running three such trains we would run four. The meeting of trains is a productive source of accident. I speak in that connection not only of the possibility of collision. When two trains meet one must take the siding. That means it must stop and start, and in connection with those stops and starts which require that men get off the train to flag, and in connection with other incidents of a train-meet, there is a source of accident which is much more important, I think, than slack surges.
> During the last 10 years—I think my figure is correct; if it is not, it will be corrected by a later witness—the frequency rate of injuries to trainmen from this type of accident has decreased some 68 percent. Looking at the bill from the point of view of the employees only, these additional train units would make a much more hazardous operation.

Mr. President, it also appears from the testimony that the proposed legislation would add substantially to the operating costs of the railroads of the United States. There are various estimates as to this. They range all the way from $125,000,000 up to almost $300,000,000 as an additional cost to the railroads of the country if this proposed legislation is put into effect; and it is proposed that we add that burden to the railroads of the United States at the very time when from 25 to 28 percent of all the railroad mileage of America is in the hands of receivers.

The railroads further contend that it will add vastly to their expense through the necessity of scrapping much of their equipment of today. There is in the hearings something rather interesting on that question, and I shall read a part of it:

> The progress of the railroad industry, as I previously mentioned, has been developed to its present degree of efficiency only through the constant study of experienced railroad men over a long period of years, and the purchase of modern and powerful locomotives, increased car capacity, the construction of large terminals and engine houses, improved rail, roadbed, bridges, block signaling, and so forth, which involved the expenditure of hundreds of millions of dollars. To limit train lengths by law would greatly impair the usefulness of the larger part of these great improvements.
> For example, large freight locomotives, capable of handling long, heavy trains, could not be used to handle light trains without an extravagant waste in fuel, maintenance cost, and wages. Higher wages are paid on heavier locomotives. The railroads very generally would find it necessary to retire such locomotives from service. To take care of power requirements under such conditions would require an enormous expenditure for new and smaller locomotives. It would be necessary to purchase such small locomotives in large numbers, since it would require two and possibly three of them to carry the tonnage now being carried by one heavy locomotive. This is a concrete illustration of the tremendous loss in investment which would follow if the bill became a law and of the corresponding necessity for additional capital investment.
> Our present engine-house facilities and repair shops could by no means house and repair the additional number of locomotives that would be necessary. This, then, would mean that engine houses would have to be enlarged to provide additional engine stalls and ash-pit facilities, also repair shops to take care of the additional repair work necessary. Water tanks, that supply water to locomotives, would have to be enlarged and new ones installed, and added to all this would be the tremendous increase in costs for fuel, water, and lubricants.
> The power question, and facilities for handling and repairing, by no means, however, comprise the only large expenditure necessary, should this bill become a law. It would affect practically every phase of our operating costs. For instance:
> Yard tracks at our principal classification terminals have been designed to hold long trains. Such a layout would not properly take care of the more numerous short trains that it would be necessary to run. These trains would necessitate a greater number of short tracks rather than the present long tracks; in other words, breadth rather than length, with the result that yard facilities would have to be greatly enlarged, and in some cases completely reconstructed. The physical characteristics of some yards are such as to prohibit their enlargement, and in such cases, where possible, it will be necessary to build additional yards at intermediate points in order to properly care for the volume of traffic. Coincident to the enlarged yard operations, of course, would be the additional yard engines and switching service it would be necessary to furnish.

This witness said further:

The immediate and direct cost of operating additional trains, as provided by this bill, to take care of the business of 1930 would have been $237,000,000. In the year 1934, with greatly reduced traffic, it would have been $150,000,000. These figures take no account of the additional expense to which I have just been referring, such as the purchase of new locomotives and the cost of double tracks, or the provision for enlarged and adjusted yard facilities, block, interlocking stations, and so forth.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Who was the witness?

Mr. WHITE. The witness was Mr. J. W. Smith, appearing for the Association of American Railroads. So far as the hearings go, there is no contradiction of that testimony.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWELLENBACH in the chair). Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. The Senator from Maine was complaining about the difference between the bill on which the hearing was held and the bill we are considering at the present time. I desire to ask whether the testimony the Senator has just read was not on the other bill?

Mr. WHITE. It was on the other bill, but it applies equally to the pending bill. I think the Senator has missed the point, however, that it was the claim of the proponents of the legislation that the length of the trains must be reduced in order to contribute to safety, and the evidence 2 years ago was that when a train passed beyond the length of 2,640 feet—and it was the evidence of the trainmen themselves—they began to miss and misunderstand signals. Yet in the proposed legislation, urged in the name of safety, there may be a train of at least 4,900 feet or 5,000 feet, more than the length of any train concerning which evidence was introduced as to the difficulty of understanding signals.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. I do not appreciate the argument of the Senator from Maine. Certainly there would be less danger on a train of 70 cars than on a train of 140 cars.

Mr. WHITE. That is just the question; I think the testimony is to the effect that there is not.

Mr. FRAZIER. It seems to stand to reason that in Maine, where there are those crooked railroads, the trainmen could not see a mile and a half back along the track, and it seems to me there would be a great deal more likelihood of accident with trains twice as long.

Mr. WHITE. I will give the Senator some figures as to the Maine trains before I conclude.

I think it is perfectly obvious that a reduction in the tonnage that can be carried by a particular train must increase the per-ton cost of hauling freight, and that is a cost which would ultimately fall upon the shipping public of the United States. I do not know that there is any way definitely to determine, if this proposed legislation shall be enacted, what this must mean in increased cost to the shipping public in our country.

I do have some data here with respect to a Maine railroad, and I shall read some of the data. The letter I have in my hand comes from the general manager of the Bangor & Aroostock Railroad Co., and I shall read only a part of it. The writer states:

When this matter of train-limit legislation came up I made careful studies on the question of accidents, as this measure was introduced as a safety measure. My studies showed that there were no more accidents in the longer trains than in the shorter, and our experience proves this to be correct. If we are required by law to handle a maximum of 70 cars per train, it is going to increase the number of trains moved over certain sections of our road two and a half to three times as many as we now move, which, in my judgment, will increase the hazard very materially rather than decrease it, because the more trains there are on a piece of road the more danger there is of collision and accidents due to the failure of the human element handling the trains. For this reason, if for no other, I think this legislation should not be adopted. We would be obliged to spend approximately one-half million dollars in the way of added sidetracks and other facilities if we were required to operate trains of 70 cars or less instead of our present trains, and this legislation would add about $145,000 per year to our operating expenses, and, as previously stated, I feel perfectly sure that the hazard to employees and others would be increased rather than decreased. Take the question of highway-crossing accidents, for instance.

And there is testimony in the record as to that, and there is evidence coming from other sources, from the railroad executives, that as to the number of trains passing over a given crossing is increased the chance of crossing accidents is tremendously increased. That evidence is somewhere in the record, but I shall not pause to put it in now.

I read further from the letter:

With two and a half to three trains passing over highway crossings in place of one as now the danger of highway crossing accident is proportionately increased, in addition to the danger of collision or other accident due to a greater number of trains on the road. This increased number of trains would also hamper us in our maintenance-of-way work and increase the danger of collision between trains and motor cars and section men.

Mr. President, that is the testimony of an experienced railroad man, and he is confining his observations to one of the railroads in the State of Maine.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. I cannot quite understand the logic of the railroad man in Maine. He says it would take $500,000 more to build sidings for a short train than for a long train. Does it not stand to reason that a train of 100 cars would take a longer side track than one of 50 cars or 70 cars?

Mr. WHITE. The Senator does not understand my logic, and he does not understand the logic of the trainmen. A while ago—the Senator apparently was not here then—I read from the record just how the proposed legislation would increase the terminal area, just how the railroads would have to widen out their yards, just how they would have to multiply the switching operations, how they would have to increase the number of men engaged in such switching operations and in the movement of short trains within these narrowly congested areas.

Mr. President, as I said in the beginning, if I believed this proposed legislation would make any contribution to safety, I could not bring myself to oppose it. I think the testimony as a whole points entirely in the other direction; and, in my judgment, if we pass this measure we shall place in jeopardy the safety of trainmen, and not legislate in behalf of safety. The figures of the Interstate Commerce Commission bear testimony to that point. The vast mass of testimony before the committee in the hearings held more than 2 years ago is to the same effect.

Mr. President, the Interstate Commerce Commisison is charged by law with seeing to it that all the safety rules of law shall be put into effect and shall be applied on the railroads of the United States. I say it is a significant thing that the Interstate Commerce Commission, with this obligation upon it, has never endorsed this proposed legislation. More than that, legislation of this character has been introduced before the legislatures of, I think, 30 States of this Nation, and at some 70 or 80 separate sessions of the legislatures of these States legislation of this character has not been passed, though introduced. The examination made by those charged with the responsibility has led these legislators, scattered throughout the length and breadth of the Nation, to the conclusion that this sort of legislation is not in behalf of the trainmen of the United States.

Out in Nevada such legislation was passed. It came before the court there; and the court definitely stated, in reviewing some 10,000 pages of testimony, I think, that there was no relation between increasing safety and shortening the length of the trains, but they expressed the definite opinion that to shorten the trains would add to the jeopardy of a service which is already hazardous.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Megill, one of its clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7472) to provide additional revenue for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. PALMISANO, Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland, Mr. NICHOLS, Mr. DIRKSEN, and Mr. SHORT were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the second report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6958) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes; that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 89 to the bill and concurred therein with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate, and that the House insisted upon its amendments to Senate amendments nos. 93 and 95 to the bill.

LIMITATION OF THE SIZE OF TRAINS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 69) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce", approved February 4, 1887, as amended and supplemented, by limiting freight or other trains to 70 cars.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, when I was a little boy my mother's home was within 200 feet of the chief grade crossing in our community. There were, and there are now, three grade crossings within a distance of a quarter of a mile of her house.

I want to ask Senators this question: Did you ever see an engine, a great juggernaut, run into a team of horses driven by a farmer hurrying to reach home, and in his farm wagon a wife and child? Did you ever see an engine run into a team under circumstances such as I have described? Have you seen the entrails of those torn horses wrapped around the smokestack of the locomotive, and blood and gore upon the cowcatcher? Mr. President, it so happened that twice in my early life I stood on the porch of my mother's house and saw that happen. Of course, each time a great crowd accumulated, and I rushed to see what had happened to the human beings. I saw those persons, broken in bone and flesh, bleeding, dead. Fortunately, their own agony had passed, and they could not hear the terrible squeals and witness the sufferings of the poor brutes, the horses who were hit.

At the moment I am not interested in the economics of this problem. I have been told how much more it would cost the railroads if this proposed legislation were enacted. I have been told how much poorer would be the service. But, Mr. President, I leave these arguments for others; I must deal with the matter as a human problem.

This morning I tried to have the Senator from Nevada give me—and he did—certain figures relating to the number of deaths and accidents due to taking up the slack on these long trains. I am going to concede all that, although I know perfectly well that the slack must be taken up on a 70-car train, which is a very material proportion of a 100-car train. I am going to concede that there are accidents to trainmen, and I am sorry about that.

I lived in the little town I have spoken about, and which in those days happened to be more or less a railroad center. I witnessed the agony of a family or two, my neighbors, when the husband and father was brought home on a shutter or on a door, broken and dying, perhaps dead.

Mr. President, when we increase the number of trains, as we must under this proposed legislation, when we reduce the number of cars from 100—and I think the Senator from Nevada said even 140 cars sometimes——

Mr. McCARRAN. Two hundred cars.

Mr. COPELAND. Two hundred cars sometimes—when we reduce the number of cars to 70, it means that there will be many more grade-crossing accidents, because there will be many more trains to carry the traffic borne under present conditions.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. When the Senator deals with the question of grade-crossing accidents, does he recall that the Congress of the United States passed a bill appropriating $4,800,000,000, a great portion of the money involved in that bill being for the elimination of grade crossings?

Mr. COPELAND. Very well.

Mr. McCARRAN. Does the Senator further recall that a similar provision for the elimination of grade crossings is also carried, if I am not mistaken, in the measure making appropriation of $1,500,000,000; and does not the Senator believe, by reason of the fact that the Government has appropriated billions of dollars—I say advisedly billions—for the elimination of grade crossings, that grade crossings no longer exist?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, let me say to my friend that I was glad to vote for certain bills because there was the possibility of the elimination of grade crossings. If I were indelicate enough to refer to many personal incidents in my life, I could show the Senate what an intimate relationship I have had to the problem of grade crossings.

Thirty years or so ago I happened to be mayor of a little city in the West, where there were two railroads. One was an east-and-west railroad and the other a north-and-south railroad. The north-and-south railroad crossed many streets at grade. It was one of my pleasures and privileges, as mayor of that town, to separate the grades so that no longer should the children who were on their way to school or to the shops be endangered upon the tracks. When I was criticized by certain citizens whose interests were affected, or who thought their interests were affected, by what I was proposing to do, and who said, "Why do you do this?" I replied, "I do it because I saw my mother grow old before her years worrying about her children who had to cross the tracks under such circumstances", with possibilities such as I mentioned a few moments ago.

Now, let me give a full answer to what the Senator from Nevada has said.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me for a moment so that further action may be taken on the Interior Department appropriation bill?

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator knows that I am the most yielding Senator in this body. I have discovered that many times to my detriment.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have discovered it quite a number of times.

Mr. COPELAND. And yet, at the same time, I have never been able to resist the appeal of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I bow to the Senator.

Mr. COPELAND. And certainly in this instance, as in all others, I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I thank the Senator. I now ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on certain amendments of the Senate to the Interior Department appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6958) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes, which was read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
July 26, 1937.

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 89 to the bill (H. R. 6958) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes, and concur therein with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$700,000";

That the House insist upon its amendment to Senate amendment no. 93 to said bill; and

That the House insist upon its amendment to Senate amendment no. 95 to said bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. I first move that the Senate agree to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 89.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, may we have some idea what the amendment is?

Mr. McKELLAR. That is the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] providing for the improvement of the Gila River. The next two motions I will say relate to changing totals to harmonize with the action on amendment numbered 89.

Mr. McCARRAN. May I ask the Senator if either of the items have anything to do with Boulder Dam?

Mr. McKELLAR. No, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. I next move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate no. 93 with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the sum "$9,150,000" proposed by the House, insert "$9,850,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Tennessee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then I move that the Senator concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate no. 95 with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the sum "$10,316,600" proposed by the House, insert "$11,016,600."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Tennessee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. I thank the Senator from New York for his kindness in yielding.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator can ask me at any time to yield to him, and of course I shall be glad to do it.

LIMITATION OF THE SIZE OF TRAINS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 69) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce", approved February 4, 1887, as amended and supplemented, by limiting freight or other trains to 70 cars.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, to answer the Senator from Nevada—of course, I am delighted that we have moved in the direction of getting rid of grade crossings. It will be pleasing to all Senators to know that in 1935 we got rid of 1,184 of these deadly things; that in 1934 we got rid of 1,110; and in 1933 we got rid of 1,241; in 1932 we got rid of 632; in 1931 we got rid of 399; and in 1930 we got rid of 136. So, Mr. President, beginning with 1930 we have had each year a decrease in their number. Previous to that time, for a number of years there was a net annual increase in the number of grade crossings. It is encouraging to note that we are getting rid of them—but what do we have left?

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. McCARRAN. I do not know—and I say this parenthetically—whether or not the Senator is now engaged in a filibuster against the bill.

Mr. COPELAND. Oh, no. Let me say, Mr. President, I am not indulging in a filibuster at all; I wish to make a speech on the human side of the problem.

Mr. McCARRAN. Very well. I will take the Senator at his word, because I know his word is as good as gold, and gold is a precious thing; but the Senator having read the record bearing on the elimination of a great hazard which has heretofore destroyed many thousands of human lives and which is now being eliminated, will not the Senator join in the elimination of another hazard that has destroyed human life by the thousands, a hazard that is incident to an industry, namely, the uncontrolled long trains? Will he not join with us, as he joined in the elimination of grade crossings, in the effort to secure the elimination of the agency of death which I have mentioned?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, when I have completed the answer to the first question the Senator asked me I will then answer the second one. He asked me about the elimination of grade crossings, and I gave him the figures indicating that about 5,000 grade crossings have been eliminated in 6 years.

Mr. MALONEY. How many are there left?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, there remained in this country on the 31st of December 1935, just a year ago last New Year's Day, 234,231 grade crossings. Despite the elimination of 1,184 during the last year of record, 887 were added; so we have left 234,000 grade crossings unprotected.

Now, to answer the second question of the Senator from Nevada. Yes; when we have protection at grade crossings and the prevention of accidents there, I will vote with him to limit the size of trains to 50 cars or 40 cars—I do not care what the number may be—but I want him to see what the comparison is now between deaths upon trains and deaths at the crossings.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. COPELAND. I will yield, but let me remind the Senator he must not filibuster his own bill.

Mr. McCARRAN. I am not filibustering. I wish to ask the Senator a question only.

Mr. COPELAND. Very well; the Senator may say all he desires.

Mr. McCARRAN. Does not the Senator realize, in view of his wide experience, that there is truth in the expression, "Comparisons are odious"?

Mr. COPELAND. I think the Senator will find this one to be odious, for in 1935 there were killed upon the railroads in America no passengers and 20 employees. What happened at the grade crossings? The number of accidents at highway grade crossings was 3,933; the number of accidents at grade crossings involving automobiles was 3,504; the number of persons killed in 1935 at grade crossings was 1,680. That is a comparison that must be odious—1,680 persons were killed at grade crossings in the United States in 1935, while only—I will not say "only"—while 20 employees were killed upon the railroads.

Mr. McCARRAN. If the Senator will yield further, I take it, in other words, the Senator would vote against the bill now pending because only 20 railroad employees were killed.

Mr. COPELAND. If the Senator will permit me to say so, he took advantage of what I said when I used the word "only." I do not want anybody to be killed. I was a doctor for many years of my life. It was my job to keep people alive. I do not want anybody killed anywhere. I do not want any human suffering if I can help it. But if I have to choose between 20 employees and 1,680 other citizens, I must choose on the side of the preservation of life so far as possible at grade crossings.

If there is one Member of this body with whom I hate to be in opposition, it is the Senator from Nevada, as he knows; but in his own State—it has been referred to this morning and I sent for the official court record—in his own State, on February 23, 1937, in a case where the question of the slack and the danger of the long train was involved, it was clearly stated:

A careful review of all the evidence warrants the conclusion that from the standpoint of safety to the public, to travelers on railroads, and to railroad employees, the Nevada train-limit law bears no reasonable relation to safety, but, if enforced, would impair and lessen the safety of plaintiffs' present method of freight-train operation in Nevada.

That was from the master's report. Then the court continued:

The court approves and adopts the findings of fact and conclusions of law submitted for consideration by the special master. Defendant's exceptions to certain of the findings of facts so submitted are overruled.

Plaintiff is entitled to a decree granting a permanent injunction as prayed for.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. TYDINGS. It may have been brought out previously, but I have not been constantly in the Chamber. May I ask either the Senator from New York or the Senator from Nevada what has been the attitude of the Interstate Commerce Commission with reference to the bill?

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, may I answer in the time of the Senator from New York?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. McCARRAN. I quoted from the report of the committee that the position of the Interstate Commerce Commission, as represented by Mr. Eastman, is that the Commission neither approves nor disapproves the bill, but says it is entirely a matter of policy which is for Congress to determine.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to ask whether the Interstate Commerce Commission, to which the Senator has alluded, now has the authority to limit the size or length of freight trains, or whether it has not such authority?

Mr. McCARRAN. I question, and undoubtedly the Interstate Commerce Commission has questioned its right to do so. Whether or not that be true, this bill would be in aid of the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to ask the Senator from Nevada whether or not he has considered giving the Interstate Commerce Commission the authority, without actually fixing any limit, to limit the number of cars in trains to suit what they would conceive to be in the interest of the public, all things considered?

Mr. McCARRAN. This is a bill proposing to amend the interstate-commerce law so there may be a positive limitation of not to exceed 70 cars. That is based on investigations and tests made by the Interstate Commerce Commission itself over the Shasta division, as I have related them.

I apologize to the Senator from New York, although I think he is very glad to have me take up the time. I have had some suspicion about the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. Just a moment, Mr. President. I am here for one purpose and that is to try to express in simple language the terms of a human problem. I am not filibustering against the Senator's bill. If I am permitted to go forward with my speech I shall conclude within 15 minutes. I have no desire at all to extend the argument. I have no desire to prevent a vote. If the Senator will allow me to proceed I shall conclude very quickly.

Mr. McCARRAN. I am grateful to the Senator for that statement.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. BONE. I am not certain whether or not the information I seek has been given. I suspect a great many laymen would be interested in the question of how long a freight train of 70 cars would be. My own idea is that it would be about three-fifths of a mile long.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York permit me to answer the Senator from Washington?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. McCARRAN. The average freight car in average service is 42 feet 6 inches long. That is the actual length of the car in service. To that may be added the expansion of the draw bar of 1 foot, as claimed by the employees, or 7½ inches, as claimed by those who are opposed to the measure. However, 42 feet 6 inches is the average length of the average freight car in service on the class A roads of the country.

Mr. BONE. When freight trains are moving, my recollection is there is about 2 feet or 2½ feet between the cars as they run on the railroad.

Mr. McCARRAN. Forty-two feet 6 inches over all, from knuckle to knuckle.

Mr. BONE. Including the couplers?

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes; including the couplers. Remember that the drawbar is included in the coupling. The drawbar is engaged to a spring which extends so as to allow resiliency. The extension is 1 foot per car. In other words, the greatest extension we have to make is 1 foot per car, which allows 1-foot extension over the entire length of the car when the train is pulling at full speed. Have I made myself clear?

Mr. BONE. I understand that statement. I was trying to bring out the information so that anyone reading the RECORD might understand the facts without being involved in a matter of arithmetic. I think a train of 70 cars would be over 3,000 feet in length.

Mr. McCARRAN. I think that is correct. A train of 100 cars is about 1 mile in length. I believe I made myself clear in answer to the question of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS].

Mr. COPELAND. Now, Mr. President, in my own time let me make clear what the situation is. During the colloquy which has just taken place I had an opportunity to examine the report of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and I find in it these figures:

For the year ended June 30, 1936, the number of employees killed was 59 as a result of derailments, 7 because of collisions in automatic-signal territory, and 35 collisions in time-table and train-order territory in the yards, a total of 101 persons killed wherever they were employed upon railroad property. In addition to those fatally injured were 627 who were listed as injured, making a total of 728 casualties among employees.

Now let me refer to the other figures. Grade crossings, where a man hurrying home, perhaps deaf or blind, but whatever his condition, meets disaster at a grade crossing. In the corresponding year there were 1,680 killed and 4,658 injured, a total number of casualties of 6,338 at grade crossings, as against 628 of employee casualties.

Another figure is shown at page 100 of the report of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Casualties to trespassers and persons at grade crosings in 1935 accounted for 85.1 percent of the 5,258 railway accident fatalities reported in 1935.

I have always counted myself a friend of labor. If this bill would lead to the employment of hundreds or thousands of persons now unemployed, I should be glad indeed if it could pass, provided there were not drawbacks to make it humanly wrong. I am thinking not alone of those who might be employed on the railroads, but of the children of railroad men, who are very likely to live in the railroad territory, and may be the very children who will be crossing the tracks at grade, and will suffer death or injury in consequence.

So, Mr. President, I am opposing this bill in the interest of humanity. I am not opposing it because it will cost $100,000,000 more annually to the American people to have short trains. I am not opposing it because of the loss to the raisers of fruits. I am not opposing it for any economic reason except so far as that economic reason is related to human life and the value of human life.

Mr. President, it has been intimated that I was filibustering this bill. We have heard a great deal about reprisals in the past 2 or 3 months. You know, a Senator does not like to be accused of filibustering when he rose with no thought in his mind of any such thing.

Are there any amendments pending to the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BILBO in the chair). There are none. The Chair will state to the Senator that the bill is open to amendment.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I offer as an amendment to the bill the antilynching bill, known as House bill 1507. I ask to have the clerk read enough of it to let the Senate know the purport of the amendment.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the amendment. After having read for some time,

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I am not sure that it is necessary to read all the amendment. I ask that the further reading may be dispensed with and that the amendment may be printed in full in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that order will be made.

Mr. COPELAND's amendment was to insert at the end of the bill the following:

That the provisions of this act are enacted in exercise of the power of Congress to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States and for the purpose of better assuring under said amendment equal protection to the lives and persons of citizens and due process of law to all persons charged with or suspected or convicted of any offense within the jurisdiction of the several States. A State shall be deemed to have denied to any victim or victims of lynching equal protection and due process of law whenever that State or any legally competent governmental subdivision thereof shall have failed, neglected, or refused to employ the lawful means at its disposal for the protection of that person or those persons against lynching or against seizure and abduction followed by lynching.

SEC. 2. Any assemblage of three or more persons which shall exercise or attempt to exercise by physical violence and without authority of law any power of correction or punishment over any citizen or citizens or other person or persons in the custody of any peace officer or suspected of, charged with, or convicted of the commission of any offense, with the purpose or consequence of preventing the apprehension or trial or punishment by law of such citizen or citizens, person or persons, shall constitute a "mob" within the meaning of this act. Any such violence by a mob which results in the death or maiming of the victim or victims thereof shall constitute "lynching" within the meaning of this act: Provided, however, That "lynching" shall not be deemed to include violence occurring between members of groups of lawbreakers such as are commonly designated as gangsters or racketeers, nor violence occurring during the course of picketing or boycotting or any incident in connection with any "labor dispute" as that term is defined and used in the act of March 23, 1932 (47 Stat. 70).

SEC. 3. Whenever a lynching of any person or persons shall occur, any officer or employee of a State or any governmental subdivision thereof who shall have been charged with the duty or shall have possessed the authority as such officer or employee to protect such person or persons from lynching and shall have willfully neglected, refused, or failed to make all diligent efforts to protect such person or persons from lynching and any officer or employee of a State or governmental subdivision thereof who shall have had custody of the person or persons lynched and shall have willfully neglected, refused, or failed to make all diligent efforts to protect such person or persons from lynching, and any officer or employee of a State or governmental subdivision thereof who, having the duty as such officer or employee, shall willfully neglect, refuse, or fail to make all diligent efforts to apprehend, keep in custody, or prosecute the members or any member of the lynching mob, shall be guilty of a felony and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding 5 years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 4. Whenever a lynching of any person or persons shall occur, and information on oath is submitted to the Attorney General of the United States that any officer or employee of a State or any governmental subdivision thereof who shall have been charged with the duty or shall have possessed the authority as such officer or employee to protect such person or persons from lynching, or who shall have had custody of the person or persons lynched, has willfully neglected, refused, or failed to make all diligent efforts to protect such person or persons from lynching or that any officer or employee of a State or governmental subdivision thereof, in violation of his duty as such officer or employee, has willfully neglected, refused, or failed to make all diligent efforts to apprehend, keep in custody, or prosecute the members or any member of the lynching mob, the Attorney General of the United States shall cause an investigation to be made to determine whether there has been any violation of this act.

SEC. 5. (1) Every governmental subdivision of a State to which the State shall have delegated functions of police shall be responsible for any lynching occurring within its territorial jurisdiction. Every such governmental subdivision shall also be responsible for any lynching occurring outside of its territorial jurisdiction, whether within or without the same State, which follows upon the seizure and abduction of the victim or victims within its territorial jurisdiction. Any such governmental subdivision which shall fail to prevent any such lynching or any such seizure and abduction followed by lynching shall be liable to each person injured, or to his or her next of kin if such injury results in death, for a sum not less than $2,000 and not more than $10,000 as monetary compensation for such injury or death: Provided, however, That the governmental subdivision may prove by a preponderance of evidence as an affirmative defense that the officers thereof charged with the duty of preserving the peace, and citizens thereof when called upon by any such officer, used all diligence and all powers vested in them for the protection of the person lynched: And provided further, That the satisfaction of judgment against one governmental subdivision responsible for a lynching shall bar further proceedings against any other governmental subdivision which may also be responsible for that lynching.

(2) Liability arising under this section may be enforced and the compensation herein provided for may be recovered in a civil action in the United States district court for the judicial district of which the defendant governmental subdivision is a part. Such action shall be brought and prosecuted by the Attorney General of the United States or his duly authorized representative in the name of the United States for the use of the real party in interest, or, if the claimant or claimants shall so elect, by counsel employed by the claimant or claimants, but in any event without prepayment of costs. If the amount of any such judgment shall not be paid upon demand, payment thereof may be enforced by any process available under the State law for the enforcement of any other money judgment against such a governmental subdivision. Any officer of such governmental subdivision or any other person who shall disobey or fail to comply with any lawful order or decree of the court for the enforcement of the judgment shall be guilty of contempt of that court and punished accordingly. The cause of action accruing hereunder to a person injured by lynching shall not abate with the subsequent death of that person before final judgment but shall survive to his or her next of kin. For the purpose of this act the next of kin of a deceased victim of lynching shall be determined according to the laws of intestate distribution in the State of domicile of the decedent. Any judgment or award under this act shall be exempt from all claims of creditors.

(3) Any judge of the United States district court for the judicial district wherein any suit shall be instituted under the provisions of this act may by order direct that such suit be tried in any division of such district as he may designate in such order.

SEC. 6. The essential purpose of this act being the furtherance of protection of the lives and persons of citizens and other persons against unlawful and violent interference with or prevention of the orderly processes of justice, and equal protection and due process of law, and against possible dereliction of duty in this respect by States, or any governmental subdivision thereof, or any officer or employee of either a State or governmental subdivision thereof. Therefore if any particular provision, sentence, or clause, or provisions, sentences, or clauses of this act, or the application thereof to any particular person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of this act, and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane to the bill before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained by the Chair.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I assume that I still have the floor. Some of us have had a suspicion that the antilynching bill would be lynched on the floor of the Senate, as it has been. I am not enough of a parliamentarian to know whether or not what has been done is proper.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does the bill which the Senator has offered as an amendment, the so-called antilynching bill, also deal with gang murders in New York City?

Mr. COPELAND. I hope it does.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say that, if it does not, the Senator ought to amend it so as to include gang murders.

Mr. COPELAND. Very well; I will amend it. I am just as insistent upon the decent treatment of people in New York City as I am anywhere in the universe.

Mr. CONNALLY. I congratulate the Senator upon his broad-mindedness and upon his taking the right attitude.

Mr. COPELAND. I thank the Senator. If there is one place in the world where I want crime to be at the minimum and where the courts should be most effective, it is in the city of New York.

Mr. President, if we had present a quorum of the Senate, I should appeal from the decision which the Chair has made regarding the germaneness of this particular amendment; and, if I may have a quorum, I am going to appeal from the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Copeland	La Follette	Radcliffe
Andrews	Davis	Lee	Russell
Austin	Dieterich	Lewis	Schwartz
Bailey	Donahey	Lodge	Schwellenbach
Barkley	Duffy	Logan	Sheppard
Bilbo	Ellender	Lonergan	Smathers
Black	Frazier	Lundeen	Smith
Bone	Gerry	McCarran	Stelwer
Borah	Gillette	McGill	Thomas, Okla.
Brown, Mich.	Green	McKellar	Thomas, Utah
Brown, N. H.	Hale	McNary	Townsend
Bulkley	Harrison	Maloney	Truman
Bulow	Hatch	Minton	Tydings
Byrd	Herring	Murray	Vandenberg
Byrnes	Hitchcock	Neely	Van Nuys
Capper	Holt	Overton	Walsh
Caraway	Hughes	Pepper	Wheeler
Chavez	Johnson, Colo.	Pittman	White
Connally	King	Pope

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I desire to appeal from the decision of the Chair on the point of order raised by the Senator from Texas to the amendment offered by me.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I desire to propound a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LEWIS. As the predecessor of the present occupant of the chair ruled that some measure tendered by the Senator from New York in the form of an amendment was not germane, I ask, is there any rule of the United States Senate which authorizes that any document tendered or any provision tendered may be rejected on the ground that it is not germane?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois submits a parliamentary inquiry. The present occupant of the chair was not in the chair at the time the point of order was made. The Chair is advised by the Parliamentarian, in addition to his own information concerning the rules of the Senate, that the only measure as to which a question of germaneness may be raised is a general appropriation bill, unless the Senate is proceeding under cloture, when no amendment shall be in order unless it is germane. In the opinion of the Chair, the occupant of the chair at the time the ruling was made did not examine the precedents and did not arrive at his decision from the precedents.

Mr. COPELAND. As I understand, then, the Chair overrules the previous occupant of the chair, and the Chair takes the position that the amendment which I have offered is a proper amendment to the bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Parliamentarian advises the Chair that in an appeal on a question of this nature the Senate would have to vote on the question of the germaneness of the amendment. The Chair was merely answering a parliamentary inquiry propounded by the Senator from Illinois as to what the rule of germaneness was. The Chair understands the rules of the Senate to be such that in general legislative matters germaneness is not required. The rule as to germaneness of amendments applies only to general appropriation bills, and when the Senate is proceeding under cloture.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. KING. If I understand correctly the statement just made by the Vice President, the action of the former Presiding Officer in sustaining the point of order is not supported by the precedents.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question before the Senate is, Shall the decision of the Presiding Officer stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, upon that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is the demand seconded? [After a pause.] The present occupant of the chair had the privilege of presiding over another body, and desires to call attention to one custom of the Senate which is rather unique in a parliamentary body, though what brought it about the Chair does not know. Evidently some occupant of the chair did not have accurate vision, or some other reason existed, and the Senate decided that the Secretary of the Senate, who is its agent, should determine whether the constitutional requirement that one-fifth of the Senators present should desire the yeas and nays was complied with. Heretofore the present occupant of the chair has been counting the hands raised, but his attention has been called to the custom, and hereafter, unless the Senate shall otherwise direct, the Chair will let the agent of the Senate, the Secretary, determine whether one-fifth of the Senators present desire the yeas and nays.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me to submit a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. COPELAND. Perhaps my leader will be good enough to tell me what it is he desires to ask.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am sure no Senator wishes to have an erroneous interpretation of the rules stand, and I desire to ask unanimous consent that, notwithstanding the ruling of the former occupant of the chair, the present occupant of the chair, the Vice President, be permitted to rule on the question of germaneness with respect to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Chair overrules the point of order.

The question now is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, may I inquire the nature of the amendment proposed?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will again report the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the following:

That the provisions of this act are enacted in the exercise of the power of Congress to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States and for the purpose of better assuring under said amendment equal protection to the lives and persons of citizens and due process of law to all persons charged with——

Mr. McCARRAN. A parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McCARRAN. Is it in order to lay the motion to amend on the table?

The VICE PRESIDENT. When an amendment is reported from the desk, and a Senator gets the floor, it is in order to move to lay it on the table.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

Mr. McCARRAN. The Senator from New York asked, in the first instance, that the reading of the amendment be curtailed. I should like to curtail the amendment right back of the ears now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York has the floor.

Mr. McCARRAN. Will the Senator from New York yield to a motion?

Mr. COPELAND. To lay the amendment on the table?

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes.

Mr. COPELAND. No; but I am perfectly willing to have an immediate vote on it.

Mr. McCARRAN. Then, I move that the amendment be laid on the table.

Mr. COPELAND. I do not yield for that purpose.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. COPELAND. For a question.

Mr. TYDINGS. May I ask the Senator whether the amendment which he has offered is the perfected bill as coming from the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS], or is it the original antilynching bill?

Mr. COPELAND. I have offered the House bill, which I understand to be the perfected bill. This bill is one which is intended to stop the lynching of colored people. That is the purpose of the bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Just a moment. The Senator from Oregon requested, in substance, that the amendment again be reported from the desk so that the Senate might have information as to its purport.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I really desired to have an answer to my inquiry. I was out of the Chamber at the time the amendment was offered, and I wished to know what particular amendment was being considered. I understand it is the antilynching bill which is on the Senate Calendar, reported from the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, that that is the offer made by the Senator from New York. Therefore I am familiar with its contents.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senator is in error. His statement is true so far as it goes; the Senate bill is on the calendar, but the Senator from New York said he was offering the House bill, which is stricken out of the Senate bill and a wholly new bill substituted.

Mr. McNARY. I was not answering any question; I was merely stating the view I entertained without having full knowledge of the situation. I assumed that the bill offered as an amendment was the one which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary for the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk advises the Chair that the proposed amendment is a bill which has been reported by the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. For a question.

Mr. TYDINGS. May I ask the Senator from New York whether the so-called Senate judiciary bill is the one which was perfected by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS], or is it the original Senate antilynching bill?

Mr. COPELAND. This is the bill as perfected by the Committee on the Judiciary through the efforts of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. VAN NUYS. Mr. President, may I ask a question of the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. COPELAND. Suppose the Senator asks me the question. I see "a man upon the stair."

Mr. VAN NUYS. No; I do not intend to do that. This is the bill as suggested by the Senator from New York and perfected in the Judiciary Committee of the Senate—the House bill known as the Wagner-Van Nuys bill.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the amendment which I have offered——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Just a moment, Senators. The Chair does not know whether the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] still desires the amendment to be read to the Senate in order that he may receive the information he desired.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have identified the bill. It is just as I thought. The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] is in error. If it is not too long, I should like to have the amendment read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

A State shall be deemed to have denied to any victim or victims of lynching equal protection and due process of law whenever that State or any legally competent governmental subdivision thereof shall have failed, neglected, or refused to employ the lawful means at its disposal for the protection of that person or those persons against lynching or against seizure and abduction followed by lynching.

SEC. 2. Any assemblage of three or more persons which shall exercise or attempt to exercise by physical violence and without authority of law any power of correction or punishment over any citizen or citizens or other person or persons in the custody of any peace officer or suspected of, charged with, or convicted of——

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McCARRAN. Does the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] hold the floor while the Senator from Oregon asks for a reading of this amendment, and while the amendment is being read pursuant to that request?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] asked for information as to what the amendment was. The Chair did not know. Therefore, the Senator from Oregon requested that the amendment be read for the information of the Senate. The Chair thinks in good faith the Senator from New York would then have the floor.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BLACK. Is it in order, then, to object to the reading of the amendment with the Senator from New York holding the floor? I do not think it is proper for a Senator to hold the floor while the amendment is being read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair was stating to the Senator from Nevada the parliamentary situation only. The Senator from New York had the floor, and the Senator from Oregon rose and asked what the amendment was. The Chair was not acquainted with it, so the Senator from Oregon asked that the amendment again be read. It seems that in good faith the Chair should recognize the Senator from New York at the conclusion of the reading of the amendment, even if he did not have the floor while the amendment was being read, since he had the floor at the time it was requested that the amendment be read for the information of the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I desire to state that if the amendment is being read by unanimous consent I object to its being read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is heard. The Chair recognizes the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the amendment I have offered is thoroughly understood by this body. There has been great resentment in the country—I say it without reflection upon any State or upon any official known to me—because it is well-known that the colored people have "plenty hard times."

I recognize that we do not do everything quite to the point of perfection in my State. The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] asked me about racketeering in New York. I will say that I am just as much opposed to racketeering and crime in New York as I am opposed to it in Texas, or anywhere else; but I am determined, if I can, in these late hours of the session, to have a vote taken by this body to let the country know how it stands about the rights of the race some of whose members have been subjected to lynching.

Mr. President, I have no desire to argue the matter. I shall be perfectly satisfied if a vote is taken and the matter dealt with. I do not wish to extend the debate upon the bill of the Senator from Nevada. He is entitled to a vote upon that bill, which I shall help him get.

But this is a matter so important to large groups of persons in the United States that we ought not to leave the torrid city of Washington until we have decided on the attitude of the Senate toward this great question.

Mr. President, if there is any speedy way in which the amendment may be submitted to a vote, I shall be glad to have it voted upon without any further debate, so far as I am concerned. So perhaps I may ask the Chair to advise me just how that purpose may be accomplished?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield the floor?

Mr. COPELAND. I am asking a parliamentary question, if I may.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. COPELAND. My question is: Will the Chair advise me how, without prolonging the debate, we may have an immediate vote upon this amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Senator from New York yields the floor, the Chair will recognize the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], who is in charge of the bill, for whatever action he may see fit to take.

Mr. COPELAND. There are other Senators here who are just as much interested in the amendment as am I. I want them to share responsibility in this matter. I do not happen to be a parliamentarian, and just now I am in very serious need of advice in order that I may know exactly how to proceed to get a vote upon the amendment.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield for a question.

Mr. BAILEY. Does the Senator realize that in this so-called antilynching measure it is proposed that the Federal Government shall impose a fine of $10,000 upon the innocent people of any county in which a lynching occurs? Is that the Senator's understanding of one of the sections of the amendment?

Mr. COPELAND. I understand that that is in the amendment; but whether it is in the original measure as it came from the House or in the amendment reported by the Senate committee I am not advised. I should like to say that I should be very happy indeed to have all such details and machinery worked out, and I assume that since the measure has been radically amended by the Senate committee, it must be worked out in conference. Those provisions that are offensive, or which are intemperate or excessive, may be dealt with in conference. I have understood, however, that there was a provision for such fines as the Senator mentioned.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator another question? Does the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. For a question; yes.

Mr. BAILEY. Assuming that there is such a provision in the amendment—the Senator is supporting the amendment as it is—will the Senator undertake to explain to me just how he arrives at the view that it would be either just or honest to impose a fine of $10,000 upon innocent people for a great wrong done by a mob? Will the Senator kindly explain to me just how he arrives at the view that that is the fair thing to do, to put it simply?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield for a question.

Mr. McCARRAN. Before the Senator answers the question of the Senator from North Carolina, may I refer to the fact that the Senator denied any disposition to filibuster on the pending bill, Senate bill 69, and may I refer further to the record as made this afternoon when the Senator said he would yield the floor at 3:30? Does the Senator now deny that he is instituting a filibuster against Senate bill 69?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I do deny that I am instituting a filibuster against the bill of the Senator from Nevada. At the hour of 3:30 I was willing to leave the floor after receiving a vote upon this measure, and I am glad to do so now. I want the Senator from Nevada to realize, however, that there are matters of legislation upon the Senate Calendar which are just as vitally important to my section of the world as various matters of railroad legislation may be to the Senator from Nevada, whom I love and admire. Those of us who take the view we do about the colored people—and we have a very large population of colored people in my State—feel that they are entitled to all the rights and privileges that can be accorded to white men. One of the things that make me proud of the Supreme Court is the fact that when those boys at Scottsboro—some of them since proven guilty and convicted in proper manner—were on trial previously they were granted an appeal to the Supreme Court, but for which they would have died. Since then the sovereign State of Alabama has exercised its right and has done its duty.

But, Mr. President, the colored citizens in my section of the country feel as deeply upon this matter of lynching as anybody can possibly feel regarding any other moral or ethical question.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question to be propounded through the Senator in his time to the Senator from Indiana as one of the authors of the amendment?

Mr. COPELAND. What is the question?

Mr. McCARRAN. I wish to propound a question through the Senator from New York to the Senator from Indiana as to whether or not——

Mr. COPELAND. Suppose the Senator from Nevada asks the Senator from New York the question? Then, we will see what the answer is.

Mr. McCARRAN. Does the Senator from New York know that the Senator from Indiana, who is one of the authors of the measure now offered as an amendment, does not want a vote taken on it in this wise, but rather wants a direct vote on the antilynching bill? Will the Senator from New York propound that question to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, would I be within my rights if I propounded a question to the Senator from Indiana, and would I still preserve my right to the floor?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks the Senator may make any kind of a speech he wants to make. He may query any Senator he desires. Of course, if he yields, and another Senator makes a point of order that he has made his first speech, the Chair would have to sustain the point of order; but the Senator can ask all the questions he wants to ask.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield for a question.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator expressed a desire to have information about the parliamentary situation. Does not the Senator know that, in the event he concludes, and the Senator from Nevada makes a motion to table the amendment, and it is voted down, it would be still open to discussion, and the Senator could go ahead and insist on a vote?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, a parlimentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. COPELAND. If I yield to the Senator from Nevada, which I will be glad to do, if it would hasten the transaction——

Mr. McCARRAN. I will say to the Senator that if he does yield to me, I will make a motion to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. COPELAND. That is exactly what I want to know.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. COPELAND. May I first make a parliamentary inquiry?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. COPELAND. If I should yield to the Senator from Nevada to make a motion to lay the amendment on the table, would I have a right to ask for the yeas and nays on that motion?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator would have that right. Let the Chair make a statement to the Senate again, since he has meantime made inquiry of the Parliamentarian. The Chair is advised by the Parliamentarian that there is no rule requiring the Secretary, an agent of the Senate, to count in order to determine whether or not one-fifth of those present have seconded a demand for a yea-and-nay vote. Whether one-fifth of the Senate has demanded the yeas and nays is a constitutional question, and the Chair thinks it is the obligation of the Chair to determine whether one-fifth of those present have seconded the demand.

Let the Chair say to the Senate now that it will be useless in the future to talk to the Chair about not seeing a sufficient number of Members seconding the demand to order the yeas and nays, because if one-fifth of those present on the last call for a quorum second the demand, and the Chair sees them, the yeas and nays will be ordered. That is a constitutional right, and the Chair is going to consider it sacred. Therefore, if one-fifth of the Senators present, according to the last quorum call, ask for the yeas and nays, the yeas and nays will be ordered.

Mr. COPELAND. I thank the Chair; but may I say to him that, so far as I am concerned, I would take the word of the President any time. I will give him credentials at any moment. He does not have to refer to the clerks at the desk to convince me he is an honest man.

I now yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. BAILEY. May I suggest, Mr. President, to the Senator from New York that we are notified that there will be a motion to table if the Senator from New York yields the floor. It is a very important question, one in which some Senators are very deeply interested. It is a question which we thing ought to be debated and thoroughly discussed before there is a decision of the Senate. Now, being notified of that, may I not ask the Senator to hold the floor until I may ask him several questions, which will bring out some facts in connection with this proposed legislation?

Mr. COPELAND. I decline for the moment to yield further.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York declines to yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I told the Senator from Nevada about 10 or 15 minutes after 3 o'clock that I would yield the floor at 3:30, which I expected to do. So far as I am concerned, I have no desire to filibuster the Senator's bill.

Mr. McCARRAN. I did not know that, because I had been advised otherwise, but will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield for a question.

Mr. McCARRAN. Does not the Senator know that whether he intends to do so or not, he is right now filibustering against Senate bill No. 69?

Mr. COPELAND. I wish to say to the Senator that, if he drives me to it, I can filibuster as well as anybody. That, however, is not the point at all. I want to vote upon this question. That is all I am asking for.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield for a question.

Mr. BARKLEY. Nobody is going to take advantage of the Senator if he yields to me to make a parliamentary inquiry.

When the Senate adjorned last Friday there was a general understanding that, if the railway train-limit bill were not concluded today, the Senator from Nevada would ask unanimous consent that it be set aside, in order that the Senate might consider the wage and hour bill on motion of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK]. I wish, therefore, to make a parliamentary inquiry of the Chair. If, by unanimous consent, the pending business were laid aside for the purpose of considering the wage and hour bill on motion of the Senator from Alabama, what would then be the status of the bill which is now the pending business, including the amendments that are pending to it?

The VICE PRESIDENT. If unanimous consent should be asked temporarily to lay the pending business aside for the transaction of other business by the Senate, any Senator could call for the regular order at any time and the bill would come back before the Senate just as it is at the moment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, a further parliamentary inquiry, while I am on my feet.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BARKLEY. If objection were made to the unanimous-consent request, and a motion were made by the Senator from Alabama to proceed to the consideration of the bill known as the wages and hours bill and that motion carried, what would then be the status?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Such action would displace the present business, which would then take its place back on the calendar, and the Senate would start to consider the wages and hours bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, a further inquiry. Then, would it be in order, notwithstanding that action, for any Member of the Senate to move at anytime to proceed to the consideration of the bill now under consideration, if it were displaced and put back on the calendar?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It certainly would be. In other words, the bill would be in the same position as though it had never been considered.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, perhaps I do not fully understand the question.

Mr. COPELAND. Just a moment, please. A parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands the Senator does not lose the floor by virtue of a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. McCARRAN. I do not know that it is a parliamentary inquiry but I propose to carry out the spirit of the agreement, and the Senator from Alabama, I know, relies on my good faith. However, I do not think the time has yet arrived for carrying out that agreement. The Senator from New York has just made a statement to me, and I desire that that be proceeded with.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, we are interested in the collcquy between the Senators and as to the statement therein made. We wonder what it is that the distinguished Senator from Nevada says he wants to carry out.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

Mr. McCARRAN. If the Senator will yield, I now move that the amendment offered——

Mr. COPELAND. Just a moment, Mr. President. If the Senator will pardon me for suggesting it, I think he should ask me if I am willing to yield in order that he may make the motion.

Mr. McCARRAN. Very well. Will the Senator be so kind as to yield to me that I may make the motion?

Mr. COPELAND. I do so.

Mr. McCARRAN. I now move that the amendment offered by the Senator from New York be laid on the table.

Mr. COPELAND. Upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk called the roll.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. I am not informed how he would vote, and I therefore withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. HARRISON. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] is necessarily absent on official business. He is paired with the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. If the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] were present, he would vote "yea." If the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. AUSTIN. I desire to announce that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] has a general pair with the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO]. I am not advised how either Senator would vote if present.

Mr. LEWIS. I announce that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY] has a general pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON]. I am not advised how either Senator would vote if present.

I also desire to announce that the following Senators are absent on important public business: The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BERRY], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MOORE], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS].

I am advised that if present and voting, the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MOORE] would vote "nay."

Mr. COPELAND. My colleague [Mr. WAGNER] is necessarily detained from the Senate. The matter came up most unexpectedly in his absence. If he were present and voting, he would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 41, nays 34, as follows:

So Mr. MCCARRAN'S motion to lay Mr. COPELAND'S amendment on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I intend to speak briefly on the merits of the pending bill. I believe, however, I am justified in the outset in making a remark relevant to my vote to table the amendment known as the antilynching bill.

Mr. President, those of us Senators who vote against the antilynching bill are so often accused of being in favor of lynching that I believe it to be worth our while for me to enter a little protest, and also to make a statement which I hope will clear us from any suspicion of that sort.

Let me speak first for myself. I should be very much grieved if I could think I am any more in favor of lynching than I am of murder. I should be very much distressed if I thought any man could think of me as a man who would be in favor of lynching anybody. To begin with, I am in favor of the law. I am in favor of justice. I am in favor of order. I abhor mobs, and I denounce all those who undertake to take the law into their hands.

Then someone says, "Oh, well, that is general; but when it comes to the Negroes, you southern Senators"—that is the way they speak of us as a whole class—"are disposed to cater to the sentiment in the South, which in some way, I am distressed to say, does seem to tolerate lynching."

Well, now, I am saying that we southern Senators do not cater to that. We despise it. We hate it. We abhor it. I should like to have that known. I hope my fellow Senators will think about me and my colleagues from the South as men who would go to the utmost limits to prevent any lynching, and to punish any man who was engaged in a lynching. Let me make that clear.

Lynching is murder, and men who commit murder ought to be executed. That is all there is about it. Men who compromise with murder, or tolerate it, or condone it under any circumstances, whether by individuals or by mobs, are not fit to be members of decent society.

We have taken the view about this lynching bill that in the first place it would tend to arrest the progress in suppressing the crime of lynching. We think a very great deal of progress has been made. Forty years ago there were perhaps four or five hundred lynchings a year in the South. That was very distressing, very disgraceful; but we have reduced that number, my fellow Senators, to about eight or nine a year. I bring that fact to your attention by way of showing that we have acted in good faith about the matter, and made great progress.

How did all this lynching business begin? Nobody thought of lynching Negroes prior to the Civil War. You never heard of a lynching in the South prior to 1861. You did not hear of any lynchings in the South of Negroes or of anybody else during the Civil War. It may have been difficult for us to maintain order down there under the circumstances, but we maintained order. There were no lynchings in the war period. How did this matter of lynching come? I will tell you how it came, and I think it ought to be made a record of history.

When the Federal forces struck down the institutions of law and order in the South, and sent the carpetbaggers and the scalawags down there to take charge of our society, and protected them with the bayonets of Federal soldiers after the surrender, the white people of the South had to take the law into their hands. I am sorry it was so. It was a distressful period; but those misguided men—I will speak in that way about them; I will not say anything bad, but will just say that they were misguided men—took charge of our civilization, struck down the accepted and ancient standards of law and order, and fired the Negro's mind with all sorts of unworthy ambitions.

They told him that he was to take charge of the white man's land. He was to have 40 acres and a mule. They told him that he was to take charge of the Government. He was to be the policeman, he was to be the postmaster; and Negroes did get to be policemen and postmasters. They told him that he was to rule his former masters.

I do not blame the Negro about that. Poor fellow! He was an ex-slave. He was ignorant. He had the spark of humanity in him. He was ambitious. I would not quarrel with him. He was misled by people who said they had been his friends, and they had been party to the great war which had brought him his freedom. They talked to him in the name of the great Lincoln, the Emancipator, and they even got into his mind the idea that he could marry with the white people. The sense of law and order which had existed in the slave was dissipated by the agitator and the scoundrel?

What could we do? We did not have charge of the police. They had charge. We did not have the legislatures. The carpetbaggers had the legislatures. We could not enforce the law, because we did not have the weapons of the law, and so the southern white men and the southern white women rose up to protect themselves and their society, their homes and their children and their civilization. That was outside the law, and whenever action of that sort goes outside of the law, it goes beyond bounds. Whenever the forms of law are abandoned, the extremists get charge. We have a current instance of that in the United States today. Whenever the strikers and the picketers have broken down the law, the vigilante has appeared, and he always will.

Out of that movement in the South in what we call the reconstruction days there naturally developed unrestrained men who were acting under great emotions. They abandoned the forms of law because the forms of law were controlled by scalawags and carpetbaggers and Negroes, and the forms of law were worthless.

Very well. When they did that they went to extremes, and they did develop this idea of lynching. I regret it. I deplore it. I abhor it. I hate it. I am humiliated by it; but I am saying to you it was not in the southern people. It was induced in them by an intolerable, an insufferable, a ruinous situation. They had nothing else to do.

In the 75 years that have elapsed since that time the southern people have made desperate efforts to suppress that crime. I am not talking now just about the leaders. Ninety-five, ninety-six, perhaps ninety-seven percent of the white people of the South hate and abhor lynching just as much as does any Senator here.

This is the way we feel about this bill: If it were a bill within the constitutional power, and if it would really reduce the number of lynchings in the South by one—say that the number last year was nine, and the bill would reduce it to eight—I would vote for the bill. I think every southern Senator would vote for the bill on those terms. But our objection to the bill, in the first place, is that it is not in accord with the fourteenth amendment. It attempts to assert the Federal power to maintain rights which are committed to the States. It does not undertake to assert the Federal power for the purpose of maintaining the civil rights of citizens of the United States. If it did, it would be good; but it undertakes to assert the Federal power to maintain the civil rights of citizens of the States, and we cannot do that.

I am not going into the legal argument this evening; but if Senators are interested in that distinction, they will have no difficulty in finding the authority and in verifying the details in the Slaughter House case and also in the Civil Rights cases. That question was argued out here 2 years ago; and very recently the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON] was reading those cases to the Senate by way of undertaking to show that the Federal Government had no business interfering in the Michigan strikes. I said to him at the time, "When the lynching bill comes up, please read that case again. That is the ground on which we gentlemen here from the South stand—on precisely that distinction." We feel that if we ever yield our consent to legislation which will tend to recognize the Federal power to control the civil rights that are reposed in the States, we shall have yielded to the Federal Government the right and the authority and the meaning of the States. It is not a matter of lynching there; it is a matter of surrendering our conception of our States.

We southern Senators always think of ourselves as Senators from States. That is the way the Nation was constituted.

I have referred to one feature of the bill. I now go to the other feature; and I am submitting this to the Senate in very great earnestness. We cannot conceive of the Federal Government imposing a fine of $10,000 on the innocent people of a county down South, or up North, or anywhere else. Now, get that picture.

Let us go to Utah and assume the Federal Government imposes a fine on a county. Where does the Federal Government get authority to fine a county? If it can fine a county, it can extinguish it. But assume that it could fine a county; tell me in law or righteousness or morals by what reasoning any Senator can here justify fining innocent men for crimes of guilty men. That is proposed in this legislation.

Suppose a mob breaks loose in my county of Wake, 10 or 15 or 20 rascally, low-down, contemptible men, and take a poor Negro from the hands of the sheriff and swing him to a tree and shoot him. And under the proposed measure I could be fined for it. How can that be justified? These mobsters do not pay taxes. A fine would not affect them. The fine goes to the innocent people. That is in this bill.

Of course we cannot support legislation of that sort. It is not only unconstitutional; it is not founded in reason. It is almost inconceivable that the Federal Government should think of fining innocent people for the deeds of the guilty. I think we would have to go back to the beginning of time to find even one instance where government undertook to punish the innocent for what the guilty did.

Mr. President, that is all in this bill. So I voted to table the proposed legislation, and I shall vote against it if it comes up. I shall protest against its passage, and at the same time I shall protest that there is not a man on the continent, white or black, who abhors lynching more than I do, who hates it more than I do, who will go further than I to prevent that crime, and that great evil, and that disgrace, and that humiliation, which falls upon us down South.

I agree that it happens in the South more than it does anywhere else, and I am sorry for that, and I have explained why it does. It does not happen there because of anything wrong in our people. It happens there because the means of maintaining the law were taken away from our fathers and our grandfathers by the Federal Government, to its eternal disgrace, 70 or 80 years ago, and we had no recourse except to force. I am sorry, I am ashamed, I am distressed, and I am humiliated; but I am saying that in these 70 years we have reduced that crime to almost the vanishing point. Why can we not be allowed to go on in our orderly way and get rid of it?

Mr. President, I have said all this by way of explaining my vote and, I hope, by way of explaining my attitude to my good colored friends down in my home town. It struck me as a strange thing last year, or 2 years ago, when I spoke against the antilynching bill, and opposed it, participated in what appeared to be a filibuster about it, and gave notice myself that I would fight it to the bitter end, that a great many of the colored people took the view that I was in favor of lynching. I can forgive them; they do not have the great opportunities that white people have. But I cannot forgive Senators, I cannot condone the action of Senators in suspecting men like me of being less opposed to murder than they are. I hope I have made that clear.

Now, coming back to the bill before us, I would not filibuster against the bill, but I want to be heard about it. I have the utmost respect for the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], who has so earnestly advocated the bill today. I listened to the argument with a great deal of interest, and I differ with him reluctantly; but I think it will be a great mistake to pass this proposed legislation.

The bill, just in a word, proposes to limit the number of cars a freight train may include to not exceeding 70, when the fact is that in the last few years we have developed facilities whereby engines can haul from 70 to 125 or 130 cars.

The Senator today put the whole case on the basis of safety. I was glad of that, and I was grateful for his candor. He said that the matter of creating additional employment was a very negligible factor, that the whole case rested upon the argument of safety. I am willing to examine that argument.

In the first place, I point out that the evidence in the report is that the proposed legislation would cost the carriers from $150,000,000 to $237,000,000 a year. Let us take the lower figure, $150,000,000 a year additional burden proposed in the first instance to be placed upon the railroads. But that is not where we would place the burden, after all. The railroads cannot pay that money; they are not making the money. They cannot pay it out of their capital. That would wreck the railroads. They pay it out of earnings.

I look upon the bill in the first instance just as if it were a bill to increase the taxes on the American people by $150,000,000 a year. That is what it is. It is a tax in the form of freight rates. Let us see where they would fall. They would fall on the shippers of fruit from the far West, California, Nevada, Utah, Washington, Oregon, all the Western States, who ship their fruits and their produce across the continent. The tax would fall upon the cotton farmer, who has to ship practically every bale of cotton he produces, which will be fourteen and one-half million bales this year. It would fall upon the wheat farmer. This year there will be tremendous shipments of wheat to the ports. The tax of $150,000,000 would fall in part upon the shippers of that wheat. It would fall upon the shipments of lumber, and that again would strike the farmer. It would fall upon the shipments of coal, and that would strike the householder. The thought that we can put an annual expense of $150,000,000 on the railroads and that it will be paid by the railroads is an absurdity. The railroads have not the money. Let me give some information about that.

If Senators will refer to the New York Times for last Saturday, they will find the report of the railroads for the month of June. People are thinking that the railroads have been making money, that there has been quite a revival in carloadings. There has been quite a considerable revival in carloadings, but the profits of the railroads in freights this year are less than they were last year.

How is that figured? It is very simple. The gross revenue is greater, the net operating revenue is less, because the workers have been getting the benefit of increased wages. Let us get that point; the increased gross revenue of the railroads due to the recovery has not gone into the treasuries of the railroads; it has not gone to pay dividends to stockholders; it has gone to increase the wages of the workers.

I am not complaining about that; I am merely saying that notwithstanding the great increase in gross revenue of the railroads, if we take the reports as printed in the New York Times for last Saturday, which were taken from the Department of Commerce of the United States as issued the day before, we find that, notwithstanding there has been a great revival in carloadings, and the figure has gotten back to the 1926 figure, the profits of the railroads for the month of June 1937 were less than the profits for the month of June 1936. So there is no justification in the theory of recovery for the belief that the railroads can afford to pay this $150,000,000 a year.

Of course they cannot pay it out of the capital. The truth of the matter is, the railroads cannot raise additional capital. Nobody can sell stocks of railroads these days. All of us know why. I know why. It is because the Congress of the United States has been trying to run the railways, and there is no one here competent to do it. That is the size of it. It is a perfect absurdity to me that 96 Senators, not 1 of whom knows much more of transportion and railroad operation than how to drive an automobile, should be trying to run the railroads, but we do try to do that all the year round. We have the habit of running the railroads of the country. Well, now, we have run them to this point. If the railroad goes into the market to borrow money, it has to go to the Government; and I think that is appropriate. We fixed it so that they could not borrow money from the banks. They go to the Government, to the R. F. C. If they want to sell stock, they cannot sell stock.

On that point, look over the stock list tomorrow, or go into the reading room right now and get the stock list today. Senators will see railroad stocks selling as low as $2 a hundred—the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul, for instance. The stock of the Southern Railway is selling at about $30 to $40. The stock of the Seaboard Air Line, which runs through the South, I think is selling at $2. Senators will find one or two stocks which are selling at very good prices, but practically all railroad stocks are selling for little or nothing. There is no market for them. Why? Because the Congress is trying to run the railroads, and Congress does not know anything about railroads. We never had a problem in transportation in our lives.

The other stocks have gone up. The automobile stocks are high; the oil stocks are high; food stocks are high. There has been a great recovery in the market. Senators will find that U. S. Steel stock has gone to 118; but the railroad stocks do not rise. Why? Because of the public policy that makes it impossible for the railroads to return a reward to the man who puts his money in them for investment.

Now we come on top of all that, and without any investigation to speak of this year, with very inadequate evidence, we say, "All right; railroad trains are too long. We will shorten them, and then we will fix an arbitrary figure at 70 cars. We will not do that to help the workers. That does not help the workers. That does not create any new employment. We do it because it is unsafe to operate long trains."

What evidence is there that it is unsafe? Hear me, Senators: Here is the evidence before the Senate at this hour, and it was placed in the RECORD by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE], that the number of accidents on the railroads has been going down constantly, notwithstanding the increase in the length of the trains. I hope Senators heard the Senator from Idaho when he read the testimony just now. So, no matter what the theory may be about the increase in danger, the fact is there is a decrease in accidents on the railroads, and that notwithstanding the increase in the length of trains.

That is a matter of common sense. Two lions are more dangerous than one lion. Two assassins are more dangerous than one assassin. Two railroad trains are more dangerous than one railroad train. The testimony here is that there are over 230,000 grade crossings in the United States. A train of 100 cars passes each one time. A train of 70 cars passes each one time, and the other train of 30 cars will pass it at another time. Two grade crossings for one. So we have in the second case two trains passing the crossing instead of one. There is where the accidents are occurring. That testimony was presented today. The Senator from New York read it. So by increasing the number of trains we increase the danger; we do not decrease it.

Now, we have the other question. The railroads of this country are making a very desperate effort to serve the American people. They have been pushed by bus and truck transportation and hard-surfaced roads and waterways and inland waterways competition until they have had to build up their roadbeds and increase the power of their engines and strengthen their bridges so that they could carry tremendous loads—trains of 100 cars and 200 cars. If you strike down that capital investment for nothing—that is what you do, for nothing—and add to it, on top of that, an expense of $150,000,000 a year, all you do is to make it impossible for the railroads to compete with their competitor transportation facilities.

Let us see how that will work. I want to say something to the railroad workers of America. They very frequently come to me and ask me to vote for this legislation and that, and I think I have voted for most of the legislation they have asked me to vote for. I want to say to them that they may keep on making demands on the railroads until they kill the goose that lays the golden egg. They may come here and say, "The railroads ought to run two trains where they have the facilities to run one. They still carry 70 cars where they have the perfect power and facility to carry 100 cars"; and, the first thing they know, the traffic will be taken away from the railroads, and when the traffic goes, their jobs will be gone.

That is a matter of common sense. I should like for them to get all the pay they can. I should like for them to work as short hours as possible. We are all humane, we are all sympathetic, but we have to deal with a little common sense in the matter. We cannot continue to put burdens upon the railroads without destroying their capacity to employ railroad men.

Of course, you say that that will never happen. I will tell you it has now happened. When we have a depression in America, the first institutions to go into receivership are the railroads, because they are overburdened with charges. Somebody says, "But you will have Government ownership." Well, that is exactly what we will have; and God help us when we have Government ownership of railroads in the United States. God help this country and you and me when we ever commit our Federal Government to the national policy of railroad ownership. I am in favor of private enterprise. I am in favor of private capital. I intend to follow that course as long as I am in the Senate. I am not socialistic in my political thinking. I am capitalistic in my political thinking. I think that is national doctrine. I think that is democracy.

So now, Mr. President, I have heard all day today that there was a great deal of opposition in the Senate to this proposed legislation. I have heard the intimation that an effort was engaged in to delay the vote. I do not care to delay the vote. I am willing to have a show-down on it. I have given Senators my reasons, and they are sufficiently compelling to induce me to say first, to the railroad workers, "Gentlemen, the chief proponent and advocate of this bill said its passage would do you no good." That is what he said here on the floor of the Senate. On the other hand, the record here shows that there is no substantial ground for believing it will increase safety. There is substantial ground for believing that it will increase danger. Above all, it is undisputed that it will increase the costs. The lowest figure given here is $150,000,000 a year, and I am saying that that will fall either upon the wage of the worker or upon the freights paid by the shipper, and you cannot avoid the consequence.

So in the interest of the general welfare and of equity and of right and of safety, I am going to vote against this measure.

Mr. DIETERICH. Mr. President, may I ask if it is the intention of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] to proceed until we finish consideration of the bill this evening?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], who is out of the Chamber at the moment, expressed the desire that we should proceed as long as possible with a view of trying to get a vote this afternoon if we can. I have no way to guarantee it.

Mr. DIETERICH. Mr. President, there is no intention on my part to prolong unduly the argument on the pending bill. I feel, however, that I could not well vote upon it without stating my position to the Senate.

I am not going to discuss the antilynching bill which was offered as an amendment to the pending bill. I was glad to note what the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] said in expressing his feelings with reference to lynching. It is needless to say that such is the feeling of everyone who has the good of his country at heart. The Senator from North Carolina went back to the days of the Civil War, attributing the practice of lynching to the breaking down of authority in the Southern States during the reconstruction period following the Civil War. I am not ready to say that is not correct, or that there might not have been some justification at that time.

Since that time there has been a constant migration of colored people to the States of the North. I do not know what the number is that constitutes the colored population of my State at the present time. One of their race is a Representative from that State in the House of Representatives of this Congress. They have enjoyed the advantages and the privileges of the white people of the North. They are improving themselves, measuring up to their obligations and perhaps advancing much more rapidly in education and in those matters which go to make up good citizenship than are the members of their race in the Southern States.

We have an enlightened colored people to deal with in my State, a people who understand and are sensitive to those principles of right and wrong, and a people who, whatever feelings anyone might have, we know will continue to reside there and take a part in the affairs of our Government such as I understand is somewhat denied them in other States. I am not here to say whether such denial is justified or not.

I think the universal feeling is favorable to the passing of some regulatory legislation to try to reduce the crime of lynching, to apply as against the white as well as the black, because the bill which was offered as an amendment to the pending measure would make no discrimination as to color.

Mr. President, I am somewhat surprised at the attitude of the author of the bill now under consideration, the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN]. This bill has never been considered by the Committee on Interstate Commerce of the Senate. So far as the pending bill is concerned, it was voted out of that committee—and I am not prepared to say what the record of the vote was—without any hearings whatever. It deals with a subject which is important, not only——

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DIETERICH. For what purpose?

Mr. WHEELER. I wish to make a statement with reference to the hearings on the bill.

Mr. DIETERICH. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. WHEELER. The statement has been made several times on the floor of the Senate that no hearings were had upon this particular bill. I hold in my hand a copy of a hearing before a subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate Commerce of the Senate of the United States on a bill which contained the provisions of the bill now before us. A very thorough hearing was held on the bill. That bill went further than the one now before us goes, because it not only provided for a limit of 14 cars in a passanger train but it provided also that no train should be more than one-half mile in length. So that, as a matter of fact, hearings were held by the Interstate Commerce Committee with reference to the particular provisions.

Mr. DIETERICH. Mr. President, I did not yield for an argument. Will the Senator from Montana permit me to ask him a question in reference to the pending measure?

Mr. WHEELER. Certainly.

Mr. DIETERICH. S. 69, the bill now under consideration, was reported out of the Committee on Interstate Commerce without any hearings on that particular bill at this time, during this Congress, was it not?

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator is correct, but——

Mr. DIETERICH. That is correct, and the hearings——

Mr. WHEELER. Will the Senator let me finish my answer?

Mr. DIETERICH. Just a moment.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator asked me a question. Let me finish my answer.

Mr. DIETERICH. I do not desire at this time to have any controversy with the Senator from Montana, or to have him interject any speeches in my remarks.

Mr. WHEELER. Does the Senator from Illinois refuse to let me answer his question?

Mr. DIETERICH. I thought the Senator had answered it.

Mr. WHEELER. No; I had not answered it. I should like to repeat what I said, for the Senator's benefit.

Mr. DIETERICH. I was going to ask the Senator another question. He answered that there were no hearings on the pending bill during this session of Congress?

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. DIETERICH. The hearings upon which the Senator relies are the hearings on S. 27 and S. 344 of the Seventy-fourth Congress?

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. DIETERICH. The pending bill was not in existence at that time, was it?

Mr. WHEELER. That is not quite correct.

Mr. DIETERICH. At least it was not introduced in the Congress at that time, was it?

Mr. WHEELER. Technically speaking, the pending bill, of course, was not before the Senate, because this is another bill, but the principle of the pending bill was involved in the other bill. S. 69, the pending bill, is identical with S. 344 of the Seventy-fourth Congress, upon which hearings were held.

Mr. DIETERICH. I understand.

Mr. WHEELER. That was thoroughly gone into. Representatives of all the railroads and representatives of the railroad brotherhoods appeared before the committee, and anybody else who wanted to be heard was permitted to appear.

Mr. DIETERICH. The hearings on S. 27 and S. 344 of the Seventy-fourth Congress—and I am still asking the attention of the Senator from Montana—resulted in no bill being reported out of the committee during that Congress. Is not that correct?

Mr. WHEELER. I think that is correct.

Mr. DIETERICH. The hearings which were had before the committee prior to that time were hearings on S. 2625 of the Seventy-third Congress, were they not?

Mr. WHEELER. I think that is correct.

Mr. DIETERICH. The hearings on the bills in the Seventy-fourth Congress were conducted by a subcommittee consisting of three members, were they not?

Mr. WHEELER. I do not know whether it was three.

Mr. DIETERICH. The record shows that no member of the Interstate Commerce Committee was present during the hearings on S. 27 and S. 344, except the members of that subcommittee. Is that correct?

Mr. WHEELER. Of course that is correct.

Mr. DIETERICH. And the bill upon which the hearings were had was never reported by the subcommittee to the full committee and given consideration by it except as the consideration was given under the present bill. Am I correct in that statement?

Mr. WHEELER. In answer to the Senator, let me say that when a subcommittee is appointed to hear a bill, there are never any Senators present except members of the subcommittee, unless other members of the full committee voluntarily appear at the hearing.

When this bill came up, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. LONERGAN] was appointed chairman of the subcommittee to hear the bill. The subcommittee not only heard the representatives of the railroads, the railroad brotherhoods, and the Interstate Commerce Commission, but they heard everybody else who wished to be heard.

Let me read a statement from the report.

Mr. DIETERICH. No, Mr. President; I do not yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator asked me——

Mr. DIETERICH. I do not yield to the Senator for the purpose of reading anything into the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. DIETERICH. I desire to make a statement to the Senate, for whatever it may be worth, as to my position on this bill and why I think the bill should not be passed at the present session of Congress, and should not be passed until the Interstate Commerce Committee has had further opportunity to investigate into the subject of the length of trains.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DIETERICH. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. To clear up the matter of hearings, I think it may be well to state that Senate bill 344, of the Seventy-fourth Congress—one of the bills on which the hearings were held in that Congress—is identical with the pending bill, Senate bill 69. The language is the same. No change whatever was made in it; but no report was made by the committee in the Seventy-fourth Congress on either Senate bill 27 or Senate bill 344.

Mr. DIETERICH. I thank the Senator from Kentucky for his information on that subject, but I am wondering if he is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator will look in the hearings, he will find that Senate bill 344 of the Seventy-fourth Congress is printed in full on page 3 of the hearings, at the top of the page, and it is identical with Senate bill 69 of the present Congress.

Mr. DIETERICH. But that bill was considered in conjunction with Senate bill 27.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is true.

Mr. DIETERICH. Senate bill 27 contains many other subjects besides the question of the length of freight trains.

I had the impression that the purpose of the pending bill was to increase the employment of labor. As a member of the committee, I attended the hearings on the Senate bill which was presented in the Seventy-third Congress and was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. I remember that we went into the question of accidents and the causes of accidents on railroads in reference to the length of trains. The hearings in the Seventy-fourth Congress on Senate bill 27 and Senate bill 344 contained a list of accidents compiled by those who were in favor of the proposed legislation, showing the various accidents which occurred on the various railroads. I remember in the examination of the witnesses—and the hearings are here before the Senate—that in the case of almost every accident that was reported and referred to in the record, there was no way of determining whether or not the accident would have happened had the train to which the accident happened been a train of less than 70 cars. Most of the accidents resulted in minor injuries to those in the caboose in the rear end of the train because of the sudden stopping of the train.

The evidence of the effect of sudden stops and sudden starts and accidents caused by breaks in air lines, and such things as that, so far as the records show, was to the effect that practically every accident would have happened had the train been of less length than 70 cars. I assume that the proponents of the bill are relying upon the record made before the subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate Commerce of the Seventy-fourth Congress, to which these two bills were referred. So far as those hearings show, accidents to trains of less than 70 cars in length were just as numerous per car, if not more numerous, than in the case of trains containing more than 70 cars.

As I say, I thought this was a matter of increasing employment; and I was seriously concerned about that, because we may come to the time when we shall have to consider a readjustment not only in railroad equipment but in mechanical equipment of every kind to see if we cannot perform the same work with the same economy and employ more labor. That is a matter which may engage the serious attention of Congress at some future time, and I thought this was a beginning toward that end, but I am informed by the author of the bill that with a decrease in the length of trains there is a decrease of labor. In other words, if I understood him correctly, increasing the length of trains required increased labor.

The Senator from Nevada stated that for the past 10 years the railroads have been decreasing the length of their trains, and there has been a decrease in labor. So the question of the employment of labor, so far as this bill is concerned, is not to be taken into consideration.

The question reverts to whether or not Congress is justified as a matter of economy, as a matter of efficiency, or as a matter of safety, in passing a law requiring the length of freight trains to be limited to 70 cars.

Without going into details, in the hearings that were held there was absolutely nothing to justify the bill in the matter of economy. On the contrary, the hearings showed that the equipment which had been procured by the various railroads, both in trackage and in rolling stock and in power, was all purchased and installed on the theory of operating heavier trains than this particular bill permits. This means that there is equipment provided that is in excess of what would be required if the bill should become a law. It means a loss, not of millions, but of billions of dollars in that equipment.

The testimony in the hearings, if I remember it correctly, showed that in the New England States alone, if train limits were reduced as provided in this bill, there would be an annual loss to the roads of over $100,000,000. It means that there would be an annual loss to all the railroads of many hundreds of millions. It certainly is not to the advantage of the employee to injure the employer and make him less capable of paying the wage that labor has a right to expect and demand.

As to the matter of efficiency, we might just as well be sensible about it. If there is anyone interested in economy and efficiency it is the railroads themselves. If there is any institution required to meet present-day competition, as has been pointed out, which must give efficient and prompt service in transportation, it is the railroad. If a shorter and less expensive train would accomplish the same purpose with greater economy, there is no question but that the railroads would adopt it.

The question of safety has been dwelt upon by Senators. There is no evidence in the hearings before the subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate Commerce in the Seventy-fourth Congress that shows that the change would promote safety. We have all received communications regarding this matter. Some associations of railroad employees are for the bill because they feel it would give more employment to labor; and so long as they feel that way, they have a right to be interested in it. I have received some communications in which they have asked me to consider this measure not as a matter of economy and safety but as a matter of increasing the employment of labor; and if, as the chairman has said, the question of the increase of labor is out of the bill, there is absolutely no justification and no excuse for enacting it at all.

Mr. President, I do not believe I desire to take up any further time of the Senate. As I have said, every right-thinking citizen of this land wants to be fair to labor, but in being fair to labor he must be fair to those upon whom the burden is to employ labor; and so far as the railroad business at the present time is concerned, the railroads do not need any handicaps; they are meeting with all the competition they can possibly cope with. They need some encouragement; and if the only advantages in the bill are, as the author has stated, economy, efficiency, and safety, then the bill is entirely without merit, because the roads themselves, giving them the presumption of being managed by sensible men, would naturally provide for the operation of their facilities with the greatest economy, with the greatest efficiency, and with the greatest safety, because if they fail in any one of these, the railroads themselves suffer the injury. So I say that this is not a bill which will help labor.

Some are led to think that to reduce the length of trains will create more employment. The chairman says not, that in fact the contrary is true. So if limiting the length of trains does not add to labor, then there is no excuse for the passage of the bill upon the other grounds set forth.

Mr. President, I think the bill is of sufficient importance—and this suggestion is not for a dilatory purpose, it is to afford fair consideration—to be sent back to the committee and to receive more careful consideration. I understand there are some on the committee who need no advice along that line. There are others of us who do. I think the bill should be recommitted and given further study.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, on the last roll call I voted to lay on the table the motion of the senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] to amend the McCarran bill by attaching to it the antilynching bill as a rider. I intend to vote for the antilynching bill. I spoke with the utmost vigor of which I was capable in favor of a similar bill when the question was last before the Senate. I intend to vote against any adjournment of the present session of the Congress until an antilynching bill shall have been passed. But to have voted to amend the McCarran bill by attaching the antilynching bill to it would have been to prejudice both measures. A number of Senators who wish to vote for the McCarran bill would not have voted for it if the motion of the Senator from New York to amend the pending measure by attaching the antilynching bill as a rider had prevailed. I intend to vote for the pending bill; but, as I am a friend of both bills, I voted to avoid prejudice to either of them.

Mr. VAN NUYS. Mr. President, I was about to rise at the time the Senator from West Virginia rose to make the same explanation concerning my attitude and vote in the successful attempt to table the amendment offered by the senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND]. The antilynching bill is a House bill which has been amended by the Senate Committee on the Judiciary. It was not germane to the pending McCarran bill. I am in favor of both bills, as the Senator from West Virginia has suggested he is, but the effect, I am not saying the motive, of attaching the antilynching bill to the McCarran bill would have been to lynch both bills. I am heartily in favor of both the McCarran bill and the antilynching bill, and shall vote for both, and in order that the RECORD may show my attitude and my vote as a coauthor of the antilynching bill, I desire to make this public statement at this time.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I do not care to take up very much time of the Senate with reference to the pending bill; but my recollection is that a bill embodying the same principle has been before the Committee on Interstate Commerce of the Senate on several occasions. I may be in error, but I think the full committee at one session of the Congress held hearings on a bill containing a provision identical with that in the pending bill. It was reintroduced at the next session and referred to a subcommittee of which the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. LONERGAN] was chairman. Numerous other bills affecting railroad brotherhoods were introduced, and in order that both the railroads and the railroad brotherhoods and others interested in the bill should have a complete hearing upon them, as chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, I appointed a subcommittee, which went into detail and heard every witness the railroads wanted to have heard and heard every witness any of the farm organizations, or the shippers, or any other organization wanted to have heard.

With reference to the committee procedure on this bill, I wish at this time to read into the RECORD the second paragraph, page 1, of the committee report on the pending bill. I sought to direct the attention of the Senate to this material at the time the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH] yielded to me, but the Senator objected.

> During the Seventy-third and Seventy-fourth Congresses extensive hearings were held on legislation similar to S. 69 and those held by a subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate Commerce during the Seventy-fourth Congress from June 4 to June 19, 1935, were printed. (Hearings on S. 27 and S. 344.) The subcommittee which had the train-limit legislation under consideration in the Seventy-third Congress reported to the full committee without recommendation, and the subcommittee of the Seventy-fourth Congress did not offer a report.

It has been said that the question of safety is not involved in this bill. On that point I wish to call attention to the testimony of Mr. Johnson. He said:

> My name is W. D. Johnson. I am vice president and national legislative representative of the Order of Railway Conductors. My headquarters are in Washington, D. C.

Then he goes on to state that he has been in the railroad business ever since he was a mere child. To show that the same principle was involved in the bill, he said:

> The variation in the length of freight equipment will naturally result in a variation in the number of cars that may be handled in a train, but in no event to consist of more than 70 cars, or exceed one-half mile in length, except as further provided in section 5.

That was one bill. Another bill which was before the committee at the same time was Senate bill 344, to which the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] called attention, and which, as provided, follows:

> After July 1, 1935, it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this chapter to run, or permit to be run, over its line or road, or any portion thereof, any train consisting of more than 70 freight cars, or other cars, exclusive of caboose: Provided, That this act shall not apply in cases of engine failures between terminals.

So the committee had before it when it held its hearings a bill with the identical wording of the present bill.

Further on in the testimony Mr. Johnson said:

> There is an element of danger connected with long-train operation that cannot be determined through tests or statistics.

The railroads brought in a great many statistics, and said that they had made certain tests; but, as opposed to the statistics which the railroad lobbyists brought in, we had before us men who had actual experience in operating these trains for years and years, and they all testified to the contrary. While the railroads sought to minimize the danger in the operation of long trains, their own tests in Oregon show that they lack braking facilities capable of safely controlling a long train—a train of over 100 cars. Everyone knows that a long train not controlled is dangerous, and that those in charge of it are subjecting themselves to possible injury.

But to go on. In his testimony Mr. Johnson continued:

> It can only be determined through service, that service to be rendered by men engaged in train service, the men who are manning these trains. They will tell you that there is a mental strain. They have full knowledge of the effect of rear-end shocks. They know what it is to be knocked down in a caboose. They know what it is for their fellow workers to be injured in rear-end shocks. They have full knowledge that some of their comrades have been killed in days gone by, chargeable to rear-end shocks. Naturally when one of those men goes out on his run with 125, 140, 150, and as high as 175, and in some instances over 200 cars, regardless of how you may surround him with safety, there is still the thought in his mind, and the full knowledge of things that have happened in previous trips, so that naturally he is under a strain from the time he leaves until he gets in. The railroads have acknowledged that there is a strong element of danger in long-train operation, from the bulletins that they have posted—that you must protect yourself at all times; you must guard against these rear-end shocks, and so forth.

So the railroads themselves have sent out bulletins specifically cautioning railroad men against the dangers inherent in long trains because of the shock resulting from the stoppage of the train.

I have before me a letter which came to me from Richmond, Va., dated April 30, 1937. In it the writer says:

On April 25, 1937, a train consisting of 160 cars left Fulton en route to Newport News. About 12 miles from Fulton the conductor and rear brakeman discovered a stuck brake about 30 cars from the rear. They at once made an effort to get a signal to the engine by using green flares for a distance of 7 miles, but due to the length of train it was impossible for the engine crew to see these flares.

Realizing there was a passenger train coming in the opposite direction (this being double track) and judging from the amount of fire that was coming from under the train the conductor thought it advisable to apply the air from the rear and stop before we met this passenger train, as there was fear of derailment, which might cause a serious accident.

He applied the air from the rear, realizing the fact that it would probably pull out a drawbar or break a knuckle; and while the air brakes were being applied from the rear we met this passenger train, and in about 30 car lengths after meeting this train the wheel bursted from this stuck brake, and the train was derailed.

If this train had not been of such length that a signal could have been seen from the rear to the engine, this trouble would not have happened.

I have before me another letter to the same import from Hinton, W. Va., dated February 28, 1937, in which the writer tells exactly the same story.

Of course, the railroads maintain a statistical department which comes before the committee every time there is pending a piece of legislation affecting the railroads, and tries to make its proof by means of statistics. However, we have had before the committee men who have had actual experience, and in each instance they have given evidences of the danger incident to long trains.

For a number of years there has been agitation in my own State on the part of the enginemen and trainmen for legislation of this type. Many of them I personally know. They are not unreasonable men; they are practical. I do not care how many professors or how many statisticians may come before the committee and testify that long trains are not dangerous. All one who has any common sense has to do is to ride in one of those long trains. Get into the engine box with the engineer, or get into the caboose, and you will be convinced beyond a doubt that it is impossible to get the signals from the caboose up to the engine in the event that anything goes wrong.

In speaking of statistics I am reminded of a case in which I was once engaged. I was prosecuting a company which was charged with selling various intoxicating extracts to Indians. The company which was charged with violation of the law brought in a lot of college professors who testified that it was impossible for a man to get drunk by drinking these particular extracts. One of the Indians who had bought them, however, came on the witness stand and said that he bought the extract, that he drank it, and that he got drunk. We left the question to the jury to determine, and, of course, the jury found that the Indian had bought the extract, that he drank it, and that he got drunk.

You can produce as witnesses all the railroad statisticians and college professors you want to, but when you have men of actual experience who operate the trains you can rely on their testimony. They are not making their presentation for the purpose of injuring the railroads. There is scarcely a railroad man in the United States who does not want to see the railroads become prosperous, because he knows that if the railroads are not prosperous he is not going to have a job, and he knows that he cannot be paid for any considerable length of time unless the railroads continue prosperous.

I come now to the cost of this proposed legislation. I have in my files letters from some of the railroads saying that it would cost them $237,000,000 annually. That was their first estimate—$237,000,000. They came down in another letter to $150,000,000. They have now cut it down to something like $90,000,000. Of course, those are estimates. They cannot possibly tell what this measure is going to cost them, but it is going to cost them something.

In actual dollars and cents I cannot feel that the cost of this proposed legislation to the railroad companies will be great. The average train length has never exceeded 49 cars, and in the past 5 years it has been less than 46 cars. What will this legislation mean, then? It will mean that the railroads in dispatching trains will not be allowed to run one of 150 cars and then some of 15 or 20. It will mean that trains will be of a more uniform length.

If I felt that this bill would increase freight rates to the people in my State, I could hardly support it. I feel, however, that its enactment will not cause any increase in railroad tariffs, for the reasons I have mentioned. The direct cost to the railroads will not be sufficient to warrant the Interstate Commerce Commission in permitting the railroads to increase their freight or passenger rates, in my judgment.

On the other hand, let me call attention to the fact that stockmen have written in and presented their side of the question. They have conflicting views. I remember the testimony of the late John A. Simpson, national president of the Farmers Union, who testified before one of the committees, not in connection with this bill but in connection with another matter—and similar information had come to me from other sources—that stockmen who ship their cattle to the market are held up by reason of the fact that the railroads wait until they have a full train of one-hundred-and-some-odd cars before they will ship the stock. As a result, the stock is held in the yards, loses weight, and by the time the animals get to market the shippers must take a tremendous loss on them.

Improved service to the consumer and shipper is one of the real benefits that will come from the enactment of this bill. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH] stated that the railroads themselves are the best judges as to whether this legislation would provide a more efficient method of handling trains, and that the railroad presidents are all anxious to operate their railroads in the most efficient manner. I think that is true. I think most of them are anxious to do so. However, it should be borne in mind that most of the railroad presidents under the system set up at the present time are mere pawns upon the chessboard. That fact was brought out clearly in the investigation which we carried on in connection with systems such as the Van Sweringen system, where one man at the top controls something like 13,000 miles of railroad all over the country. In the Van Sweringen case, one man controls the great Missouri Pacific system and controls all the other railroads connected with the whole system, and he moved the presidents of those railroads around just like so many pawns upon the chessboard. Those in control of the holding companies used those railroads for the purpose of milking the general public and for the purpose of enriching themselves.

Presidents of many of the railroads have said they would like to have the top holding companies taken off their backs, that they would like to see the banker control of the railroads eliminated; but they cannot, and in many instances, dare not say their souls are their own. They dare not come before the committees of Congress to give frank expression of their views with reference to the policies of the railroads.

When it is suggested that this matter should be left to the presidents of the railroads, I say it cannot be done. We would be leaving it to a group of individuals who are interested in the making of higher profits, using the railroads of the country for the purpose of milking the public in stock speculation and stock gambling.

For years we heard it said on the floor of the Senate, "You must not touch the railroads in any way, shape, or form", that we could not do this and we could not do that. Eventually the Interstate Commerce Commission was provided for the purpose of regulating the railroads, and it was thought they were being operated efficiently and honestly because we had left it to the Interstate Commerce Commission. Along came the busses and the trucks. They brought competition to the railroads. The busses and trucks brought about what the Interstate Commerce Commission had not been able to do and what repeated Congresses had never been able to do. They brought about lower rates and better service for the people than all the orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission and all the laws of Congress in the past 30 or 40 years.

The railroads have got to come to shorter trains whether we enact this legislation or not. They have to do it because they will have to speed up their service if all their business is not going to be taken away from them by the trucks and the busses. Why do so many cattlemen ship by truck today rather than by railroad? It is not because they prefer the truck method, but because they get speedier service than they do by trains, and that is partly because of the long trains which the railroads insist upon running.

I am firmly convinced that for reasons of efficiency and safety to the employees themselves, the enactment of this bill into law would be a good thing for the general public, for the shippers of the country, and in the long run for the railroads themselves.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, the vote on the motion of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] to lay on the table the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] presented a very awkward situation for many Senators who may have been in sympathy with the purposes of both bills. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] made what I thought was a very illuminating statement. I think it very completely expressed the attitude of mind of many Members of this body. One of them is myself. I merely want to content myself by adopting for my own purposes the statement of the able Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] so the RECORD may show my attitude on this bill.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I wish to make just a brief statement with reference to my vote on the amendment in the form of the antilynching bill, offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND]. Like my colleague, the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS], and the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], I cast my vote to table the amendment offered to this bill by the Senator from New York. As those Senators said about themselves, I, too, am in favor of the antilynching bill, and expect to vote for it if it ever comes to a vote upon the floor of the Senate upon its own merits and under circumstances where it has a chance to pass.

I am in favor of the pending bill. My colleague said he did not want to lynch either one of the bills and therefore voted against passing the antilynching bill as an amendment to the pending railroad bill. I join with my colleague in that sentiment in explanation of my vote.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, lest some misapprehension might arise by reason of the expressions of several Senators as to why they voted against the adoption of the Copeland antilynching amendment to the pending railroad bill, I desire to make a brief statement for the RECORD.

I voted to table the amendment because I was against it. The Senator from Texas is as much opposed to murder as any other man in this body. Lynching is murder. Murder by an individual is also murder. The Senator from Texas is opposed to theft also, but he is not in favor of turning over to the Federal Government the prosecution of all theft cases.

The Senator from Texas is opposed to all the crimes contained in the penal codes of most of the States, and he is in favor of those crimes remaining in the penal codes of the States. The Senator from Texas is opposed to gang murders in New York and Chicago, in Washington, Indiana, and any other State. The Senator from Texas is opposed to what is expressly exempted in this anti-lynching bill—opposed to murder in labor disputes whether by the police or by the strikers. For 150 years murder has been an offense within the police power of the States, whether committed by one man or a dozen men.

The Supreme Court of the United States has held repeatedly that legislation of the character proposed in the antilynching bill is not within the competence of the Federal Government, but comes within the police powers of the States.

I am opposed to lynching. We have in the various States made great progress in suppressing lynching. The other day in my own State in the town of Athens a man was apprehended, charged with a heinous crime, and a brave sheriff, without any antilynching law, without Federal legislation, defied the gathering persons who might have become a mob, and by use of discretion and persuasion protected and saved the life of the prisoner and transported him to a distant city where I suppose he is now in jail.

Mr. President, I am not in favor of turning over to the Federal Government the prosecution of all the crimes that may be committed in the United States. I am not in favor of prosecuting, under the Federal law, persons charged with picking pockets. There is no reason why we should not do that if we are going to turn over to the Federal Government the prosecution of other crimes.

If we are going to have the Federal Government prosecute for the commission of crimes in the Federal courts and enact legislation authorizing prosecutions in the Federal courts for one kind of murder, let us make similar provision as to all other kinds of murder. If this bill is adopted, why shall we not say to the racketeers on Broadway that when two gangs of racketeers come in conflict and murder somebody—when an organized mob of that kind murders somebody—we will indict them in the Federal court? If an organized mob in a labor dispute, whether the police or the strikers or the nonstrikers, whoever they may be, commit a murder, why should not the Federal Government intervene and protect their rights under the Constitution of the United States?

I stand for the Constitution and every portion of it. I stand for the rights of persons under the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments; but I also stand for the rights of other persons under the whole Constitution, and among those rights are the rights of the individual States to retain the jurisdiction of their police powers and the execution of their own laws.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question for information?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Would not this antilynching law apply in Indiana as much as it would in Texas?

Mr. CONNALLY. Oh, I suppose it would; but the Senator cannot by that question lead me astray. He knows and I know why he is for this bill. It would operate as much in Indiana under the same conditions, but the Senator knows that he has not the same conditions. Would the Senator vote for an amendment to make this bill apply to labor strikes and disputes? I shall ask him a question.

Mr. MINTON. That has not anything to do with the question.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not care whether it has or not. Will the Senator vote for that sort of an amendment?

Mr. MINTON. I am against murder, just as the Senator from Texas is.

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly; but the Senator was interrogating me, and now I ask him whether, when I offer to make this bill apply to labor disputes, he will vote for it?

Mr. MINTON. I do not think it should apply.

Mr. CONNALLY. But will the Senator vote for it?

Mr. MINTON. I do not think it should apply.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator will not vote for it, then. I knew he would not. I had no doubt where the Senator would stand. Of course, he will vote against it.

Mr. MINTON. I will vote for this kind of a bill as applying to labor and capital and anybody else that is engaged in violating the law of the land, either in concert or alone, and make them liable to the Federal law if it cannot be done by making them liable to the State law. Yes; I will vote for that kind of legislation.

Mr. CONNALLY. For what kind?

Mr. MINTON. For any kind that will uphold the law.

Mr. CONNALLY. All right. Will the Senator vote for an amendment to this bill to provide that murders committed in labor disputes where there are organized crowds on each side shall come within this bill?

Mr. MINTON. Why, of course—of course. Who would not? Will the Senator from Texas?

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes; I will vote for it.

Mr. MINTON. And the lynching part of it, too?

Mr. CONNALLY. Oh, no; I did not say anything about that.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator is not as much against murder as I thought he was, then.

Mr. CONNALLY. Oh, well, I know the motives of the Senator from Indiana in this matter, and he knows them.

It is not constitutional to include labor disputes any more than it is to include lynching. Therefore I cannot vote, on the final vote, for either one of them; but if you are going to pass a bill of this kind I will vote to put in labor disputes along with lynching, because I know the Senator from Indiana will not vote for it, and others will not vote for it, and the bill will never pass.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Why did the committee exclude gangsters or racketeers?

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall say to the Senator that that is a matter of geography.

Mr. McKELLAR. If organized bodies of men known as gangsters commit murder, or if an organization of racketeers commits murder, why should they be excluded?

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly they should not be excluded; but this is a geographical bill. This is a political bill. This is a vote-getting bill. This is a bill advocated by Senators who are determined that they are not going to let the Republican Party get all the colored vote.

Mr. DIETERICH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. DIETERICH. The Senator says this is a vote-getting bill. The colored population of the South is greater than that of the North, is it not? Would you not make more votes by espousing a bill of this kind in your southern section than others would in the North?

Mr. CONNALLY. I am not speaking for the Senator from Illinois. If that is his motive, of course I cannot speak for him. I have not the time now to do it, Mr. President; but when the lynching bill comes before the Senate I shall review the history of the proposed legislation reaching back to the times of reconstruction, and I shall cite a number of decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States—I do not know whether they will have any appeal to some Senators or not, but I shall submit them—holding unequivocally and clearly that Congress has no right to legislate upon this question, because it relates purely and entirely and exclusively to the police powers of the States. If you can do this, why can you not pass a Federal law regulating theft? Why can you not pass a Federal law with regard to assault, fist fights, excessive motor speeds, or any other kind of a criminal act—stealing cattle in Arizona, interfering with or cutting irrigation canals, or cutting barbed-wire fences in New Mexico?

Mr. SMITH. Or gangster killings.

Mr. CONNALLY. Or gangster killings, as the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] has already pointed out. Why, the proponents of the lynching bill are so much afraid it will apply to gangsters that they make a special exemption of them. The gangsters are the darlings of this bill. Let us see where that provision is.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington will state it.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I inquire as to the action of the Senate on the motion of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] to table the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND].

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senate tabled it, but it did not table the Senator from Texas, I shall say to the Senator. [Laughter.]

Mr. McKELLAR. The provision to which the Senator refers is on page 7.

Mr. CONNALLY. Oh, yes! We are so anxious to stop violence everywhere and murder everywhere that we specifically provide—

> That "lynching" shall not be deemed to include violence occurring between members of groups of lawbreakers such as are commonly designated as gangsters or racketeers, nor violence occurring during the course of picketing or boycotting or any incident in connection with any "labor dispute" as that term is defined and used in the act of March 23, 1932.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON] says he will vote to make it a Federal crime under this bill to commit murder in a gangster dispute or a labor dispute. He has already said he is going to vote for the bill, and the bill specifically exempts those things. The proponents of the bill are so careful, they are so afraid some court would construe it so as to include gangster murders and labor disputes, that in order to exempt them they wrote a provison of that kind in the law. "It may be murder, yes; it may be murder against men trying to work; it may be murder against men who are striking, but you shall not punish them under this act. We reserve that to our particular little group that we are going to look after, even if it beats us for reelection."

Gangsters! No wonder the Senator from New York wanted to offer this amendment. It does not touch the gangsters on Broadway, or over on Second Avenue, or down around the Battery; but if something happens down in my State, the Senator from New York is outraged. This will not get "Gyp the Blood." No; he and his gang will be free.

Mr. President, I rose simply to make it clear that at least one Senator voted to table this amendment because he was opposed to it. I have been a prosecuting officer. I have aided in preventing outbreaks of this kind. I am just as much in favor of protecting the life of a colored man in my State as I am in favor of protecting the life of a white man; but I am also interested in preserving the integrity of the Constitution and the integrity of the States. I do not want to take from my State the responsibility that is ours. I do not want to take off the shoulders of our citizenship their responsibility to see that their laws are enforced. I do not want to lift from the shoulders of a sheriff or a county judge or any other officer the duty that they themselves shall enforce the law, not because they fear some distant authority in Washington, not because they dread the gates of the penitentiary, but because, as citizens and as officers backed by a sound public opinion, they have the courage to enforce the laws that they are sworn to enforce. But back of this bill is the threat: "We, here in Washington, know better how to enforce your laws than you do. We, up here in Washington—this Federal establishment—will tell the States when and how they shall enforce their own laws."

Mr. President, that was not the spirit which has made America great. That is not the spirit that stimulates the responsibility of the individual citizen.

That is the doctrine of "Let George do it." We have been indulging in the doctrine of local responsibility and we have been making progress. Lynching has declined almost to disappearance.

Mr. DIETERICH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. DIETERICH. I desire to ask the Senator from Texas a question.

Mr. CONNALLY. I should like to hear the question. Will not the Senator speak loud enough so that I may hear it?

Mr. DIETERICH. The Senator may hear it. The bill provides that—

> Any assemblage of three or more persons which shall exercise or attempt to exercise by physical violence and without authority of law any power of correction or punishment over any citizen or citizens or other person or persons in the custody of any peace officer or suspected of, charged with, or convicted of the commission of any offense, with the purpose or consequence of preventing the apprehension or trial or punishment by law of such citizen or citizens, person or persons, shall constitute a "mob" within the meaning of this act. Any such violence by a mob which results in the death or maiming of the victim or victims thereof shall constitute "lynching" within the meaning of this act.

Can the Senator find where there is any geographical distinction in that, or any distinction as to race or color? Does not that apply generally and equally to all citizens?

Mr. CONNALLY. Oh, yes; if there are any colored men at the North Pole and we own the North Pole, it will apply; but they do not live at the North Pole, and the Senator knows it.

Mr. DIETERICH. Is that the answer the Senator desires to make to me in response to the question I asked him about the bill?

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senator from Illinois has asked a question the answer to which is so obvious that the Senator from Texas draws to himself no compliment by reason of the question having been asked. Of course, the language of the bill applies everywhere. If it did not, it would not be constitutional, in addition to its other unconstitutional features. The Senator would add just one more unconstitutional feature.

Mr. President, I wish to say that while I am against this bill on account of its unconstitutional features, I was also against attaching it to the bill of the Senator from Nevada because it would have resulted in involving that particular measure with another measure when it ought to be considered on its own merits.

I beg the pardon of the Senate for transgressing upon its time; but since numerous Senators have risen to forswear any intention, by voting to table the amendment, of indicating that they were against the amendment, I have felt it to be necessary that I outline my position as being one Senator who voted to table the amendment because he favored tabling it and wanted it to stay tabled.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I intend to vote for the pending bill because it represents the largest measure of railroad safety available under any current legislative plan in this particular field. Hearings held on the subject last year before the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce and recent investigations show that in general practice the railroads operate trains with less than 70 cars to a train, and that this practice is in the interest of safety. Accidents increase with the increase of the volume of business, causing the railroads to use trains longer than the average. I believe it is well by legislation to limit the number of cars per train to 70, although this is somewhat more than the general average of cars found in the trains throughout the Nation. I believe this bill is a step toward greater protection of life and limb on the railroads.

While I have the floor I wish to take this opportunity—because I am earnestly in favor of the McCarran bill, the pending measure, and the antilynching bill—to give my reason for voting this afternoon to table the antilynching bill as an amendment to the McCarran bill. I did not care to jeopardize both pieces of legislation.

The colored people of my State are law-abiding, God-fearing people, and the great majority of the voters in my State desire to see the antilynching bill enacted into law. At the very first opportunity I shall speak upon this subject and do everything I possibly can to bring the antilynching bill to a vote, and when it comes to a vote I shall vote for it.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I have listened with interest to the debate here today, and I have learned a good deal about lynching in the South, but I have not learned how the pending bill can possibly add to the safety of the employees of the railroads. That it will undoubtedly add to the danger of the public in the way of grade-crossing accidents I think there can be no question. That it will cost a very considerable sum of money I think there can be no doubt.

Who is going to pay the increased cost brought about by the enactment of the proposed legislation? My colleague has read a letter from the president of the Bangor & Aroostook Railroad, which is situated largely in Aroostook County and handles the great potato crops there. He has stated that the cost to the road would be between five and six hundred thousand dollars.

The passenger traffic of that road during the 5 years ending in 1934, owing to the increase in the number of automobiles all over the country, has decreased substantially 66 percent. The freight traffic has declined substantially 33 percent. Clearly that road is not in a condition to assume any added expenditure. Somebody has to pay for these added expenditures, and the somebody who will pay, of course, will be the consuming public through an increase in freight rates.

The people of my State are very vitally interested in this matter. I have received letters from farmers who are especially interested in the potato situation; I have received letters from railroad officials; I have received letters from manufacturers and from retailers—all against the bill. I have also received letters from some of the railroad men favoring it.

I can see no reason for the passage of the bill, and I move that it be recommitted to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I sincerely trust that the motion will not prevail, and will not receive any considerable support. The subject has been before the Congress of the United States for a long time, as stated by the chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce just a few moments ago. There has been full and fair opportunity for all parties to be heard before the Committee on Interstate Commerce. A motion to recommit is only a motion to defeat. A motion to recommit can accomplish nothing in the way of affording an opportunity for information.

Both the railroads and the employees have had ample opportunity to come before the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and they have come before that committee, and have submitted the evidence, and the evidence is of record. To recommit the bill at this time would simply be to defeat it. To return it to the committee would accomplish nothing; it would avail nothing.

Let us vote on this question fairly, let Senators look it in the face and say "yes" or "no", and we will be content with the outcome.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. I desire to ask the chairman of the subcommittee whether or not the amendment suggested by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] this morning, deferring the effective date to July 1, 1938, was accepted.

Mr. McCARRAN. It was accepted and adopted.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. And it has been adopted?

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] to recommit the bill.

Mr. McCARRAN. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN]. I do not know how he would vote if he were present. Therefore, I am obliged to withhold my vote.

Mr. McNARY (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the junior Senator from California [Mr. McADOO]. Not knowing how he would vote if present, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. VANDENBERG (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question if he were present, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. ASHURST. I announce that my colleague [Mr. HAYDEN] is unavoidably detained from the chamber. If present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BERRY], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN], the Senator from California [Mr. McADOO], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MOORE], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] are detained on important public business.

I am advised that if present the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] would vote "nay."

Mr. AUSTIN. I desire to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON] with the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER];

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY]; and

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS].

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON] and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], if present, would vote "yea", and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], if present, would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 17, nays 51, as follows:

YEAS—17

Andrews	Dieterich	King	Truman
Austin	George	Lodge	White
Bailey	Green	Maloney
Bulow	Hale	Radcliffe
Byrd	Holt	Townsend

NAYS—51

Adams	Connally	La Follette	Pepper
Ashurst	Copeland	Lee	Pittman
Barkley	Donahey	Lonergan	Pope
Bilbo	Duffy	Lundeen	Schwartz
Black	Ellender	McCarran	Schwellenbach
Bone	Frazier	McGill	Sheppard
Brown, Mich.	Gerry	McKellar	Smith
Brown, N. H.	Gillette	Minton	Stelwer
Bulkley	Harrison	Murray	Thomas, Okla.
Byrnes	Herring	Neely	Thomas, Utah
Capper	Hitchcock	Nye	Van Nuys
Caraway	Hughes	O'Mahoney	Wheeler
Chavez	Johnson, Colo.	Overton

NOT VOTING—27

Bankhead	Gibson	Logan	Shipstead
Berry	Glass	McAdoo	Smathers
Borah	Guffey	McNary	Tydings
Bridges	Hatch	Moore	Vandenberg
Burke	Hayden	Norris	Wagner
Clark	Johnson, Calif.	Reynolds	Walsh
Davis	Lewis	Russell

So Mr. HALE's motion to recommit the bill was rejected.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 2, line 3, after the word "terminals", it is proposed to insert "nor shall this act apply to freight trains conveying refrigeration cars loaded or to be used in conveying perishable commodities such as fruit or vegetables or their containers."

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I think that amendment explains itself. When we receive information, which is usually 3 or 4 days in advance, that a freeze or a blizzard is approaching from the north or northwest, we do not have time to count the number of freight cars and refrigerator cars that must be rushed into Florida in order to take care of perishable products. That applies especially to tomatoes and peppers, and to citrus fruits. The railroads in our part of the State have few hills and few curves. It is is just as easy for a freight train to pull 150 cars as it is to pull 70 cars.

I hope the amendment will prevail.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I have just one expression to make with reference to the amendment. If it is adopted, it will destroy the efficacy and the life of the entire bill. It should be rejected.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, I do not agree with the statement the Senator from Nevada has just made. A number of farmers in my State have protested against the entire bill just for the reason conveyed by the language of the amendment. When our fruit in Idaho has ripened and is ready to go to market, it cannot await the convenience of the trains, particularly when there is only one railroad running through the State. There is no competition in my State. The Oregon Short Line, which is now a part of the Union Pacific system, covers almost the entire State, and particularly the portion of the State where fruit is grown. Our cherries and plums in particular, and to some extent our apples, and to a very large extent our peaches, are affected by this bill. Therefore, I think the amendment might well be adopted in order to take care of perishable fruits and vegetables. I am very strongly of the opinion that it should be adopted. I do not believe that it would seriously affect the operation of the bill. I believe some farmers and fruit growers would be seriously injured if such an amendment should not be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS].

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The bill was passed.

FAIR LABOR STANDARDS IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE

Mr. BLACK. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2475.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the bill (S. 2475) to provide for the establishment of fair labor standards in employments in and affecting interstate commerce, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Education and Labor with an amendment.

CONSOLIDATED AIRCRAFT CORPORATION—MOTION TO RECONSIDER

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed the bill (S. 1881) for the relief of the Consolidated Aircraft Corporation.

The bill proposes to appropriate $89,000 for the relief of an aircraft corporation, and I desire to examine the measure further.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion will be entered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. KING, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Ralph J. Rivers, of Alaska, to be United States attorney for the fourth division, district of Alaska.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Joseph B. Eastman, of Massachusetts, to be an Interstate Commerce Commissioner for a term expiring December 31, 1943.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

IN THE ARMY

The legislative clerk proceed to read sundry nominations in the Army.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I ask unanimous consent that nominations in the Army may be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, nominations in the Army are confirmed en bloc.

The Senate resumed legislative session.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Tuesday, July 27, 1937, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate July 26 (legislative day of July 22), 1937

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION

Joseph B. Eastman to be an Interstate Commerce Commissioner.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, JULY 26, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock meridian.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who art the Father of us all, may we be loyal to the truth we know and faithfully follow the way that commends itself to our conscience. Make us chaste in our speech and pure in our desires, and let us live in the gentle light which breaks from the cross of the crucified One. Take us, our Father, into Thy care and keeping; bless our Speaker, the leaders, and all the Members of the Congress. We pray Thee that Thy spirit may direct them through all the problems that may arise. Oh, let us feel the strength borne of struggle and the peace wrested from trial. As we again set forth upon our labors, may our spirits be in tune with the joyous and the good, for the world is full of music if we only have music in our hearts. In the name of our Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, July 23, 1937, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 2093. An act for the relief of Marion Shober Phillips.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 7472. An act to provide additional revenue for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the foregoing bill, requests a conference with the House thereon, and appoints Mr. KING, Mr. McCARRAN, Mr. TYDINGS, Mr. CAPPER, and Mr. AUSTIN to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 2789. An act to provide for the establishment and maintenance of a regional research laboratory for the development of industrial uses for agricultural products; the first unit to be devoted to the development of industrial uses for cotton and cotton products; additional units to be provided for the study of other crops as additional funds are provided.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 122]

Amlie	Douglas	Keller	Robertson
Andresen, Minn.	Doxey	Kelly, N. Y.	Ryan
Arnold	Drewry, Va.	Kloeb	Schuetz
Bates	Driver	Kniffin	Sirovich
Biermann	Duncan	Lambeth	Smith, Maine
Bigelow	Eaton	McGroarty	Smith, Va.
Boehne	Ellenbogen	McLean	Smith, W. Va.
Brewster	Faddis	Maas	Starnes
Buckley, N. Y.	Fernandez	Maloney	Steagall
Burch	Fulmer	Mason	Sullivan
Cannon, Wis.	Gilchrist	Meeks	Sweeney
Celler	Gingery	Millard	Taylor, Colo.
Chapman	Goldsborough	O'Brien, Mich.	Taylor, Tenn.
Clark, N. C.	Green	Parsons	Teigan
Cluett	Greenwood	Pettengill	Treadway
Cole, N. Y.	Hancock, N. Y.	Peyser	Weaver
Crosby	Hancock, N. C.	Plumley	Wene
Crosser	Harlan	Reece, Tenn.	White, Idaho
Culkin	Hartley	Reed, N. Y.	Withrow
Cummings	Hill, Ala.	Reilly	Wood
DeMuth	Hill, Wash.	Rich	Zimmerman
Dirksen	Jenks, N. H.	Richards

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and forty-four Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

By unanimous consent, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and insert in connection therewith correspondence I have had with the Federal Trade Commission and a memorandum by the Federal Trade Commission.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PARADE OF UNEMPLOYED

Mr. VOORHIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS. Mr. Speaker, on Friday last the House heard a report of a parade of the unemployed. I have asked for these 2 minutes to call the attention of the House to another parade of the unemployed—a parade this time which has been and still is composed of thousands of our citizens leaving old homes where they were unable to make a living or to obtain relief to the State of California; a parade which we understand has carried some fifty or seventy-five thousand homeless, wandering, penniless people out of the Dust Bowl area and other portions of the country in search of some kind of a home or a job. This parade spells human want and tragic need for these American citizens searching for a home and a living; and it spells a terrific social and financial problem for the State of California, burdened as it is with the problem of relief for its own people plus these additional thousands. The situation is one which demands some kind of constructive action. The best action will be the rehabilitation of those folks in their old homes; but something must be done about it, and what that something is I shall discuss in the RECORD either tomorrow or the next day. I am calling the matter to the attention of the House, not only for that reason but also to show that there is in the American people and the American unemployed that spirit of searching for something better that will not die. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, at the conclusion of the last of the special orders that have been entered, which is the address of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point a reply to a letter which was written to me by Rabbi Wise, which concerns the persecution of the Hebrews, Polish, and other poor people.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I object to having these extraneous matters appearing in the regular RECORD.

Mr. DUNN. But, Mr. Speaker, that is not an extension. It is my own reply.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], as the Chair understands, is objecting because the gentleman from Pennsylvania requested to have the remarks inserted in the RECORD at this point, instead of in the Appendix of the RECORD.

Mr. SNELL. Where they belong.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania modify his request?

Mr. DUNN. I modify the request, then, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD, as indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BOREN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand the gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his own remarks in the RECORD. May I suggest to the majority leader that at this time of the session it might save some time if all Members had permission to extend their own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD as often as they see fit. The majority leader and I have discussed this matter.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR], if that is in order, it seems to me that is going pretty far. It never has been done before.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I beg to differ with the gentleman; it has been done toward the close of a number of sessions.

Mr. SNELL. But we are no nearer the close of the session now than we were 3 months ago, and the gentleman knows it. We are running around in circles; we do not know where we are at, and there is no man on the majority side who can tell us.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. We would not run around in circles if I had my way; we would be out of here in 2 weeks. [Applause.]

Mr. SNELL. When you get to the point that you know where you are going and what you are doing, then it might be in order to make such a request.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. The thought in my mind was that it would save a good deal of time rather than to have so many Members asking to revise and extend their remarks.

Mr. SNELL. When there is nothing to do, there is no sense in saving time

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial commenting upon a statement I made before the Philippine Joint Affairs Commission, printed in the Manila Bulletin under date of Monday, June 21, and another editorial printed in the Philippine American Advocate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DUNN. Will the Speaker advise me if the suggestion made by our distinguished colleague from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR], that all Members have the right to extend their own remarks during the balance of the session, applies to me so that I can extend my remarks, even though the gentleman from Michigan objected?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the gentleman from New York did not submit that as a request. It has not been passed on by the House.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from New York rise?

Mr. SNELL. To make an inquiry of the majority leader regarding the program.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is recognized for that purpose.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, can the majority leader inform us what the program is going to be for the balance of the week, if he feels at liberty to tell us?

Mr. RAYBURN. I certainly feel at liberty to tell the House any time I know what the program is. My understanding is that the program for today will be that the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. PALMISANO] to send the District tax bill to conference, that the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON] to take up the conference report on the Interior Department bill. After these matters have been disposed of, it is my understanding that the Bonneville Dam bill is the unfinished business. After the Bonneville Dam bill is disposed of, the next order of business will be the consideration of a bill carrying out one part of the reorganization program, a bill providing additional secretaries for the President.

Mr. SNELL. Does the gentleman think this bill important enough to keep us here in the middle of summer to pass?

Mr. RAYBURN. We certainly are going to be here tomorrow.

Mr. SNELL. I thought probably we were.

Mr. RAYBURN. Then there will be Calendar Wednesday, and we shall also be here on Wednesday. There certainly will not be a concurrent resolution for adjournment passed before Wednesday. As soon as I find out what business is to be brought up for consideration on Thursday I will make public announcement of it.

Mr. SNELL. If the gentleman can tell the Congress, does he know anything definite about final adjournment?

Mr. RAYBURN. Not yet.

Mr. SNELL. The prospects do not look very bright?

Mr. RAYBURN. The prospects look bright for us to adjourn within a reasonable time. [Laughter.]

Mr. SNELL. That rumor has been going the rounds for 3 months. It seems to me that it is the business of the majority leader to have definite projects on the program and to work for adjournment at an early date.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Before next winter.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is speaking by indulgence of the Chair.

Mr. RAYBURN. As soon as the majority leader is advised of the facts he will make an announcement.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA TAX BILL

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 7472) to provide additional revenue for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment, disagree to the Senate amendment, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. PALMISANO, KENNEDY of Maryland, NICHOLS, DIRKSEN, and SHORT.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL—1938

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 6958) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nevada?

There was no objection.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate and House amendments to Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. 6958) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 74 and 121.

The committee of conference report in disagreement Senate amendment numbered 89.

The committee of conference also report in disagreement Senate amendments numbered 93 and 95, and the amendments of the House thereto.

ALVA B. ADAMS,
GERALD P. NYE,
FREDERICK STEIWER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate and House amendments to Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. 6958) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

On amendment no. 74: Strikes out language inserted by the Senate providing that section 2 of the act of August 12, 1935, relating to Indian claims, shall not apply to the Five Civilized Tribes.

On amendment no. 121: Strikes out the appropriation of $16,500 for a fish hatchery for Glacier National Park, Mont., inserted by the Senate.

Amendments in disagreement

The committee of conference report in disagreement the following amendments:

On amendment no. 89: Appropriating funds for continuing construction of the Gila reclamation project in Arizona.

On amendment no. 93: Appropriating funds for administrative expenses in connection with the construction of reclamation projects.

On amendment no. 95: Correcting a total.

JED JOHNSON,
J. G. SCRUGHAM,
EMMET O'NEAL,
JAMES M. FITZPATRICK,
CHAS. H. LEAVY,
ROBERT F. RICH,
W. P. LAMBERTSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Speaker, there is a unanimous agreement on the part of the majority and minority conferees for both Houses. I am very hopeful that the House can give support to the agreements. They have been worked out very carefully and fairly, after a most thorough and exhaustive examination into the subject. The Senate has receded on amendments 74 and 121.

Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the report.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 89: Page 75, after line 23, insert:
"Gila project, Arizona, $1,250,000; said Gila project including the waters to be diverted and used thereby and the lands and structures for the diversion and storage thereof, to be subject to the provisions of the Boulder Canyon Project Act of December 21, 1928, and subject to and controlled by the provisions of the Colorado River compact signed at Santa Fe, N. Mex., November 24, 1922."

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SCRUGHAM moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 89 with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment, insert "$700,000."

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, week before last when the Interior Department conference report was up for consideration, this House voted down the Gila project by a vote of 191 to 123, as I remember it. While the initial appropriation for this project is only $500,000, the total cost of the first unit will be $20,000,000 and the total cost of the four units will run anywhere between $80,000,000 and $125,000,000.

In spite of the demand on the part of the Secretary of Agriculture for the passage of a bill to permit the control of crops and prices, the House has passed innumerable projects for reclamation and has appropriated millions of dollars to bring new land into cultivation. This particular unit involves 125,000 acres at a cost of approximately $160 an acre. It also involves land on which, as I understand it, there are no people living and substantially no agricultural development whatever. In the face of the economic situation in which the country finds itself, how we can continue the policy of bringing into cultivation land which will produce wheat, corn, cotton, grapes, fruits, and vegetables in competition with land in private ownership and in private cultivation, I cannot understand.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNELL. Was there any new information that came to the committee which would lead the House, or should lead the House, to change the position it took a week or two weeks ago?

Mr. TABER. There was just this situation, as I understand it: The House voted upon approximately 15 items of substance in disagreement. It yielded upon all matters of substance except two—the Oklahoma Indian proposition and this one. As I understand it, the only thing that came before the conferees was the fact the Senate did not want to recede in respect to those two amendments.

Mr. SNELL. There is no new information which the committee received that should make the House change its position?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. If the gentleman will yield, the information came to the conferees that $3,050,000 had been spent and part of it contracted for and on June 27 this year the President approved this project because of the fact it had already been started and millions of dollars had been spent on it.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman states the President approved of it; but the Congress never has, and now the President wants to shift the burden on to Congress, as I understand it.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. The President approved this project under section 8 of the Boulder Canyon Act.

Mr. SNELL. The Congress has gone definitely on record against it; and the only information, as the gentleman from New York said, is that money has been spent on this project without our approval. Now he wants us to take it over. That is the same argument that is always used, and there is no basis to it whatever.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It is nothing new.

Mr. SNELL. No; I know it is nothing new over there.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. There is nothing new in this, because it happened in the gentleman's administration, as well.

Mr. SNELL. It has become a habit over on that side for you fellows to spend the money and then ask the Congress to approve the expenditure.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] 3 additional minutes.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, this is exactly the same as the situation that has always come right back to us in connection with these reclamation projects that have been embarked upon without regard to the economic situation and without a vote of the Congress approving them.

This matter was considered by the House when the bill was up originally and the Chair sustained a point of order against the proposition, holding that it was not authorized by law.

I cannot see how this House, when it has yielded on all but 2 out of about 15 separate amendments, can afford to yield on a proposition which involves in the long run $80,000,000.

I understand all the work that has been done by allotments of relief funds can supply water to certain parts of this territory without any further expenditure. There is no sense in opening up all of this acreage without any excuse for its cultivation whatever.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the House will insist upon its disagreement to Senate amendment no. 89.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. As I understand, this project was started with relief money?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. In other words, the nose of the camel is under the tent to the extent of $3,000,000, and now the President approves what he has already done and asks the Congress to make it possible to spend $80,000,000 more.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Is it not a fact Congress approved of this in a previous act?

Mr. TABER. The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union ruled that it had not been authorized by law.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SHORT. Is it not a fact the project was stricken out on a point of order when the bill was originally considered, and was later voted down by the House when the conference report was brought in?

Mr. TABER. Yes; by a vote of 191 to 123, 2 weeks ago.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Then we are in this situation, as I understand it: The Congress has already gone on record as disapproving the proposition. Then, just because the Executive has said, "I have spent $3,000,000, and now I want you to change this", the conferees have retreated in the face of this order from the President, and now we are called back here to undo what we did in a regular and proper legislative way.

Mr. TABER. That is just it. We ought to stand up for the rights of the House in connection with legislation of this kind.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON].

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I am in thorough accord with the view expressed by the minority leader. This continuous procession of reclamation projects which is being brought into the House is becoming a joke. We are bringing thousands and thousands of acres of new land into culitvation. Much of this land will come into competition with sections of the country where the Government is spending millions and millions of dollars in curtailing production. How can you reconcile and justify this?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. If the gentleman has ever gone into any of the hotels down there and eaten some good bread made from Minnesota wheat he will realize we are a market for the products you produce in Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. That is no argument at all. Of course, everybody eats wheat. I do not suppose you have yet been reduced to the extremity where you have to live on cactus.

This is known as the Gila project. It is named after the Gila monster, which is a poisonous lizard that inhabits this section of the country. It seems to me before we appropriate money to drown out these poisonous lizards the matter should be referred to the humane society. I will admit this is a monstrous thing, and it is also poison to the Treasury, so it is well named the Gila project. I hope the House will turn it down and give these poor Gila monsters down in Arizona and New Mexico a new lease on life. Let us leave a little of the country out there in its natural state, and for succeeding generations to bring this land under cultivation if 200 or 500 years from now they need more acreage. We should not try to subdue this entire continent in one or two generations.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the House will insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Speaker, there has been an amazing amount of misinformation voiced here today, and a total lack of familiarity with the facts has been shown. This Gila project is fully authorized by law, and especially by the Reclamation Act. The money is paid not from the United States Treasury but from the reclamation fund. The reclamation fund is raised through sales of public lands and royalties from oil lands. Three million fifty thousand dollars has been allocated to this project, and the work is already well advanced. The products to be raised are largely citrus fruits and generally do not come in competition with agricultural products from other parts of the country.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman read to the House the law which authorizes the Gila project?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Yes. The Reclamation Act, to start with and in addition by section 8 of the Boulder Dam Act. Then, in addition, the President has approved it under a finding of feasibility, which was dated June 27.

Mr. SNELL. I do not understand that that general act recognized this individual project.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. It certainly does. I can give the gentleman the quotation, if he wishes. I have it here.

This project is authorized by the Boulder Canyon Act, section 8. This is one authorization. Secondly, it was authorized under the reclamation law, and the findings of feasibility have been duly made by the Secretary of the Interior and approved by the President. There is no question whatever but what this project is fully authorized by law.

Mr. SNELL. Of course, that depends on the construction given that act, and that is not the usual way we have authorized such projects.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. It is the usual way these projects have been authorized. I know of no other project which has any more complete and unqualified authorization.

Mr. SNELL. It is not the usual authorization, and the gentleman knows it.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. This has been handled in exactly the same way as other reclamation projects.

Mr. SNELL. This project, when considered by the House in committee, was ruled out because it had not been authorized by law.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but I must differ with him.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SABATH. The statement has been made by a gentleman on the other side that before this project is completed it will cost the Government between $80,000,000 and $120,000,000.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Absolutely not for the unit here under consideration.

Mr. SABATH. Can the gentleman give the House information about the approximate cost of this project when completed?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Yes; I have it here in detail. The dam, head works, and desilting works, $1,397,000, the canal system $4,217,000, and the pumping plant, distribution system, and transmission lines will bring the total up to $20,000,000 and not $75,000,000. This is the official statement from Mr. Page of the Reclamation Service applying to this project.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. I yield.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Is it not a fact that the amount of $20,000,000 to which the gentleman has just referred covers only the first unit in the project?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. There are three other units that are practicable to be built later on, but I am giving the figures with respect to this particular project.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. And the total for all the units has been estimated at from $80,000,000 to $125,000,000.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. If everything practicable is put in, but that is hardly a fair way of expressing the cost of this unit.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. And the total additional acreage to be brought into cultivation is estimated at some 585,000 acres?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. No; 150,000 acres.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. One hundred and fifty thousand for unit no. 1, but the total project contemplates additional acreage of about 585,000 acres.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. We are not dealing with three or four extra units, but simply with the particular unit involved here.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. If we start on one unit we shall, of course, have the usual pressure to finish the entire project.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. Are there any farmers on this land now?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Yes; to some extent on adjacent lands of similar character.

Mr. MICHENER. As I understand it, this is new land not now under cultivation.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. The 150,000 acres are not in cultivation at this time.

Mr. MICHENER. Are there roads and highways and other improvements on this land?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. What does the gentleman mean?

Mr. MICHENER. As a matter of fact, and as I understand, this is so-called wild land on which there is no improvement at this time, and if this provision goes through, you are not only going to allow the $80,000,000 for the reclamation part of the project but the Federal Government is also going to be asked to build roads and make other improvements, and mark my words, when we come back here with the appropriation bills in future years, you will ask for thousands of dollars additional to complete what you are here projecting.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. The gentleman has a very lively imagination.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. How much land will this put under cultivation?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. One hundred and fifty thousand acres, largely citrus-fruit lands.

Mr. DOWELL. That is just the first unit.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. That is the unit which we are referring to now.

Mr. DOWELL. What will be the total acreage when the entire project is completed?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. One hundred and fifty thousand acres will be the complete acreage of this project unit.

Mr. DOWELL. Is not the total acreage over 500,000 acres?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. There is no use in bringing in three additional proposals which are not now before the House.

Mr. DOWELL. I am trying to get additional information about this project. How much is this going to bring under cultivation?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. One hundred and fifty thousand acres.

Mr. DOWELL. Ultimately will it not be over 500,000 acres?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Something like 500,000 to 600,000 acres are capable of being put under cultivation.

If the gentleman will allow me to refer to a brief statement, probably his questions will be answered.

Mr. DOWELL. Is it not true that the farmers are asking Congress to pass legislation at this session of Congress—and I think it ought to be passed—to take care of the surplus they are already raising on farm lands now under cultivation, and yet the gentleman wants to put 500,000 additional acres under cultivation to compete with our present acreage?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. This particular project has no connection with the other matters of legislation you are attempting to bring into the discussion.

Now, if I may read a brief statement——

Mr. DOWELL. Let me ask the gentleman another question.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Let me read this statement:

> The lands to be irrigated by the Gila project are Federal lands, will be administered by the Federal Government, and will be subject in all particulars to the Colorado River compact and the Boulder Canyon Project Act, which are Federal law.
>
> California has by law and by contract limited herself to the use of not more than 4,400,000 acre-feet of water from the Colorado River out of the 7,500,000 acre-feet allocated to the lower basin by the Boulder Canyon Project Act of December 21, 1928.
> Therefore the 600,000 acre-feet of water proposed to be utilized for the Gila project cannot by law be used in California. Since this water is required by law to be discharged through the spillways at Boulder Dam, it cannot be used by the upper basin.
> The water cannot be utilized in California, and if not used otherwise, the 600,000 acre-feet of water will go into Mexico and will be lost to this country as an economic asset.

Mr. DOWELL. The gentleman is aware of the fact that any food products raised on the farms of this country are going to add to the surplus of farm products?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. No.

Mr. DOWELL. The gentleman has stated that over $3,000,000 of relief money has been put into this project.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. No; that is not correct.

Mr. DOWELL. What did the gentleman state?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. One million eight hundred thousand dollars of relief money was allocated, and $1,250,000 was the appropriation made last year by this House.

Mr. DOWELL. How much relief money?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. One million eight hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. DOWELL. We appropriated that money for the relief of those who were in need.

The gentlemen on the other side were doing what they could to keep Congress from earmarking any of the relief money, because it was needed for those who are in need. Does the gentleman think that putting 600,000 acres of land under cultivation and paying over $80,000,000 of the Government's money to put it under cultivation is going to be any relief to the farmers of the country?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. This is one of the most meritorious and substantial relief measures ever proposed by this Government.

Mr. DOWELL. If the gentleman is trying to care for the farmer's surplus, he is not going to put 600,000 acres additional under cultivation.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Did the gentleman hear the speech made by the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS], this morning at the beginning of the session? That is an answer to the gentleman's question.

Mr. DOWELL. I am talking about the surplus.

Mr. VOORHIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Yes.

Mr. VOORHIS. I think one of the things that needs to be borne in mind is the fact that farming has been throughout the years one of the main means of livelihood for the American people. It is not merely a matter of producing large surpluses, but it is the means of enabling people to make a living, and we have thousands of people who, in accordance with any sane problem of helping the farmer, will have to be removed from the lands on which they now are.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. The answer to a previous quetsion I asked the gentleman I understood him to say that some 50,000 acres of this land is already under cultivation. In the letter which he just read he stated that this is all Federal land. How could that land be under cultivation if it is Federal land?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. I did not say that 50,000 acres of this particular unit were under cultivation.

Mr. SNELL. Then I misunderstood the gentleman. How much is under cultivation?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. I do not know that any of it is under cultivation.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. Reclamation has its place in the picture, and I am one of those who have always wanted to help reclamation when it is needed. I want to impress upon the gentleman who comes from a reclamation State that he is killing the goose that lays the golden egg, because the goose cannot keep on laying golden eggs as it has in the last 4 years, because the sentiment of the farmers is such that they will rise up in such protest against this continuous spending of money to bring more land under cultivation and make paupers out of them that you are going to ruin your reclamation prospects in the years to come, and I beseech the gentleman to abide by the decision of the House as expressed when it voted on this project the other day.

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Yes.

Mr. FORD of California. If any section of the country ought to object to this particular project, it is California, because the primary purpose of it is to raise citrus fruits, but we think we have an economic sense and a national belief that whenever you develop one part of the country you develop the whole United States. We are not opposing this because citrus fruits will be raised there, but we believe that the citrus fruits that will be raised there will add wealth to Arizona, and adding wealth to Arizona will help the whole United States.

Mr. MICHENER. Oh, the gentleman speaks for a small part of the city of Los Angeles and has no authority whatever to speak for agriculture or the rest of the country. We grow citrus fruit in Florida and in other places, and the gentleman, representing a small territory in the city of Los Angeles, consumes citrus fruit and in no sense represents the views of the majority of the farmers of the country.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZPATRICK].

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, when the hearings were held before the subcommittee I took quite an interest and asked many questions. One of the questions I asked was whether this would be self-liquidating, and if it would cost the taxpayers any money. I was informed that it would be self-liquidating and that anything produced there would not come in competition with other farm products of the country.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes; but I want time to finish my remarks. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. TABER. Does the gentleman realize that the Commodity Surplus Corporation had to go out into the market and did go out into the market and purchase millions of dollars' worth of citrus fruits and distribute them gratuitously, because there was such a surplus of those things.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That was because of the depression which was brought on by the Republican Party, which cut down the purchasing power of the people. [Applause on Democratic side.]

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Not at present. I will yield later.

Mr. Speaker, last Thursday the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARRY] brought in a resolution to appropriate money to print thousands of copies of a report made by a committee appointed by the President to make an investigation of the present and coming machine age and mass production. For some 30 or 40 years we have failed to legislate to meet the machine age and mass production. That is what our country is suffering fron. today. If Congress had passed legislation to meet the machine age and regulate the hours of labor, we would not be suffering from the unemployment conditions that exist in our country today. I hope the time is not far distant when we will legislate to that end. I think this project that we are considering today is a step in the right direction. If we can develop land of this kind and put men and women back to the soil to make a living instead of going into the large industrial cities as they are doing today, our country will benefit greatly by it. The products produced on this land will not come into competition with other farm products. The trouble has been for the last 25 or 30 years that the youth of the farming districts have been going into the industrial sections of our country and thereby increasing the population and causing unemployment in this machine age. This project is a step forward to encourage the youth of the farming districts to remain on the farms and make a living. If we are going to meet the machine age and mass production, we should irrigate these lands and encourage the youth of the farming districts to stay there and not go into the industrial sections, which is the cause of most of the trouble today. [Applause.]

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I yield.

Mr. COLDEN. Is it not a fact that if Arizona is unable to conserve these waters, they will flow down into Mexico and be utilized by American "economic royalists" on the other side of the boundary line?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is true.

Mr. COLDEN. And the water will forever be lost to the United States of America?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Positively so. I want to congratulate the delegation from California, whose State produces citrus fruits, in supporting this legislation today. I represent an eastern district. However, I do not feel that I was elected to represent my district alone, although I have a great interest in it and would not do anything that I thought would be harmful to the people of my district. At the same time I feel that I am a representative of the 48 States of the Union [applause], and if I can assist in enacting legislation that will be beneficial to our country as a whole, so that we can get out of this depression and put our people back to work so they can make a living, whether it is in Arizona or New York, I am for that kind of legislation. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER].

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, we have just listened to the farmer-statesman from the Bronx in New York City. [Applause and laughter.] That farmer-statesman from the great city tells us there was a surplus of citrus fruit last year. He admits that, but——

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I did not say anything of the kind. A Member on your side made the statement.

Mr. MICHENER. Yes, the gentleman admits there was a surplus, because he cannot deny it, and charges the Republican Party with the responsibility of creating that surplus last year.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. No; responsibility for the depression that we have been suffering from for the last 6 or 7 years.

Mr. MICHENER. Has the gentleman finished with his courteous interruption?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I would like to correct the gentleman when he is accusing me of something I did not say.

Mr. MICHENER. If the gentleman has finished I will proceed.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I never misquote you or anybody else.

Mr. MICHENER. Has the gentleman finished? [Laughter.]

Now, we had a surplus of citrus fruit last year, and this Congress was asked for, and granted, authority to take Government money and buy that surplus citrus fruit on the market and give to the city districts from which the gentleman from New York comes, in the way of relief. The gentleman is a member of the appropriations committee and knows that. Is the gentleman interested in the farmer getting a price for his product, or, as a city representative, is he interested in his city constituents getting citrus fruit and other competitive products that will be grown on this land, at the lowest cost possible, regardless of the price the farmer receives?

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield.

Mr. MAY. As I recall, we appropriated $500,000,000 to curtail production by the farmers all over the country. Since then we have sent the Commodity Credit Corporation out to buy up and control this mass production, and yet the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZPATRICK] argues that we ought to put 600,000 more acres into production in order to solve mass production.

Mr. MICHENER. Yes. I might supplement what the gentleman said about that. We did appropriate $500,000 last year. This year we have appropriated $900,000 more to buy this surplus. This is the taxpayers' money. Then you are asking us to put the camel's nose under the tent again, to appropriate $80,000,000 more to create more surpluses, that next year we will be asked to buy to give to the people whom we put out of business by this legislation this year. Why, it is not only inconsistent but it is silly, it is ridiculous.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield.

Mr. SHORT. I may say for the information of our Bronx farmer friend, the gentleman from New York, that citrous fruit is not the only product that will be grown in this area. Wheat will be grown, too, in direct competition with the wheat farmers of Kansas, Missouri, and Minnesota. Corn will be grown in direct competition with the farmers in Nebraska, Iowa, and Illinois. Berries will be grown in direct competition with every farmer in my district, and cotton will be grown in direct competition with the farmers of the South. This House has already rejected this proposition on two different occasions. Now we are asked to pass it since the boys in Colorado have got what they want.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. This talk about the camel getting his nose under the tent is terribly out of date, for there is not a piece of that tent that is less than 10 feet from the ground. [Laughter.]

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I hope the Members will vote as they voted the other day when they understood this proposition, that they will not be influenced, that they will not be controlled, that they will be the same men when they vote today, that they will exercise the same judgment—their own judgment—that they exercised in voting upon this very proposition less than 2 weeks ago. Why the change? Oh, for the return of the day when Congress will again function in its own right and according to the dictates of its own conscience. [Applause.]

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEAVY].

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, I feel that perhaps I ought to take a certain amount of blame for the situation surrounding the Gila project, for I was a member of the Interior Department Subcommittee on Appropriations. I am deeply interested in irrigation and reclamation, coming from one of the great western reclamation States. I had the privilege of interrogating Mr. Page, Commissioner of Reclamation, and other witnesses, and made the record upon which the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, during consideration of the Interior bill in the House, ruled out this project on a point of order because it was not authorized, according to the record. I made that record, and I am willing to accept the blame. With more experience, perhaps I could have made a better record. In the recent conference between the Senate and the House we had before us a report from the Commissioner of Irrigation showing that $1,800,000 was allocated from relief funds to the Gila project more than a year ago and that Congress last year appropriated $1,250,000, and showing that work has been done on some portions of this project to the extent of 50 percent.

Had it not been for my own error—I am going to have to decline to answer questions because I have but 5 minutes and I want to cover this ground, not because I am afraid I could not answer them—had it not been for my own error, this Gila project would not have gone out on a point of order but would have been passed along with the rest of the bill.

On its merits, Mr. Speaker, I know that it stands with any project in America; let me say, incidentally, that it is wrong, and I know my good Republican friends realize surely that it is wrong, to say we are taking money out of the Federal Treasury to build these projects with no thought of ever having it retired. I say it is wrong because the record of 30 years shows that the reclamation projects of the United States have paid back 98.8 percent of all construction charges that are current and due. They have paid 99.1 percent of all maintenance charges, current and due. The record substantiates the figures I am giving, and this record can be found on pages 147 and 148 of the hearings of the Interior Department bill for 1938.

If we do not use this water, they are going to use it in Mexico. This is how that situation arises: We built Boulder Dam and impounded millions of acre-feet of water. When we did so, we steadied the flow of the Colorado River below the dam. At this season of the year, under natural conditions, the Colorado River would run with little water down into Old Mexico. Now, however, with the construction and completion of the dam, there is a substantial summer flow of water. Water is life in the West. Mexicans have the identical kind of land that Arizonans have. If they use that water first, then we cannot use it on this side, even though we created the condition, that is, made the surplus summer water possible through the construction of Boulder Dam. The same type of crops that are raised in Arizona will be raised across the line.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. LEAVY. The question may be asked if Mexico would not do that anyway, even if we go ahead and finish this project? No; I do not believe they would for the reason that throughout the West since the earliest days it has been recognized that he who uses water first for a beneficial purpose has a prior right to it. We have firmly and irrevocably builded this principle of law into the water code, both National and State.

That is the law of every Western State, and that is the law we have to recognize in any international controversy. If we permit Mexico to use that water first, then we must recognize its rights as prior to our own, and the great dam we have built would avail us nothing. The increased summer flow of water would go into old Mexico to enrich that Nation, its people, and perhaps a few selfish American citizens who have acquired extensive holdings across the international boundary.

May I stress one other point? The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], the great watchdog of the Federal Treasury, and a splendid gentleman, though we disagree violently on matters of economy, is one of the most able and useful Members of this great body. He has fixed convictions and the courage to fight for them. And I should also refer to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LAMBERTSON], a fine Member, too, but never known to be a friend of reclamation. They have each approved this report. This is a different matter from the one that was submitted and which the House recently voted down. This carries only $700,000 instead of $1,250,000, as I think it should have carried. Arizona's very able Representative, JOHN MURDOCK, has made one of the most masterful and brilliant fights for this deserving project. His people have reason to be proud of him. I am glad to lend my feeble efforts to support him and to rectify an unintentional error on my part when the original record was made on this case.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, may I say we will make a serious mistake if we refuse to extend credit to helpless little Arizona and not permit her to add to the national wealth by the development of the splendid land she has there. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. AMLIE].

Mr. AMLIE. Mr. Speaker, it is my intention to vote for this project. I want to devote my remarks to the subject of the inconsistency that has been charged by Republican Members. I am willing to grant that there is an apparent inconsistency in paying farmers for taking land out of cultivation, while we are going ahead with irrigation projects to bring more land into cultivation.

But I should like to ask whether this same inconsistency that characterizes the activities of the Government in irrigation matters would not also apply to the private business revival which Republican leaders expect would take place if the Government were to balance its Budget. Briefly, we cannot expect any revival of normal prosperity until private investors again spend from six to eight billion dollars a year on new capital investment projects. It is the argument of the Republicans and other conservative leaders that the reason private investors are not spending from six to eight billion dollars a year on capital goods is that they are afraid to do so while the Government Budget is unbalanced.

Col. Leonard P. Ayres, of Cleveland, has frequently pointed out to the country that there is what he terms a backlog of $65,000,000,000 in the investment field. He assumes, of course, that under normal conditions American investors would be investing from six to eight billion dollars a year instead of the $1,000,000,000 that will probably be reinvested this year, and much less during the past 5 years.

But would there be any sense in private investors further increasing the productive capacity of the country by building new factories and machines when our present productive equipment is operated at only 60 or 70 percent of full capacity? In other words, while the Republicans call attention to the inconsistency of the Government's bringing more land into cultivation when the people lack the purchasing power to buy the agricultural products that are now being produced. Would not the same line of reasoning effectively preclude private investors from building more factories when the factories which they now own are operating at only part capacity? As a matter of fact, the very arguments which the rugged individualists have used against the Government's spending money for irrigation projects would apply with even greater force in preventing these same rugged individualists from risking their own money in new capital investments to increase a plant capacity already overbuilt.

If the Republicans would bother to carry out their line of reasoning they would find that abundance, either by Government initiative or private initiative, is effectively excluded. They must, therefore, be prepared to say that they favor scarcity, that they favor producing no more than people can afford to buy, whether it is produced by the Government or by private management, without regard to how limited the purchasing power of the people may be.

Mr. Speaker, I have come to the point where I believe that the important consideration is the needs of the people, rather than the effective demand of the market. If we were to work out a remedy now according to traditional ways for the dairy farmers in my district, we should have to greatly reduce the dairy output, because the American people cannot afford to buy at a decent price even the dairy products that are now being produced. If we were to give all of the American people all the dairy products called for by the liberal diet worked out by the United States Department of Agriculture, we should have to increase our milk production 75 percent, our cheese production 70 percent, and our butter production 100 percent. If we were to give all the American people a liberal diet, we should have to increase poultry production by 35 percent, meat by 10 or 20 percent, vegetables by 25 percent, and fruit by 50 percent. We are not producing half the citrus fruit that the American people need, though much more than they can afford to buy.

I have come to the point in my thinking where I am willing to go ahead and have the Government build the plant that is necessary to produce the citrus fruit, the vegetables, dairy products, and so forth, that are needed if we are to give the American people a decent standard of living. Having built the plant, I am satisfied that we will then be able to see to it that the American people get the purchasing power with which to take over these foodstuffs and use them to raise their standard of living. In other words, I have come to the point where I am ready to abandon the scarcity system and give support to a program that looks to an abundance of production and a decent standard of living for all of the American people. In making this statement I am not thinking of the immediate interests of my district, which is primarily a dairy district, but, like the gentleman from New York, I am speaking in terms of the welfare of all the American people and a high standard of living for all those people. [Applause.]

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LAMBERTSON].

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, may I say a word in answer to my good friend, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEAVY], who said that I, as an opponent of irrigation, had signed this report. I did sign the report, but it was the conference report which we have already adopted. The minority Members, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] and I, oppose that which is in disagreement. We were perfectly consistent in signing the majority report that has already been disposed of by the House. This matter in disagreement is now before the House to decide, and, of course, we reserved the right to vote our individual convictions, which in this case is no.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. SCRUGHAM], that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SCRUGHAM) there were —ayes 81, noes 89.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 160, nays 148, not voting 123, as follows:

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the proper qualification expression is not being used by the Members now seeking to vote.

The SPEAKER. To what Member does the gentleman refer?

Mr. TABER. To almost all of the Members concerned. They have simply stated that they qualify. They have not stated they were present and listening and failed to hear their names called.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, in taking these votes, has laid down the proposition that a Member in order to qualify must be prepared to state that he was present and listening and failed to hear his named called. It is a matter of honor with each Member.

Mr. SNELL. That is all right.

Mr. HENNINGS, Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania, Mr. BROOKS, and Mr. FLANNERY changed their votes from "nay" to "yea."

So the motion was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. Telgan (for) with Mr. Douglas (against).
Mr. Sullivan (for) with Mr. Treadway (against).
Mr. Withrow (for) with Mr. Dirksen (against).
Mr. Ellenbogen (for) with Mr. Hancock of New York (against).
Mr. Boyland (for) with Mr. Gilchrist (against).
Mr. Maloney (for) with Mr. Cole of New York (against).
Mr. Sirovich (for) with Mr. Reece of Tennessee (against).
Mr. Gavagan (for) with Mr. Powers (against).
Mr. Pfeifer (for) with Mr. Eaton (against).
Mr. Byrne (for) with Mr. Mason (against).
Mr. Kelly of New York (for) with Mr. Plumley (against).
Mr. Lanzetta (for) with Mr. Ditter (against).
Mr. Barry (for) with Mr. Reed of New York (against).

General pairs until further notice:

Mr. Deen with Mr. Carter.
Mr. Jones with Mr. Hartley.
Mr. Burch with Mr. Maas.
Mr. Kleberg with Mr. Rich.
Mr. Doxey with Mr. Taylor of Tennessee.
Mr. Cannon of Missouri with Mr. Cluett.
Mr. Maverick with Mr. Brewster.
Mr. Drewry with Mr. Culkin.
Mr. Warren with Mr. Hoffman.
Mr. Parsons with Mr. McLean.
Mr. Steagall with Mr. Smith of Maine.
Mr. Lanham with Mr. Millard of New York.
Mr. Cooley with Mr. Delaney.
Mr. Bulwinkle with Mr. Kee.
Mr. Celler with Mr. Wene.
Mr. Driver with Mr. Snyder of Pennsylvania.
Mr. Hill of Alabama with Mr. Schuetz.
Mr. Robertson of Virginia with Mr. Hart.
Mr. Meeks with Mr. Cravens.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 93: Page 88, after line 9, insert the following: "For administrative expenses on account of the above projects, including personal services and other expenses in the District of Columbia and in the field $750,000, in addition to and for the same objects of expenditure as are hereinbefore enumerated in paragraphs 2 and 3 under the caption 'Bureau of Reclamation'; in all, $10,535,000: Provided, That of this amount not to exceed $75,000 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia."

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist on its amendment to the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 95: Page 88, line 24, strike out "$9,416,600" and insert "$11,701,600."

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist on its amendment to Senate amendment no. 95.

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the votes by which the various motions were agreed to was laid on the table.

NEW YORK WORLD'S FAIR AND SAN FRANCISCO BAY EXPOSITION

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 454) making appropriations for participation by the United States in the New York World's Fair and in the world's fair to be held by the San Francisco Bay Exposition, Inc., both in 1939.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, there are certain matters I would like to look into during the next few days before giving consent to taking up this matter, so I am reluctantly compelled to object at the present time.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

BONNEVILLE DAM

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business is the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 7642) to authorize the completion, maintenance, and operation of Bonneville project for navigation, and for other purposes.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 7642) to authorize the completion, maintenance, and operation of Bonneville project for navigation, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 7642, with Mr. WILCOX in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MAY: Page 5, line 18, after the word "act", strike out the period and insert a colon and the following proviso: "Provided, That before doing the things provided for and directed to be done in section 2 of this act the Administrator shall, by due and proper advertisement for a period of 30 days in at least one daily newspaper having the largest circulation in the State of Washington and one daily newspaper having the largest circulation in the State of Oregon, advertise for sealed bids for the sale at the switchboard by wholesale of all the surplus electricity produced at said dam to some person, corporation, or privately owned utilities or power company, and said Administrator shall, in pursuance of said advertisement, receive and report to the board herein set up and to the Secretary of the Interior all bids so received by him; and immediately after receipt and filing of said bids with the Secretary of the Interior, the said Secretary shall cause said board to be assembled and prepare, open, and review said bids. The board shall not accept or approve any bid from any person, corporation, or company not financially responsible and capable of fully and satisfactorily performing the contract for the distribution and sale of the electric energy produced and delivered to it; nor shall said board accept any bid or bids for the sale of such electric power or energy for less than 3 mills or more than 5 mills per kilowatt-hour. If and when a bid is accepted and the board is ready to enter into a contract with the purchaser or purchasers of said electrical energy, they shall fix the terms of sale for distribution thereof and price at which same shall be sold and delivered to the public and to State and public bodies, as in this act provided, allowing to the distributor thereof only a reasonable profit above the cost of distribution and marketing of the same. When a bid has been accepted, the board shall prepare and submit to the Attorney General of the United States all necessary information needful in drafting such contract, with all the tentative terms thereof, together with schedules and tariffs provided by the Federal Power Commission, and said Attorney General shall prepare or cause to be prepared a contract in triplicate for execution and delivery. The board shall have power to reject any and all bids so submitted to it, and neither the Administrator as such nor the Government of the United States shall in any manner be bound thereby until a contract is finally concluded and approved by the Administrator and the Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may address the Committee for 10 minutes on this amendment.

Mr. COLDEN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Kentucky explain if his amendment provides for selling all the power to one corporation?

Mr. MAY. I shall cover that in my explanation of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, it has been stated, doubtless on good authority, that the Columbia River affords the greatest natural resource of any stream in America for the production of hydroelectricity. The United States Government has gone to very large expense and has constructed and has under construction several major projects of this kind for flood control and navigation, with the incidental production of electricity in large quantities. It is the purpose—and a commendable purpose, too—of those who sponsor this bill to give to the people of the northwest area the greatest amount of electricity possible at the cheapest price possible. With this aim I agree, but the method of accomplishing this purpose is where I differ from the sponsors of the legislation.

The bill now presented sets up a scheme by which an administrator is to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior at a salary of $10,000 per year. The fact of the matter is that the bill does not state whether it is $10,000 a month or $10,000 a year, and it does not provide for how long he shall be appointed.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. Not now; I will yield later.

He is given carte blanche authority to go out and buy any amount of property he chooses at any price he chooses, and the Government will have to pay for it.

What business concern is there in all America that would dare practice such business methods; and if it did, how long would it remain in business? I caution you, my colleagues, to remember that the Government never had a dollar that it did not get out of the hides of the people by the drastic method known as taxation. Furthermore, every dime of money that you authorize this roaming administrator to spend is trust funds. The people's money—but I know you are going to pass this bill regardless of cost. You pay no heed whatever to demands of the President that we must economize by refusing to create new spending agencies.

The administrator is authorized, without limit and without restriction, to go out and purchase transmission lines, easements, and rights-of-way in any amount whatsoever without any restriction whatsoever and without requirement of the approval of the Congress of the United States in any manner. There is no provision for auditing his accounts.

The purpose of my amendment is to provide what I think is a sane and sensible scheme for the distribution of this surplus electricity, without incurring all of this unnecessary expense to the Federal Government.

The War Department's Board of Engineers are in charge of this dam. They have constructed it and constructed it well. The bill as presented provides for the appointment of this administrator to take charge of the surplus energy from this dam at the switchboard and provide a market for it. It authorizes him to appoint assistants and employees and attorneys and agents in the usual and customary form, practically in the same language as the Tennessee Valley Authority Act, and everybody in this House knows how they have proceeded to appoint employees and attorneys. This administrator will do the same thing, and at the next session of this Congress he will be here with outstretched hands for several millions to meet his obligations. Why all this haste when the dam will not be complete for several months yet?

My purpose in offering this amendment is to fix a market price for this power at the switchboard that will liquidate the Government's investment in a reasonable time, and with the constant threat of the Federal Government with a club in hand hanging over the utilities of the Northwest they will undoubtedly be able to procure a bid of some kind. If they could secure a bid that is satisfactory, based upon 2 mills per kilowatt-hour or 5 mills per kilowatt-hour, or anywhere in between those amounts, then the only thing in the world they have got to do is to come to the Attorney General of the United States and enter into a written contract. In that conract they are permitted to require this purchaser or this contractor to perform his contract and even to fix the rates at which it shall be distributed to the ultimate consumer.

The effect of this amendment would be to remove from the Federal Government the cost of every bit of this huge set-up which it is proposed in this bill shall be under the administrator.

I think this is the only way to do the thing. Here is a huge project, a powerful dam that will start out with a production of 62,000,000 kilowatt-hours and end, ultimately, when completed, with 452,000,000 kilowatt-hours. A few miles above it is another great project, a few miles below it is another great project, and I see now from the hearings and from the argument here in the House of Representatives that there is a controversy going to arise as to competition between the different projects of the Federal Government. I would like to remove this activity from the field of competition with private industry which pays taxes into the Treasury for the construction of such projects, and then require them to buy this energy at the switchboard and distribute it as the administrator says they shall do. In this way we cut out the field of operations of this administrator. We thereby save the millions he will surely spend.

I am surprised that they did not call him an authority, because we have a bill pending in the Congress, now before a committee for consideration, which proposes to establish seven new Tennessee Valley authorities, and one of them is to be in the Columbia River territory.

The purpose of my amendment is to require this energy to be sold at the switchboard to the distributors, the power companies, if you please, if they happen to buy it or some individual who may buy it, and that they shall go to all the expense of building transmission lines and substations and distribution systems instead of requiring the taxpayers to pay for all of those things.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. In just a moment I will be pleased to yield.

Under this plan and under the provisions of this amendment, they can put into the contract a provision that will enable the administrator to say to the distributor how much he shall sell it for and to whom he shall sell it. I think this is the wise and sensible way to do it.

I now yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. Does the gentleman's amendment provide a resale rate at which the power companies must sell it?

Mr. MAY. No; but it gives the administrator that you appoint in your bill and to whom you give jurisdiction over this matter, the power to say what it shall be when he writes the contract with a responsible party, and this amendment prohibits them from entering into any agreement with anybody who is not financially and morally responsible and capable of performing the contract. It gives this administrator the power to fix the rate, subject to tariffs and schedules submitted to him by the Federal Power Commission, and the only difference in this amendment and the bill as it is presented is that under the plan provided by the committee bill they propose to go out and spend the Lord knows how much money, millions and millions and hundreds of millions of dollars building transmission lines and distribution systems and setting up a great, integrated power system in the Northwest. What I want to do is to save your taxpayers, and your taxpayers, and your taxpayers, and my taxpayers from any further expense in connection with the promotion of this great Federal power project in opposition to private industry in this country.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. Yes; I yield.

Mr. COLDEN. Would not the gentleman's amendment permit the sale of the entire output of this plant to one corporation and thereby defeat the very purpose of the Government in promoting a public-ownership project?

Mr. MAY. Certainly, it would mean that the Government would not promote public-ownership projects because the Government ought not to be in private industry or in private business.

Mr. COLDEN. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MAY. No, I will not yield further.

Mr. COLDEN. What about the farmer?

Mr. MAY. And it gives the Government of the United States the whip hand, with authority to say to the purchaser, "You shall sell it thus and so, and not otherwise." You ask me about the farmer, the man with the hoe; the man for whom demagogues weep bitter tears and then vote for measures that will lay upon the backs of the farmers of this country tax burdens too heavy to bear. You may give him a little cheaper electricity but he finds it in his tax bill at the end of the year just the same. Your farmer, my friend, is going to wake up some day and find he is the politicians' goat—and then look out.

The farmer will get his electricity through the distributor just the same as he will get it under your administrator that you provide for in this, except that the farmer will not have to be assessed, and have his back broken and be bled to pay for taxes in order to pay the expenses of administration, if my amendment is adopted.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DUNN. Does the gentleman believe that these private utility companies can give electricity cheaper than the Government can?

Mr. MAY. I believe the utility company that already has a system set up, and that can build a transmission line from the dam 40 miles each way and feed the power into its existing system, can distribute electricity cheaper than the Government under this administrator, who must go out and spend millions to create a distribution system. Hear me, my colleagues! You can ignore your chief and disregard his demands but you cannot escape pay day.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment and ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, let me say to the friends of the power policy of this administration, in the words of an ancient sage, to "beware of the Greeks when they come bearing gifts." When the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY], who has consistently fought every provision of the administration's power policy up to now, comes and offers you an amendment to be imposed on the Bonneville bill, I say beware of the Greeks when they come bearing gifts.

What is the object of this amendment? It is to paralyze the distribution of Bonneville power. Let me show you what effect it would have. It would forever shut the door of hope in the faces of the people in that great northwestern country who could not get their power from those utilities that are now wringing overcharges of from seven to twelve million dollars a year from the people of each of the States of Oregon and Washington. The gentleman wants to fix a minimum rate? Why fix a minimum rate of 3 mills a kilowatt-hour when everybody who is familiar with the subject knows that the power can be profitably sold for possibly 1 or 1½ mills per kilowatt-hour?

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Is the gentleman in favor of the policy of the Government controlling the resale rate on Federal power projects?

Mr. RANKIN. I am.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Very well; then I admonish the gentleman at this time to beware of another section in this bill.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Let me finish. If this power cannot be sold at less than 3 mills per kilowatt-hour at the dam, it means the Government will have this project on its hands and a large part of this power will not be distributed, because any manufacturer on large scale can manufacture its own power in bulk for less than 3 mills per kilowatt-hour. Especially is that true as to secondary power.

Surely you Republicans will not vote with the gentleman from Kentucky on this amendment. In 1930 you made a contract to sell the Muscle Shoals power to the Commonwealth & Southern, for which they paid as low as 1.56 mills a kilowatt-hour for 5 years. Surely when they tell you, or the War Department tells you that they can manufacture power at Muscle Shoals for less than 2 mills a kilowatt-hour, and at Bonneville it can be produced for less than it can on the Tennessee River, as has been wisely suggested by the chairman of the committee [Mr. MANSFIELD], who sits at my left, you will not fall for this kind of an amendment offered by one who has blocked in every way he could the administration's power program in this House for the last 4 years.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I will yield for a question but not for an argument.

Mr. MAY. I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. RANKIN. If the gentleman has one question to ask, I will answer it later.

I wish to correct two misstatements which Mr. SNELL and Mr. BEITER injected into the debate, which represent statements furnished by others, Friday last on the Bonneville bill. I feel that these misstatements came to my colleagues from misrepresentation purposely made by Mr. Carlisle, of the Niagara Hudson Power Co. I challenged them at the time, and now present the facts so that the American people will not be deceived by such twisted statements of facts. Macaulay stated in one of his essays that if it is of pecuniary advantage to some men, they would disprove the universal law of gravitation. Carlisle's proposition falls in this class.

The Niagara Hudson Power Co. does not sell its power cheaper to the public than the Ontario Hydro. Seventy-five to 90 percent of the American Niagara Falls power is sold directly or indirectly to the Aluminum Co. and its allies in monopoly.

Niagara Hudson is a holding company comprising 35 subsidiaries. The principal generating subsidiary of Niagara Hudson is the Niagara Falls Power Co. This company generates on both American and Canadian sides, importing the latter. Now, let us look into kilowatt-hour sales of the parent company, Niagara Hudson:

Sales of electricity, in thousands of kilowatt-hours

	1929	Percent	1934	Percent	1936	Percent
Domestic, including rural	312,329	5.7	412,507	7.6	493,868	9.2
Commercial	458,882	8.3	483,138	6.9	566,945	10.6
Industrial and wholesale	4,802,469	86.0	4,588,267	83.5	4,278,501	80.2
Total	5,573,680	100.0	5,483,912	100.0	5,339,314	100.0

Only 24,463,657 kilowatt-hours were sold to farms, or one-half of 1 percent of the total in 1934.

The bulk of this power was sold to industries, railroads, and interconnected power systems, all low-priced power. The source of this data is Power Authority, State of New York, December 1936, page 43, and Moody's Manual, 1935, page 187.

Now let us look at the similar statement for the year 1934 from Moody's 1935 report, page 198, for the Niagara Falls Power Co.:

Sales in thousands of kilowatt-hours, including plant on Canadian side and purchased

Farms (½₀₀ of 1 percent)	171
Domestic (1¼₀₀ of 1 percent)	4,723
Small light (1¾₀₀ of 1 percent)	4,069
Street lights (½₀₀ of 1 percent)	300
Industrial power (47.4 percent)	1,564,398
Sold to other companies (51.8 percent)	1,709,208
Total	3,296,133

Practically all of this current was sold to low-priced monopolistic consumers at the Falls. Now let us look at the American Niagara:

American Niagara, 1935—Niagara Falls Power Co.

(Kilowatt-hours expressed in units of 1,000)

Large industrial power customers	26
Kilowatt-hours (thousands)	1,582,034
Miscellaneous customers	47
Kilowatt-hours (thousands)	16,310
Total kilowatt-hours (thousands)	1,598,344

The total number of customers of Niagara Power Co., American side, is 73, the majority of this power goes to 11 large monopolistic consumers, which I will later cover. This shows where practically all of Niagara power goes.

Now let us look at the average sale price of Niagara-Hudson power compared with Ontario, State of New York, and United States for year 1935.

Average sale price, year 1935

	Niagara Falls Power Co.	Niagara Hudson, all operating companies	Ontario	New York State	United States
	Cents	Cents	Cents	Cents	Cents
Residential		4.2	1.7	6.1	5.0
Commercial light and power		2.8	1.9	4.9	3.8
Industrial power	0.31	0.6	.5	1.5	1.3
Miscellaneous	.49	2.3	2.2	2.5	1.8
All sales	.31	1.3	.8	3.0	2.5

Ontario Hydro pays no taxes. Niagara Falls Power Co. pays taxes at rate of 0.6 mill per kilowatt-hour, and Niagara Hudson 1.3 mills. Average 1 mill, same as State of Washington. Adding 1 mill to Ontario, rates are still low on equal basis. Now let us look at residential bills.

What Aluminum Co. pays at Niagara for this amount of current	.03	.04	.06	.14	.39	.67	1.33

The Aluminum Co. pays on an average in round numbers $10 per horsepower year for mechanical horsepower at Niagara. On their use this amounts to 1⅓ mills per kilowatt-hour. The last line of table calculated at this average rate to Aluminum Co. to show how this low-priced current brings down the company average figures.

In the city of Niagara Falls, N. Y., 100 kilowatt-hours and 250 kilowatt-hours of residential current was sold for $4.75 and $11.88 respectively as of January 1, 1936, as listed on pages 11 and 12 of 1936 rate series of Federal Power Commission. The latter figure is the highest cost figures in the United States for 101 towns of the same class, although immediately adjacent to the cheapest power source in the world. Monopoly gets all the cheap power and the public pays the freight.

The latter bill figures given for the Aluminum Co. are calculated at the average price paid by the Aluminum Co. namely, 1⅓ mills per kilowatt-hour. I have presented this comparison solely on the basis of sale price and without considering the equity of these sale prices. The total output at Niagara is sold for 3.1 mills per kilowatt-hour, so it is easily seen from the figures presented that the bulk of the power sales of Niagara Hudson is at an extremely low sale price. It is sold under contracts that violate the Clayton Act, the Sherman Act, and section 10H of the Federal Water Power Act. Under section 26 of the latter act the Power Commission, if it does its duty, will revoke the licenses of the Niagara company and allow this power to revert to the people of the State of New York, to whom it rightfully belongs. Furthermore, this entire Niagara set-up is a violation of section 18 of article III of the Constitution of the State of New York, as stated, and as interpreted by the courts. The object of this State constitutional provision was to prevent monopoly. The attorney general of the State of New York cited this act in an opinion in the Long-Sault matter, where President Roosevelt received his baptism in the power fight.

Now, by outlaw methods, a Niagara Hudson official arrives at some low fictitious deceptive figures, which are quoted here on the floor of Congress to paint this bunch of power pirates as public benefactors in selling low-priced current, when the contrary situation exists from the figures I have presented.

Let us now see what the New York Power Authority states in a brief filed with the Federal Power Commission, December 26, 1936. Quoting sections 19, 20, and 21, on page 80:

The Niagara Falls Power Co. has only 73 customers and the bulk of the power derived from Niagara Falls is being utilized at extremely low rates by giant industrial corporations such as the Aluminium Co. of America, the E. I. du Pont de Nemours Co., and the Union Carbide Co. This great public power resource is being used as a factor sustaining the profits of these concerns.

SEC. 20. The Aluminum Co. contract, on the basis of which it utilizes a large block of Niagara power at a cost of approximately $10 per horsepower-year, binds the Niagara Falls Power Co. not to sell power to any other party for the manufacture of aluminum. Thus an exclusive use of Niagara power for the manufacture of aluminum serves to sustain this company's monopoly position in the industry.

SEC. 21. The fact that the Aluminum Co. has provided profits of $240,000,000 in the 25 years 1911–35 on an original investment of not more than $3,121,600, paying $81,270,483 in cash dividends on such original investment and expanding the asset value of such investment to $167,500,000 in the same period, is, therefore, a measure of the extent to which the public power resource of the Niagara River is serving the purpose of exploitation.

The public-power bloc of the House has the full facts on the Niagara contract scandals, so has the Power Authority of the State of New York. When opened up the American people will learn the true costs of hydro power, which my friends on the other side of the House state that the American people earnestly desire. Let my New York colleagues get behind the power authority of their State, and open up this power scandal so that the American people can know the true facts as to hydro-power costs.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Does the gentleman from Mississippi realize that it has been rumored in the Pacific Northwest that the Bohn Aluminum & Brass Co., which I understand is a subsidiary or affiliate of the Aluminum Co. of America, has had its representatives in the Pacific Northwest trying to arrange, if possible, which, of course, under this bill it could not in its present form, to purchase the entire output of the Bonneville Dam project?

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, yes.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. This amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] is in line with the desires of those very people who would like to monopolize the entire output of the Bonneville Dam project. It would emasculate the bill, defeat its purposes, and should therefore be voted down.

Mr. RANKIN. In the face of the record, to present such statements as the ones to which I have referred, to discredit Ontario Hydro, is a gross deception. I advise my friends from New York to read the testimony before the Federal Trade Commission covering the Murray Flood and the Wyer reports to see the "skulldugging" methods adopted by the Power Trust to attempt to discredit the Ontario Hydro. I advise them also to read the testimony before the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate in 1930.

For the benefit of my colleague from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON], I wish to state that the same situation exists in the Province of Quebec. I will give it in detail at some future date for his information.

My colleague from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO] cited some Power Trust figures to the effect that the municipal plants in his State pay no taxes and the private plants pay $12.30 per year taxes per residential customer, or 44 percent. That is also wrong. I will not take the time to go into this now, but if he desires the full information on this for his own State he can find it in the tax study and rate series of the Federal Power Commission. If he desires it, I shall be glad to present them at some future date.

Mr. Chairman, under permission granted me to extend my remarks, I am inserting three tables showing the cost of electricity to the ultimate consumers in every State in the Union, together with the overcharges by States during the year 1936.

I hope everyone who reads this RECORD will study these tables carefully. They show the overcharges by States to the domestic consumers and also to the commercial consumers. The third table shows the overcharges by States to all consumers.

At this point let me call attention to the fact that the power policies of this administration, of which the T. V. A. developments have been the backbone, are now saving the light and power consumers of this country $568,000,000 a year. As I pointed out the other day, in 1932, the year before the T. V. A. was created and its "yardstick" rates promulgated, the American people used 62,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours of electricity for which they paid $1,777,000,000.

Last year the American people used 92,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours of electricity for which they paid $2,098,000,000. It can be readily seen that if we had paid the same rates charged in 1932 the cost would have been $2,666,000,000, in round numbers, or $568,000,000 more than we paid for it. Thus it will be seen that we have brought reductions in rates that amount to more in 1 year than the entire costs of all the T. V. A. developments, with Bonneville and Grand Coulee thrown in.

These are the greatest investments the American people have ever made—the T. V. A., Bonneville, Grand Coulee, and similar projects. We are building a new civilization for the children of this generation.

The tables above referred to, showing the overcharges by States, are as follows:

TABLE NO. 2—OVERCHARGES TO DOMESTIC CONSUMERS BY STATES

This table shows the amount of electricity used by commercial consumers in each State, the amount paid for it, the average annual consumption, the average rate per kilowatt-hour, and the amount overcharged according to the T. V. A., the Tacoma, or the Ontario rates.

I wish every merchant in America, every hotel or restaurant operator, every filling station operator, every proprietor of a garage, and everyone else who pays commercial rates for electric energy could examine a copy of this table and see the enormous burdens of overcharges which they are required to pay.

TABLE NO. 3—TOTAL OVERCHARGES TO ALL CONSUMERS BY STATES

This table shows the number of kilowatt-hours of electricity consumed by the people in each State for all purposes in 1936, the amount paid for it, the average rates charged, and the overcharges by States, according to the T. V. A., the Tacoma, or the Ontario rates.

Please study this table carefully and tell me how the people of your State can continue to stagger under such burdens.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MAY) there were—ayes 18 and noes 82.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. (a) As employed in this act, the term "public body", or "public bodies", means States, public power districts, counties, and municipalities, including agencies or subdivisions of any thereof. As employed in this act, the term "cooperative", or "cooperatives", means any form of non-profit-making organization or organizations of citizens supplying, or which may be created to supply, members with any kind of goods, commodities, or services as nearly as possible at cost.

(b) In order to insure that the facilities for the generation of electric energy at the Bonneville project shall be operated for the benefit of the general public, and particularly of domestic and rural consumers, the Administrator shall at all times, in disposing of electric energy generated at said project, give preference and priority to public bodies and cooperatives.

(c) To preserve and protect the preferential rights and priorities of public bodies and cooperatives as provided in subsection (b), not less than 50 percent of the energy which the electric generating facilities, installed or readily installable, at the Bonneville project are capable of producing, shall be reserved for sale to said public bodies and cooperatives until January 1, 1941: Provided, That the electric energy so reserved for but not actually purchased by and delivered to such public bodies and cooperatives prior to January 1, 1941, may be disposed of temporarily so long as such temporary disposition will not interfere with the purchase by and delivery to such public bodies and cooperatives at any time prior to January 1, 1941: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to limit or impair the preferential and priority rights of such public bodies or cooperatives after January 1, 1941; and in the event that after such date there shall be conflicting or competing applications for an allocation of electric energy between any public body or cooperative on the one hand and a private agency of any character on the other, the application of such public body or cooperative shall be granted.

(d) An application by any public body or cooperative for an allocation of electric energy shall not be denied, or another application competing or in conflict therewith be granted, to any private corporation, company, agency, or person on the ground that any proposed bond or other security issue of any such public body or cooperative, the sale of which is necessary to enable such prospective purchaser to enter into the public business of selling and distributing the electric energy proposed to be purchased, has not been authorized or marketed, until after a reasonable time, to be determined by the administrator, has been afforded such public body or cooperative to have such bond or other security issue authorized or marketed.

(e) It is declared to be the policy of the Congress, as expressed in this act, to preserve the said preferential status of the public bodies and cooperatives herein referred to, and to give to the people of the States within economic transmission distance of the Bonneville project reasonable opportunity and time to hold any election or elections or take any action necessary to create such public bodies and cooperatives as the laws of such States authorize and permit, and to afford such public bodies or cooperatives reasonable time and opportunity to take any action necessary to authorize the issuance of bonds or to arrange other financing necessary to construct or acquire necessary and desirable electric distribution facilities, and in all other respects legally to become qualified purchasers and distributors of electric energy available under this act.

(f) The administrator, insofar as practicable, shall consult and cooperate with the States and citizens thereof, and with public bodies and cooperatives, within economic transmission distance of Bonneville project, in the furnishing of such information, advice, and recommendations as the Administrator deems necessary or appropriate to enable public bodies and cooperatives to avail themselves of the preferential rights and priorities afforded by this act.

Mr. CREAL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The substance of every objection to the rural electrification program is that it is the Government entering business in competition with private industry. Where has private industry tried to do anything in the business of rural electrification? To be in competition, there must be someone else in that particular field.

Man once sent his letters by a special messenger, but today the Government takes a letter across the continent for 3 cents. Man once hired his own teachers for his family, and only those able to do so received education. Man once built fortified castles as homes, and every estate was a fort, made up of lord and servants. Today governments have armies to defend the land, and cities have police to guard your life and property. Man once fled when a leper or smallpox victim appeared, but now the victim is quarantined for public safety.

Man once made his own roads and bridges, but broad roads built by state or federal governments replaced toll roads and toll bridges. No handful of men should have the right to monopolize the use of God's fresh air, sunshine, drinking water, or that byproduct of Nature's forces, electricity. Electricity, made by the forces of Nature in the flowing streams, should be as nearly free as the water itself which made the electricity. Where would we have been if private industry had been left to dredge its own rivers and harbors on which to ply privately owned shipping vessels?

Some people have never yet realized the difference between the problems of this age and the age when man cultivated the land with a crooked stick or dug it up with a sharp rock. The nation that adheres most to the modes of living of ancestors is China, and with what results compared to the progress of Japan? Methuselah was not recorded as the smartest man because he was the oldest; he may not have had sense enough to tell the sun from the moon. In China they went to mill for a thousand years with a block of wood in one end of the sack to balance the corn in the other end. One day a smart aleck for a prank put corn in both ends of the sack and 700 years later it became the custom.

The great scientist, Thomas Edison, never intended that his electrical discoveries should be the means for making mushroom millionaires overnight and the people should pay tribute and extortion to enjoy his work.

The Federal Government, which has control of navigable streams, retains that control for the public welfare, the fish of the stream, and the right to navigate, and the water itself is public property. And by the same logic the by-product should as far as possible be public property for national welfare.

The only objection I have to the rural electrification program is that we are not traveling far enough and the allotments are not sufficient to reach every project applying for this aid. The allotment to each State should be increased as fast as we can. The program in this bill is to prepare the source of cheap electricity for projects to be served now in the making.

The rural electrification projects and the appropriations therefore are not charity donations, but a loan on a sound business as the Government has loaned to other business. Who are the people to be benefited by the enlargement of rural electrification projects? In the class to be benefited most I have the picture vividly in mind of the woman in the farm home in the burning sultry weather. She stands over a wood stove cooking with parched and reddened face, the child by her side hot and thirsty wants water, but there is no ice to cool it. The butter stands flat in the bowl, and the milk for lunch is tainted. The farmer comes in to lunch, but there is no electric fan, no ice water, and the good woman's prepared lunch suffers for lack of a refrigerator.

The children read their lessons by a light you would not read by, and there is no radio to divert the mind from the days of monotonous toil. What a great relief would be real lights, a small refrigerator, an electric iron, a glass of ice water, a place to keep the left-over vegetables, the milk, and the butter. Half our people have those conveniences, why should not the other half? In the cities the people in the humble homes have such—why not the country also? These items mentioned, provided at the cost electricity should be sold, are not expensive luxuries, but would be in reach of the great mass of the rural population if they could get an electric line and a rate similar to the electric rate in Canada, about one-tenth the rate in some parts of America.

If lines were established these conveniences named could be had in rural homes for far less than the gas it takes to run the Ford car in the same months. Rural electrification is on its way and here to stay. It would be opposed by some—by whom, and for what purpose? Whatever is for the greatest good for the greatest number should always be worthy of the Government's consideration.

These conveniences added to rural life will help to make it more attractive and lessen the tide from farm to city, which has been too great for the good of the city.

I shall not have time to mention the great benefits of cheap electricity used for power and labor-saving devices on the better farms in washing, cream separating, feed grinding, sewing, barn lighting, and a hundred other conveniences too numerous to mention.

I am supporting this bill and any and all others of a similar kind that will give the man in the country and his family the same conveniences that the city man has in his home. I hope that the allotment will be big enough next year to aid every rural electrification project that is eligible. Those who oppose should be appointed a committee for this body; they should be compelled to spend the next 10 days of this weather out in rural sections, without any electric benefits of ice, fans, refrigeration, radio, or other such things provided by electricity. What manner of man is it that will sit here in an air-conditioned room, with ice water at every door and electric fans in his office, and say to the people of rural America these things are not for you?

In the meantime this program of providing the source of cheap electricity for them to use should and will pass. This is something they cannot do for themselves. No farmer could have his own light plant without a terrific cost compared with what these rates would be, and a small farmer cannot afford a light plant. But in this way they can pay the low rate until their line is paid for, then with cheap rates and no profit intended this great blessing can come to that portion of our people who will appreciate the demonstration that governments exist for the people and not the people for use of the government.

In our country we lag behind our neighbor, Canada, in this great work. Nature is made of positive and negative forces. Mankind abounds in the same material. In each and every step of progress we have to fight those who still want to use the block of wood in going to mill. [Applause.]

By unanimous consent, the pro-forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. (a) Subject to the provisions of this act and to rate schedules approved by the Federal Power Commission as hereinafter provided, the Administrator shall negotiate and enter into contracts for the sale at wholesale of electric energy, either for resale or direct consumption, to public bodies and cooperatives and to private agencies and persons. Contracts for the sale of electric energy to any private person or agency other than a privately owned public utility engaged in selling electric energy to the general public shall contain a provision forbidding such private purchaser to resell any of such electric energy so purchased to any private utility or agency engaged in the sale of electric energy to the general public and requiring the immediate canceling of such contract of sale in the event of violation of such provision. Contracts entered into under this subsection shall be binding in accordance with the terms thereof and shall be effective for such period or periods, including renewals or extensions, as may be provided therein, not exceeding in the aggregate 20 years from the respective dates of the making of such contracts. Contracts entered into under this subsection shall contain (1) appropriate provisions, to be agreed upon by the Administrator and the purchaser, for the equitable adjustment of rates at appropriate intervals, not less frequently than once in every 5 years, and (2) in the case of a contract with any private purchaser engaged in the business of selling electric energy to the general public, appropriate provisions authorizing the Administrator to cancel such contract upon 5 years' notice in writing if in the judgment of the Administrator there is reasonable likelihood that any part of the electric energy purchased under such contract will be needed to satisfy the requirements of public bodies or cooperatives, and authorizing such cancelation in respect of all or any part of the electric energy so purchased under the contract, to the end that the preferential rights and priorities accorded public bodies and cooperatives under this act shall at all times be preserved. Contracts entered into under this subsection shall contain such terms and conditions, including among other things stipulations concerning resale and resale rates as the Administrator may deem necessary or appropriate to effectuate the purposes of this act and to insure that resale of electric energy to the ultimate consumer shall be at rates which are reasonable and nondiscriminatory. Such contract shall also require such utility to keep on file in the office of the Administrator a schedule of all its rates and charges to the public for electric energy and such alterations and changes therein as may be put into effect by such utility.

(b) The Administrator is authorized to enter into contracts with public or private power systems for the mutual exchange of unused excess power upon suitable exchange terms for the purpose of economical operation or of providing emergency or break-down relief.

SEC. 5. It is the intent of the Congress that rate schedules for the sale of electric energy which is or may be generated at the Bonneville project in excess of the amount required for operating the dam, locks, fishways, and appurtenant works shall be determined with due regard to, and predicated upon, the fact that such electric energy is developed from water power created as an incident to the construction of the dam in the Columbia River at the Bonneville project for the purposes set forth in section 1 of this act. Rate schedules and revisions thereof shall from time to time be prepared and submitted by the Administrator to the Federal Power Commission and shall become effective as approved by the Federal Power Commission. The Federal Power Commission in fixing rates for power on amortization costs on all major Federal power projects shall establish a rate of interest which shall be uniform throughout the United States. From time to time the Administrator may, and upon the request of the Federal Power Commission shall, prepare and submit new revised or modified rate schedules to the Federal Power Commission; and such rate schedules shall become effective as approved by the Federal Power Commission. If any rate schedule submitted by the Administrator is not approved by the Federal Power Commission, the Federal Power Commission may revise such schedule in conformity with the standards prescribed by this act and, as so revised, such schedule shall become effective. Rate schedules shall be fixed with a view to encouraging the widest possible use of electric energy, having regard to the recovery, upon the basis of the application of such rate schedules to the capacity of the electric facilities of Bonneville project, of the cost of producing and transmitting such electric energy, including the amortization of the capital investment, including interest, over a reasonable period of years. Rate schedules shall be based upon an allocation of costs prepared by the Administrator and submitted to the Federal Power Commission for its approval. In computing the cost of electric energy developed from water power created as an incident to, and a byproduct of, the construction of Bonneville project, the Administrator shall allocate to the costs of electric facilities such a share of the cost of facilities having joint value for the production of electric energy and other purposes as the power development may fairly bear as compared with such other purposes. In order to distribute the benefits of an integrated transmission system and to encourage the equitable distribution of electric energy, the rate schedules may provide for uniform rates or rates uniform throughout prescribed transmission areas.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 11, strike out the sentence beginning with the words "the Federal Power", in line 7, and ending with the word "States" in line 11.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MANSFIELD: Page 12, line 15, strike out the word "may" and insert the word "shall."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. (a) The President shall direct the holding of public hearings by such agency or agencies as he may designate and the preparation prior to December 31, 1937, of a report to the President which shall include—

(1) The findings of such agency or agencies respecting any unreasonable discrimination against the Boulder Canyon project with respect to charges against power for construction costs, amortization, and interest on the basis of the standards prescribed in this act and in view of the physical, financial, and economic conditions surrounding each project; and

(2) The recommendations of such agency or agencies concerning changes, if any, in charges and rates at Boulder Dam necessary to correct and remove such discrimination, and the effective dates thereof.

(b) The Secretary of the Interior, subject to the approval of the President and notwithstanding the provisions of any other statute, shall correct and remove such discrimination and adjust charges and rates to the extent that he deems necessary and appropriate as a result of the report submitted pursuant to paragraph (a) hereof.

(c) Nothing shall be done under this section which will delay the date at which the separate fund referred to in section 5 of the Boulder Canyon Project Act will become available or reduce the amount thereof, or which will impair the rights of the States of Arizona and Nevada to the payments provided for in paragraph 4 (b) of said act, but either or both of said States may elect by appropriate legislative action within 2 years from June 1, 1937, to receive in lieu thereof annually during and after the fiscal year in which such election is made the sum of $300,000 each until 1987. Rates fixed under paragraphs (a) and (b) shall include increments to the extent necessary to provide revenue to meet payments required by this paragraph (c).

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ROBINSON of Utah: On page 12, beginning in line 18, strike out all of section 6.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for an additional 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Utah?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I feel sure that if this amendment which I have proposed is understood by the Members that it will be agreed to by all excepting the ones directly concerned, which includes part of one State only. This amendment does not in any way affect the purposes of the bill. I am in favor of the bill and intend to vote for it if this amendment is adopted. The purpose of the bill is to take care of the situation which exists at Bonneville Dam. My amendment, so that you will understand it, is simply to strike out section 6, which is a matter wholly pertaining to Boulder Dam. It has not anything to do with Bonneville. Bonneville is not concerned in the matter at all. As the chairman of this great committee stated, we can eliminate section 6 and it will in no way effect the bill so far as Bonneville Dam is concerned.

Now, let us see for a moment just what section 6 is, and I want to tell you that in examining it you will find that it is absolutely contrary to the policy of the Government to have section 6 in the bill. The Secretary of the Interior is on record as to that, and I want to read you his testimony before this committee from the report so you will understand how the Department feels about this amendment.

Secretary Ickes, when he appeared before the committee, was asked this question, and I read from page 144 of the report:

Chairman MANSFIELD. The people in this region are fearful that rates will be applied from Bonneville that will virtually put them out of business and they want to be linked in the same bill in the same way. They are claiming that no credit has been given them for flood control or navigation or any other features of that kind; that the total cost is charged to power; that they are also paying interest at the rate of 4 percent, and claiming at other places the interest is as low as 3 percent. Can you give any suggestion with regard to these matters?

Secretary Ickes said:

Well, I think that that ought to be the subject matter of a different bill if they want to raise the question. I may say that a hearing was held on the whole Boulder Dam matter. The time for filing briefs has not yet expired. When those briefs have been filed and I have had a chance to go over the record, our purpose in the Interior Department is to see what we can do to rectify any things that are complained of. Now, that cannot be done without holding this legislation back unduly. There is no natural or necessary connection between legislation for Boulder Dam and for Bonneville any more than Bonneville should be tied to the T. V. A.

Secretary Ickes says there is no connection between these two projects and that they should not be tied to each other. Why are they tied together? Why are they here? Simply because some of the Representatives from California conceived the idea of having the interest rate reduced on the Boulder Dam project from 4 to 3 percent. They came before the committee and attempted to get this reduction. Meeting some opposition to that, then they conceived this idea. What does this do?

Mr. BUCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I cannot yield. What is it proposed to do here? They say to the Secretary of the Interior, "You can go ahead if you want to and make those reductions."

Mr. Chairman, let us look at the facts squarely in the face. Please bear in mind that the Bonneville and Boulder Dams have no connection with each other at all. Bear in mind the further fact that they are 1,500 miles apart; that one is a reclamation project, built under the Reclamation Bureau, and the other a navigation project, built under the War Department. There is no connection whatsoever.

Congress will be in session in the future and these people are not hurt now. But for fear that when Bonneville is built there will be some connection between Bonneville and Boulder Dam they come in here and ask you as Congressmen, as the Representatives from your various States, to change a solemn contract that has been entered into by these seven States, including California, and private interests. By changing this contract you will rob the Government of the United States of approximately $78,000,000 in interest charges. Think of that before you do it. You are virtually saying to one man in this Government: "You go ahead; Congress has worked for 6 years getting a contract passed that is agreeable to the seven States, and that has been approved by the legislatures of the States involved, and if you want to, change the contract in any way you please. The signers have agreed to pay so much money under certain conditions and at certain times, but you can change all of this if you so desire.

Are you going to do that?

Mr. Chairman, this is more serious than can be imagined at this time. There is much in this contract. In the first place I want the Members to get thoroughly in mind that this is a reclamation project. It was not a power project at all. They simply wanted water down in the Imperial Valley of California. So they built a dam in the Colorado River and instead of charging the expenses up to water, as they ordinarily do in these reclamation projects, they sell the people in California the water at 25 cents per acre-foot of water. That has never been heard of in the history of the United States. You never heard of a figure like that in your life. They put it at 25 cents per acre-foot. Why? Because they wanted water and they did not care anything about power.

We furnished them the water which they wanted. We furnished them the power which is incidental to the furnishing of the water. Then on the first of June, when the time came for them to come forward to do something about complying with the contract, they have the temerity to come to Congress and say, "We want you to give to the Secretary of the Interior the right to change this contract and reduce these rates. We are not hurt. We have not paid one dime under our contract yet. We do not know anything definite about it but here is Bonneville fifteen hundred miles away and the T. V. A. at least that far away that may get some privileges. We do not know what they are going to get in the way of privileges and we do not know exactly what the rate of interest might be, but it might be something, therefore we want you to give us the right to come in and change the contract."

I am pleading with you Members, because seven States are involved, if a change is made in the contract we want to have something to say about it. We demand the right as sovereign States to come in here and have the Members say whether the contract shall be changed or not. We do not want to leave it up to somebody else. We fought for 6 years for the contract which we obtained and we got what we thought was a fair and reasonable contract.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I do not yield.

Mr. Chairman, after struggling with this matter in Congress, both in the House and in the Senate, for 6 years, the Members decided what were our rights and included them in the contract and decided what were California's rights and included them in the contract. I hope you will support this amendment, and not permit the contract to be changed in the manner proposed in this bill.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for an additional 5 minutes in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, my colleague, the gentleman from Utah [Mr. ROBINSON], would have you believe that California is trying to inject some special privilege in the form of a special request in this bill. I call your attention to the fact that California is not responsible for this amendment being in the bill. Of course, we are very much concerned. May I call the attention of the Members of the House to the fact that in the Seventy-fourth Congress the Rivers and Harbors Committee held hearings on four bills, two of them from the State of Washington, one introduced by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SMITH], another by my colleague [Mr. HILL], and two bills from Oregon, one introduced by the gentleman from Oregon, Mr. Ekwall, and another by our esteemed friend from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE].

Every one of these bills contained the Boulder Dam amendment. This amendment was not put in by California. These gentlemen put this clause in the bill on their own initiative. In the Senate a similar bill was introduced jointly by the Senators from both Oregon and Washington. This bill, introduced by four Senators, contained the same provision in principle concerning Boulder Dam.

Now, why? Let me call your attention to the reason. This was not at the request of Secretary Ickes; it was at the request of the President of the United States. May I read a letter so you may have a true vision of the real reason why this provision was put in the pending bill? The President, on May 29, 1936, wrote a letter to Hon. ROYAL S. COPELAND, chairman of the Committee on Commerce of the United States Senate, in which he said:

> It is very desirable that the bill introduced by Senators BONE, MCNARY, SCHWELLENBACH, and STEIWER, authorizing completion and operation of the Bonneville project by the War Department, and also authorizing the Federal Power Commission to fix rates at this and other Federal projects, should, if possible, be passed at this session of Congress.

Of these four bills containing the Boulder Dam amendment, one was reported out of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to the House. The bill in the Senate was reported out by the Committee on Commerce. So the Boulder Dam amendments were suggested by the President and not by California Members of Congress. In the last days of the session these bills were lost in the general shuffle.

For what are we asking? The situation has changed since the Boulder Dam Act was passed. Boulder Dam was the first great pioneer project. Southern California was obliged to underwrite every dollar of this obligation before one dollar was appropriated by the Federal Government. This obligation, including the All-American Canal for the irrigation of the Imperial Valley, amounted to the stupendous sum of $165,000,000.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLDEN. I will yield in just a minute.

We were obligated to pay off that sum in 50 years with 4-percent interest. Since that time the situation has changed. New projects have been inaugurated. There are Bonneville, the T. V. A., Grand Coulee, and Fort Peck, and not one of these projects is underwritten for a dollar. Not only that, but the Tennessee Valley Authority has the power to issue bonds at 3½ percent, and it is the supposition that there will be as low a rate or perhaps a lower rate at the other projects.

What does Southern California ask? Southern California has underwritten this project in good faith. Southern California has agreed to pay $25,000,000 for flood control charged off on these other projects. Southern California wants to meet the competitive situation which has been brought about by other Federal projects. Are you as Members of Congress ready to deny us in southern California relief from a situation over which we have no control? What we ask is that the President be requested to appoint an agency to investigate this subject and to make a report, and, if necessary, make recommendations in order to remove the discriminations and unfair obligations which rest upon southern California but do not prevail in other parts of the country.

I now yield to the gentleman from Utah.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Is not the answer to the gentleman's question about California's underwriting the cost of this project that the Boulder Canyon project is a reclamation project, and under the reclamation law the costs must be underwritten whereas T. V. A. is a navigation project and Bonneville is a navigation project. Therein lies the difference. As a Member supporting reclamation, I deplore the fact that after the people in California have underwritten the cost they now come here and want to renege on the contract.

Mr. COLDEN. Just a moment; I did not yield for a speech. I yielded for a question.

May I say to my good friend the gentleman from Utah that he is talking about navigation at Bonneville and navigation at the T. V. A., but do not forget this, that there are always three factors hooked up together, not only navigation, not only flood control, but also irrigation.

On many of the reclamation projects the Government furnishes the money and does not even charge interest, as I understand. Millions and millions of dollars are asked for flood control, and you go down into the taxpayers' pockets and there is no repayment of any amount, no repayment of principal and no repayment of interest. However, in the Colorado River compact we agreed not only to pay for the dam itself but to build our own transmission lines and to pay the interest and cost of flood control. Under such conditions, we think it is only fair to have relief and for the Government to treat Boulder Dam the same as it treats every other Federal project.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLDEN. I yield to the gentleman from Nevada.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. The fact is that in the case of Arizona against Wilbur, decided in 1931 by the Supreme Court of the United States, the Boulder Dam project was held to be a navigation project.

Mr. COLDEN. Absolutely; otherwise the Federal Government would not have had jurisdiction over this project.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. COLDEN. For a question, not for a speech.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Does the gentleman from Nevada——

Mr. COLDEN. No; I object to the gentleman's asking the gentleman from Nevada a question in my time. I thought the gentleman was going to ask me a question.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLDEN. In just a moment. I want to make a further statement.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I just want to ask a question.

Mr. COLDEN. Some of the gentlemen who are opposing this amendment are trying to inject the thought that the private utility interests of southern California are the beneficiaries of this act. May I repeat what I said on the floor Friday with respect to this question. The Metropolitan Water District, which comprises the population of 13 cities, has agreed to take 36 percent of this power. The cities of Los Angeles, Pasadena, Glendale, and Burbank, which own their own light plants, are taking 20 percent. Arizona is taking 18 percent, Nevada 18 percent, and private interests only 8 percent.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to have the gentleman from California devote a part of his time for a little joint debate between himself and his neighbors from Utah, which I am enjoying very much.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. COLDEN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am going to make just a brief statement in reference to what my good friend the gentleman from Utah [Mr. ROBINSON] has said.

The gentleman from Utah [Mr. ROBINSON] would lead you to believe that California is asking for a rebate of $71,000,000 in interest on the Boulder Dam project. The other day he said it was $78,000,000. The gentleman has revised his figures to $71,000,000. This is plain nonsense, because that is about all the interest that is going to be involved in the entire amortization of the Boulder Dam project; and yet he states that California is going to get a rebate of that amount.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORD of California. I decline to yield now.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. The gentleman has referred to me.

Mr. FORD of California. I decline to yield now.

The gentleman also states we—meaning the metropolitan water district—are paying 25 cents an acre-foot for water at Boulder Dam. We are paying 25 cents an acre-foot for the domestic supply of 1,500 second-feet from the dam, and we are spending $220,000,000 of our own money to bring it from the Colorado River to the city of Los Angeles. So when we get the water there it will not be at a cost of 25 cents an acre-foot but nearer eight or nine dollars per acre-foot.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FORD of California. I decline to yield.

Now, the opposition says that this section has no place in this bill. Let me call the attention of the Committee to the fact that the reason for the Bonneville bill is that Bonneville is going to begin producing power in a few months and we are all agreed that an organization ought to be set up to facilitate the production and sale of this power. This is agreed. On the 1st day of June this year Boulder Dam began producing power, and we are taking power from that dam and will take a sufficient amount of power from that dam at the price that is fixed to repay the United States Treasury for every dollar that it has put into the Boulder Dam project, with interest.

The opposition also says we are asking for 3 percent. Anyone who will read the provision will see that it does not call for any sum of any kind in the way of an interest rate. When we made that contract we made it under the auspices of an administration that was willing to let us have the power if we would pay all the expense of the dam, including flood control, and we agreed to do it. Since that time the policy of the United States Government with reference to power projects has changed, and now the Government is encouraging such things. We do not know what the interest rate will be at Bonneville or at T. V. A., and all that we are asking is that we be charged exactly what they are charged, nothing more and nothing less. This is all the amendment calls for; and, really, it does not call for that, but for an investigation, not by a commission but by an agency selected by the President to see whether or not our set-up is one that will put us on an equality with other Federal power projects. If it is, it will not be changed. If it is not, it ought to be changed; and all we are asking Congress to do is to authorize the President to set up this agency and to make an honest investigation of the situation.

In spite of the opposition to section 6, I am supporting H. R. 7642 for the following reasons:

First, I am in full accord with the Federal Government's policy of developing, for the benefit of the American people, the Nation's great water-power resources. Second, because Bonneville Dam will shortly be completed, power will be available and an organization is essential if that power is to be properly marketed at rates that will be fair to the people of the Northwest and that will, at the same time, produce sufficient revenue to repay the Federal Treasury for at least that portion of the expenditure that pertains to power development. Third, because this bill carries a section, section 6, which is vital to our great Boulder Dam project in southern California.

This section does not grant to southern California any specific concession, it merely provides that the President shall direct the holding of public hearings by such agency or agencies as he may designate and the preparation prior to December 31, 1937, of a report to the President which shall include—

The findings of such agency or agencies respecting any unreasonable discrimination against the Boulder Canyon project with respect to charges against power for construction costs, amortization, and interest on the basis of the standards prescribed in this act and in view of the physical, financial, and economic conditions surrounding each project.

This section and objectives sought to be attained has been extensively considered by representatives of departments and by the House committee and as a result has finally taken its present form, deemed to be the most practical way of guarding against the United States drifting into the indefensible position of treating its projects, at which power is produced, on different bases—something which no one wishes or seeks to justify.

SAME OBJECTIVE APPROVED AT LAST SESSION

The identical objective was approved by this committee at the last session when it recommended S. 4695 and by the House Rivers and Harbors Committee when it recommended H. R. 12873. These bills, substantially identical in form, were endorsed by the President who wrote the chairman of this committee expressly voicing his approbation.

BRIEFLY OF ITS NECESSITY

Why such an amendment is appropriate and necessary to a bill launching the Bonneville project may be stated very briefly.

Both Bonneville and Boulder are starting out practically concurrently. Power will be available at Bonneville before the end of the year. Firm power became available at Boulder on June 1.

Boulder was authorized in 1928, when public power development was looked upon with disfavor. Power was accepted only as a burden carrier. Fifty-year contracts in advance of construction were required. Rates were fixed at a level to repay, with 4-percent interest, within 50 years the entire cost of the dam, although Congress itself assigned $25,000,000 of the cost to flood control. Power-plant machinery, under the contracts, must be paid for in 10 years, which is unnecessarily burdensome in the hard initial period. Rates fixed before the dam was built are "frozen" until 1945.

Bonneville was built without advance contracts. Power developed there very properly is not being required to carry costs assignable to other purposes. Power is not put in a strait jacket. Treatment of power there is representative of an entirely different policy than that which influenced the Boulder set-up.

Cost of hydroelectric power is determined primarily by financial requirements. Operating costs are insignificant. It is obviously unfair and against public policy to force power at one project to meet heavier financial requirements by the Government than at another. Each should be treated the same by the Government.

UNIFORMITY OF RATES NOT SOUGHT

Uniformity of rates at the two projects is not contemplated. Each project, with the territory it serves, is entitled to the benefit of geographical location and natural advantages. Power at Bonneville will always have an advantage over Boulder power because of the location of the dam on ship channel, and also because it is not charged, as at Boulder, with payments to the States as a substitute for taxes. In fairness to Boulder these handicaps should not be further accentuated by continuing for 8 years more onerous governmental financial requirements than are imposed at Bonneville and are deemed appropriate under the present policy as to power.

By the section such an untoward result is guarded against. It is better to prevent an indefensible situation arising than to be forced to cure it after it has arisen. Furthermore, industries are hesitating in seeking locations until rates at these projects take form. Fixing rates for Bonneville without correcting the Boulder rates will not meet the situation. With Boulder rates left up in the air, there will be a tendency for industries to hold back until they are settled. It is much better for each project to have rates harmonized on a fair basis at once and when each is starting out as a going enterprise.

UPPER BASIN OPPOSITION

The upper basin States insist that the Boulder Canyon Project Act earmarks 62½ percent of the surplus revenues of Boulder Dam for them, that this would amount to $66,000,000 at present rates, and that the rate revision asked by California would cut down their fund. All three of those assumptions are wrong.

The four upper basin States have only one financial connection with Boulder Dam. That connection is through section 5 of the act. That section provides that after the repayment of the Government's entire investment all net revenues will go into a separate fund to be expended within the Colorado River Basin. Three things ought to be understood about that fund, because they are all apparent on the face of the act but are completely ignored by our upper-basin friends. First, the fund does not come into existence at all until the Government is repaid. That means that there is no fund for a long time, perhaps 50 years. Second, when the fund does come into existence, it belongs to the United States and not to any individual States, and Congress will appropriate it for expenditure within the whole seven-State basin, not just in the four upper States; and, third, the fund and the source of its revenues have no connection at all with the entirely different kind of payments that the States of Arizona and Nevada get under an entirely separate section of the act.

ARIZONA AND NEVADA STATUS UNDER EXISTING LAW

In the first place, Arizona and Nevada get their payments only during the period of amortization, that is, during the time that the United States is getting its money back, whereas the payments to the separate fund begin when the payments to the States stop. In the second place, the source of the revenues is 37½ percent of excess revenues, that is, the excess of annual earnings over annual payments due the United States during the amortization period. The upper basin States get confused because they think that the remaining 62½ percent goes into the separate fund. Not a bit of it. The separate fund never gets a penny of those excess revenues; what it gets is all net revenues after the Government is repaid in full, and hence after the distinction between excess revenues and amortization payments has forever ended. The question of what happens to the 62½ percent of excess revenues left after payment of 37½ percent each year to Arizona and Nevada is fully answered by the act. This 62½ percent goes to pay off the $25,000,000 which Congress allocated to flood control, with interest at 4 percent.

When principal and interest of flood control are paid off, then what happens? Section 2 (e) of the act requires that all money in excess of the amortization requirements at the end of each year shall be paid not into the separate fund, but specifically and plainly into the miscellaneous receipts of the United States Treasury, there to be applied to the credit of the Treasury's advances to build Boulder Dam. In other words, if there are excess revenues, 37½ percent go to Arizona and Nevada and the Treasury gets the 62½ percent, applying it first to wipe out the $25,000,000 allocated to flood control, and thereafter to accelerating the retirement of the balance of the debt. The separate fund does not come into existence until after that is done. Arizona and Nevada stop getting their 37½ percent, the miscellaneous receipts account stops getting 62½ percent, all simultaneously with the last payment of the debt. Thereafter, but not until then, the act makes two new treatments of revenues, dealing not with excess revenues, for that has become an obsolete term by then, but with net revenues; that is, all revenues over operation, maintenance, depreciation, and so forth. The first provision, in section 2, is that if by any chance flood control has not been paid off by excess revenues as early as the rest of the debt was paid off, then 62½ percent of all net revenues shall be applied to flood control until the balance of the $25,000,000 is paid. Second, that as soon as this is done, the net revenues all go into the separate fund to be spent within the Colorado River Basin. Of course, if flood control was paid off out of excess earnings during the amortization period the separate fund begins to get money as soon as the amortization period ends.

STATUS OF ARIZONA AND NEVADA NOT A PRECEDENT

The reasons for the entirely different treatment given Arizona and Nevada on the one hand and the separate fund on the other are perfectly plain.

For many years it has been the practice of Congress, when it uses the natural resources of a State for national purposes which will yield revenues, to give part of those revenues to the States that produce them. Thus in the forest reserves 37½ percent of royalties goes to the States; in the Mineral Leasing Act, 37½ percent of royalties goes to the States. That is the origin of the 37½ percent given Arizona and Nevada, as the reports and legislative history of the Project Act show. Each State was given 18¾ percent, or half of 37½ percent, on the theory that the damsite was a taxable resource of Arizona and Nevada.

But the dam site is not a taxable resource of Colorado or any other basin State, and there is no reason for the Government to pay tribute to them for its use. The legislative history of the separate-fund clause is entirely negative; it was never considered in committee and scarcely debated on the floor. It was offered as an amendment in the Senate during the last gasps of the debate. Nobody ever claimed that it was a $66,000,000 burden to be saddled on the dam, equal to two-thirds of the cost of the structure, to be repaid out of the hides of the power consumers as a surtax on what they would pay the Government. It was just an afterthought tucked into a sentence that, as it left the committee, simply provided that after the dam was paid for charges for power should be on such basis, and the revenues used for such purpose as Congress should provide. The amendment earmarked the use but did not change the date.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, in the discussion of this bill on last Friday the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] made, as usual, some rather extravagant statements relative to power, and so forth. I do not make it a practice to dispute a man's statement unless I believe I have some facts to back it up. When he told about the enormous amount of power that the Aluminum Co. of America used of the Niagara Hudson Power Co. up in my State, he got into my territory, and I knew something about it, or at least I thought I did.

The gentleman made the statement on the floor, and insisted upon it, that the Aluminum Co. of America used 90 percent of the output of the Niagara Hudson Power Co. I have had this carefully checked up, and I find that the Aluminum Co. uses 10½ percent of the power of the Niagara Hudson Power Co.'s plant at Niagara Falls and only 4.2 percent of the power of the entire Niagara Hudson Power Co. system. So his statement of 90 percent, as I stated on the floor at the time, is a little out of line with the facts.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I yield.

Mr. MAY. Does the gentleman mean to intimate that the gentleman from Mississippi could be mistaken about power rates in any section of the country?

Mr. SNELL. I did not go as far as that. I said I disputed his statement about something I thought I had some definite knowledge about.

Mr. WADSWORTH. His statement, otherwise, was accurate. [Laughter.]

Mr. SNELL. Well, I have not gone into it further. [Laughter and applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as this is a very important matter, especially to my State, I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to proceed for an additional 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Utah?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the members of the Committee will give me their attention on this matter, as it is of importance not only to my State but to the entire Nation. When the Government enters into a contract that involves not only one State but involves the rights and interests of six other States, then my position is that before that contract is modified, before we enact legislation delegating power to modify this contract to one man, these other six States should be given full, fair, and complete hearing and an opportunity to present their side of the argument. I point out to the gentleman from Mississippi that this bill is supposed to establish a governmental policy on power rates and the distribution of power from great Federal projects. Our friends from California have been very adroit in drawing the section here relative to the Boulder Canyon power rates. Bear with me for a moment, and read the amendment and see what you will find. You will find that they want the same standard applied on allocations of flood control and allocation to navigation that you grant Bonneville; but, in the words of their attorney, they have studiously avoided the same standard on the fixing of power rates.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Yes.

Mr. MOTT. I take it that the objection of the gentleman to the amendment must be that a modification of the Boulder Dam rate would injure his State. I think it would be informative to the Committee if he would tell us in what manner his State would be injured by a modification of the rates.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. The way we would be injured would be this. We entered into a solemn compact, asking Congress to build the Boulder Dam project for the great State of California. In that same compact we ask that our rights be preserved as against California, Arizona, and Nevada. Today we find ourselves in the position of facing the menace of overappropriation in Arizona and the rest of the lower basin because Arizona did not go into the compact. We face the proposition of losing to the development fund for the upper basin States millions of dollars if modifications are entered into that do not absolutely protect us on that. We are not against the modification of the contract, if those modifications are justified, but we do object to this hitch-hiking method of legislation. We object to bringing in the Boulder Canyon project as a hitch-hiking item to the Bonneville project.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. I do not yield further. I think I have answered the gentleman's question. If gentlemen will look at the amendment they will find the following:

> The findings of such agency or agencies respecting any unreasonable discrimination against the Boulder Canyon project with respect to charges against power for construction costs, amortization, and interest on the basis of the standards prescribed in this act, and in view of the physical, financial, and economic condition surrounding each project—

But is there anything in the act that says that the rates and the resale rates of Boulder will be subject to the power of the Federal Power Commission to control and fix? No. In a conversation Saturday with their attorney I called his attention to that fact, and what did he say? He said that they had studiously avoided any such proposition or any such provision in this section of the bill. Why? They want the same standards on flood control, on allocation of money for navigation and interest, but they do not want to be under the control of the Federal Government when it comes to fixing rates and the fixing of resale rates. This hitch-hiking method of bringing in an amendment for Boulder Canyon without giving it the consideration it is entitled to is not the proper way to legislate, and the amendment of my colleague from Utah should be voted up.

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Yes; although the gentleman did not yield to me.

Mr. FORD of California. The gentleman talks of the Government fixing the rates. The city of Los Angeles which is taking practically all but 8 percent of this power is a municipally owned plant.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. I understand that.

Mr. FORD of California. Any electricity for a private company is regulated as to rate by the State commission.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. I understand that, and that is the very thing you want—State regulation, instead of Government regulation of rates.

Mr. FORD of California. But you are a government.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. You say you are a government, and so is the California Edison Co. a big private corporation.

Mr. FORD of California. But we are under the State commission.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. When Boulder Canyon project was built and when our friends from California came in here they knew that it was not power that they were after. They knew that the installation of steam power in Los Angeles cost $77.50 per kilowatt. They know that the installation at Boulder Canyon cost $195 per kilowatt, nearly three times as much as you can build steam power for in the city of Los Angeles, but what was their big contention? What did they need in Los Angeles? They needed a permanent adequate supply of culinary and irrigation water for that great section of the State and the Southern California Edison Co. came in, and made that statement, and said, "We can get steam power now, and we are getting it cheaper than we can ever get it from Boulder Canyon project.

But to solve the water problem for the southern part of the State of California we are willing to make a sacrifice to get a permanent water supply for the expansion and development of the great southern part of California; willing to make a sacrifice on power in order to get water. But they were adroit and skillful enough in fixing the costs of repayment to place the burden of repayment on power, which they were not interested in, rather than on water, so vital to their future growth. Now they want to modify the power contracts, to revise their rates downward; but as to the absurdly and ridiculously low rate on water, viz, 25 cents per acre-foot, when it should be anywhere from $2 to $4, they want this water rate let alone.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. I yield.

Mr. COLDEN. Is the State of Utah paying a dime of the cost of Boulder Dam as far as repayment is concerned?

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Absolutely.

Mr. COLDEN. Where and how?

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. If you get what you want in a modification of these contracts, not only the State of Utah but every other State in the Federal Government will combine and join in a gratuity of about $78,000,000 over a period of 50 years to California.

Mr. COLDEN. In section 6, paragraph (c), line 14, page 13, it reads:

> Nothing shall be done under this section which will delay the date at which the separate fund referred to in section 5 of the Boulder Canyon Project Act will become available or reduce the amount thereof.

Is that not the only interest of the State of Utah?

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. I understand all that, but at the same time I am fearful that the same forces that were able to bring in an amendment to the Bonneville Project Act by the hitchhike method will be just as forceful in destroying the rights of my State at a later date.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. I do not yield, Mr. Chairman. We knew nothing about this amendment. Here is the situation: A hearing was called before the Secretary of the Interior. My State and all of the other Colorado River Basin States were down there presenting evidence. Our attorneys were there. Then we find two States getting together, one that will get $300,000 a year for 50 years if you pass this thing, and they get together and agree, "We will tack it onto the Bonneville Project Act and disregard what has happened before the Secretary of the Interior."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Utah has expired.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on section 6 and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The question was taken, and the motion was rejected.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, the bill before the Committee has been worked out very carefully, not only by members of the committee but by many Members of the House from States in close proximity to these projects, and not only Members of the House but Members of the United States Senate from those States. Several of them came before our committee. They submitted two or three proposed amendments before this one was adopted. Finally this one came in. It had the approval, I thought, of all Members of the House from that section of the country. I have found out since then that some of them are objecting to it.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. I think the position we took was this: That if we must take something in this bill, this is better than the first proposal; but I do not think there ever was any indication that we agreed with this sort of legislation.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I am only stating what my impression was.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield very briefly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Have we not always taken the position that, as far as the Boulder Dam project and contract were concerned, it had no business in this bill?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry, but I cannot yield further. I only have about 2 minutes left.

Now, this bill was before the House last year. It was favorably reported in both the House and the Senate. It went down in the jam during the closing hours of Congress and did not reach a vote in either body. It is in both the House and Senate again. Senator McNARY made a favorable report upon this same provision day before yesterday in the Senate, for the Senate Committee on Commerce. It was in a half dozen or more bills introduced in the last session and in as many in the present session of Congress, and if people did not know what was in it, I am sure it was not my fault, because we held hearings for weeks and weeks and weeks upon the bill.

Now, I have no interest in this matter. There is not a constituent in my district living within 1,000 miles of either one of these projects. There is not a constituent in my district nor in my State that will ever get one kilowatt of power from either one of these projects. They know nothing about it. I only have been endeavoring to work out what I thought would be fair and equitable, and I put in many weeks working to that end. I believe we have reported a bill that will not injure any State. It will not injure any taxpayer. It will not injure any individual in any State on the Colorado River or on the Pacific coast. It provides only for an investigation and for the President of the United States to take such action on a report to be made after hearings as may be found fair and reasonable and equitable. The Secretary of the Interior was already doing this before we commenced consideration of this bill.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. That is our objection.

Mr. MANSFIELD. We delayed hearings for 4 or 5 days at the suggestion and request of the Department of the Interior in order that they might develop facts a little more fully. The facts have practically all been developed up to this time.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield for a question, nothing more.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. If this bill is enacted in its present form will it not be possible for the Secretary of the Interior to set aside the very laws this Congress passed so far as the Boulder Dam project is concerned?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Is the gentleman afraid of the action of the President of the United States and of the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Not at all.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Then the gentleman should have no objection to this bill.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GREEVER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, for about 10 years, and perhaps even longer, the States of the Colorado River Basin worked in a sincere effort to secure a compact and legislation which would enable the building of the Bouler Canyon project and which would define the rights of the various States under that pact. The States were than and are now divided into two groups, the lower-basin group and the upper-basin group, the former consisting of California, Arizona, and Nevada, and the latter consisting of New Mexico, Colorado, Utah, and Wyoming. After considerable negotiations, and after extending hearings a compact was finally agreed upon and ratified by the legislatures of six of those States. Under that compact the upper basin States agreed as their consideration to allow the delivery at Lees Ferry of about 75,000,000 acre-feet of water within 10 years.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEVER. I am sorry I cannot yield, but I have only 5 minutes.

The upper-basin States understand that they are concluded by that compact and by the Boulder Canyon Act, that a regular flow of water has to flow down the Colorado River to the lower-basin States. This means that the upper-basin States are deprived of that water. It was the consideration for our benefits. What did we get back? We got the promise in this contract that there would be a separate fund built up for all of these seven States for the development of water, irrigation, and so on in those States. That is the only thing we received, a mere promise. But now our friends from California come in and say to us before performance is even started under the contract that they want the contract modified. The proposition that was made before the committee was to reduce the interest rate from 4 percent to 3 percent and to cut out this flood-control item of $25,000,000.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEVER. I cannot yield.

Mr. COLDEN. Will not the gentleman yield for a correction?

Mr. GREEVER. Not for the moment. It means that either the United States must pay that $25,000,000, it means that they have got to pay for this reduction in the interest, or it means that it must come out of the separate fund, one of the two, because there is no other place from which it can come. If it has to come out of that separate fund it means simply that the upper-basin States have sold their birthright for a mess of pottage.

I do not think this section has any place in this bill. It should be in a separate bill and should be considered as a separate bill upon its own merits and not in connection with something else. As a matter of fact, as one of the Members who spoke before me, has said, we did not even know that it was coming up. It was being considered down here in the Interior Department and we thought that something would come out of that, but the first thing we knew was that it was being considered in the committee which now has it in hand, and here may I say that the chairman and members of that committee treated us with the finest consideration but even then there has not been the proper consideration of this matter, a proper discussion of it, or sufficient time.

We have not had time to go back home and find out what the people of our States think about it. It should not be done in this manner, and we do not think it should be considered today in connection with this bill. I certainly hope that the amendment of the gentleman from Utah will prevail. Wyoming hopes for the development and beneficial use of the waters in our State tributary to the Colorado River. We are entitled to that consideration but if this bill passes we are, I think rightfully apprehensive of our rights and the future of our development.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last four words.

Mr. Chairman, I dislike to oppose any part of this bill. The bill now under consideration is known as the Bonneville project bill. This is a small project compared to section 6. The Bonneville project requires about $20,000,000, as I understand; whereas section 6 involves between $70,000,000 and $80,000,000 from the Federal Treasury. The question is whether in a bill such as the Bonneville project bill we should bring in a section that affects another project 1,500 miles away. I say that this section 6 is entitled to more consideration by the Members of this House. We in the Western States bring in projects, and the hue and cry goes up that the Federal Government is expending too much money in the Western States.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. What is the gentleman's State losing by virtue of this?

Mr. DEMPSEY. In answer to the gentleman may I say I figure about $15,000,000 and if we lose it by the vote of this Congress you can be assured that my State will insist, if the Congress wants to be Santa Claus for the State of California, that it be taken out of the Federal Treasury and not out of the treasury of the State of New Mexico.

We have other projects coming in here, and we are going to come in with other projects asking for the money to which we are entitled for the reason that we gave up this water right. If the Congress wants to set aside the compact between these different States, if it wants to assume the responsibility for giving California out of the Federal Treasury some seventy or eighty million dollars, that is the business of the Congress, but I want to put it on notice now that insofar as I am concerned if it does that it is against the will of the State of New Mexico and over the objections registered now by the State of New Mexico.

Mr. SHORT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SHORT. May I say it is most refreshing and encouraging to find one Representative from the great West who is honest enough to admit the Government is spending too much money in that section of the United States?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I want to correct the gentleman. I did not make any such admission. If this provision were brought in here in a separate bill, as it should be, I would be glad to discuss it. May I say with reference to the very able chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee that I have a great respect for him. I do not think there is a more efficient or finer gentleman in this House than he is. [Applause.] In giving me an explanation as to why this section was put in here, he stated it was only for the reason he believed we were in accord with it. I may say we were never in accord with it, and as a matter of fact, it was only by accident that I found hearings were being held.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman yield for a friendly question?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I shall have to yield for a friendly question.

Mr. MOTT. The gentleman stated that by the passage of this bill his State would lose $15,000,000. If the gentleman would explain how and why his State would lose $15,000,000, he will have advanced his argument a long way.

Mr. DEMPSEY. In this fund a certain amount went to the upper- and lower-basin States to repay for the water that they gave to the Boulder Dam project. If you permit some agency of this Government, it does not make any difference to me whether it is the Secretary of the Interior or the President of the United States, to come in here and set aside the laws enacted by this Congress and permit the changing of a contract, if the Congress is weak-kneed to that extent, it should not object to making good the amount that it wants to give in gratuity to the State of California or any oher State.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Is it not a fact that the provision in this bill does not change any contract? It simply authorizes the President and the Secretary of the Interior to make an investigation and report as to whether or not California is now being discriminated against?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I may say to the chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee that at the hearing held before the Interior Department there appeared representatives of California as well as my State, and it was the desire of the representatives of California that the interest rate be reduced from 4 to 3 percent. In addition to that they desired that $25,000,000 that was chargeable to this project be deferred for some 25 years. If you are going to permit a survey to be made with a view to submitting to some agency of the Government the question whether this compact between the different States may be set aside, I think we are on a very dangerous undertaking, especially when considered in the manner in which this matter is being considered here today.

Mr. GREEVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. GREEVER. As a matter of fact, it is simply letting down the bars in complete violation of the contract?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Nothing else but that.

Mr. THOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. THOM. Has this compact been ratified by the legislatures of the various States?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. THOM. How can this contract be changed without the consent of the States?

Mr. DEMPSEY. It cannot be, insofar as we are concerned, but the Federal Government can fix the rate of interest and they can do all of these things which would result in no return going into that fund.

Mr. THOM. Those are just concessions?

Mr. DEMPSEY. They are concessions in the way of gratuities.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the Boulder Dam bill was the first of the great projects for power instituted in the United States. Since then other large projects have been put on foot under different terms, which greatly modified the conditions existing with references to Boulder. For instance, the projects which are put forth now may allocate what proportion of the cost is for flood control, what proportion is for navigation, what proportion is for power, and the consumers of power under those projects are not required to pay for those proportions which are for flood control or for navigation. But we find that at Boulder the condition is different.

The law fixes $25,000,000 as being allocated for flood control, with which the consumers of power in California have no more concern than we. Flood control should either be paid for by the beneficiaries on the ground or else it should be paid for by the United States.

Mr. GREEVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. GREEVER. But, nevertheless, the $25,000,000 item for flood control is a charge against the Boulder Canyon project?

Mr. MANSFIELD. That is true.

Mr. GREEVER. And must be repaid?

Mr. MANSFIELD. It should be paid by the United States. That is my view.

Mr. GREEVER. Then California should be entirely relieved of that at this time?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I think so. I do not see why the consumers in Los Angeles should pay for flood control in the Imperial Valley.

Neither do we affect their contract. We are providing only for an investigation of whether there is discrimination against them.

Mr. LAMNECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. LAMNECK. If section 6 remains in the bill and the Commission finds that changes and concessions ought to be made, this provision permits the President or the Commission to make such changes without the consent of Congress.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I believe so; yes.

Mr. LAMNECK. Certainly, it does.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I may say in further reply to the gentleman from Ohio that the Secretary of the Interior was making investigations along the same lines and for the same purpose before these bills were introduced.

Mr. VOORHIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. VOORHIS. Is it not true the reason for putting this amendment in the bill, as has been pointed out today many times, is that it is important for the different power developments of the Government to be handled in a fair and equitable manner? The only thing this section does is make it possible for this treatment to be given such projects.

Mr. MANSFIELD. It is to keep one project from fighting another.

Mr. VOORHIS. Exactly.

Mr. MANSFIELD. If there are two projects which are fighting, we will say, for certain industries, if one has the advantage of the other it can kill that other community unless they are equalized. You are bound to have equalization or in a few years you are going to have the biggest trouble you have ever met in your life.

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. FORD of California. Is it not true that we are not asking to be relieved of the $25,000,000 obligation for flood control but are merely asking to have it deferred and paid out of the revenue from the project after we have amortized the project and paid for the dam in its entirety?

Mr. MANSFIELD. The gentleman is correct. This is the only thing in the proposition that will be deferred.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. MOTT. Is it not a fact that what they are asking under section 6 is the right to have the entire contract modified by the Secretary of the Interior in any way he deems advisable? Is not that what section 6 provides?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I presume so.

Mr. MOTT. Does not the gentleman think it would be better, if the contract needs to be changed or the provision of law under which Boulder Dam was constructed needs to be changed, that such change should come about by amendment of the Boulder Dam law instead of through discretionary action on the part of the Secretary of the Interior under the authority of this bill?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I believe some of our colleagues may possibly have a wrong impression of the proposed legislation. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors gave very thorough and careful study of the item before it was included in the bill. After this careful study it was determined that the provision was equitable and should be enacted into law.

Section 6, on page 12 of the bill, is as follows:

> The President shall direct the holding of public hearings by such agency or agencies as he may designate and the preparation prior to December 31, 1937, of a report to the President which shall include—

And so forth. This is an enabling act permitting an investigation to be made and hearings to be held to determine whether or not California, or Los Angeles, rather, is entitled to the relief sought in this bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN. I will yield in just a moment.

I do not believe my colleagues would desire the State of California to have to pay a higher interest rate for Government money than the Government is itself now paying for that money. The purpose of this bill is to give to the people of Los Angeles, if it is equitable and reasonable, a reduction in the interest rate in the long run.

I voted for the original Boulder Dam bill and was happy to do so. I support such great western projects because I feel the people of that section of the country should have the benefit of those developments. If there are inequities in the original Boulder Dam legislation, it is our duty to investigate and adjust them. Los Angeles is not participating in the flood-control benefits from this great project on which our Government lent the money to construct the dam. If they are not receiving flood-control benefits, is it equitable for them to have to pay off a part of the flood-control charges? Let them pay off such indebtedness as they actually owe. This investigation is one which, I believe, it is fair for your Committee on Rivers and Harbors to offer to you, and for you, in turn, to offer to the people of California or Los Angeles, and I hope you will do it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The pro-forma amendments were withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Utah [Mr. ROBINSON].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MANSFIELD and Mr. COLDEN) there were—ayes 73, noes 44.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. ROBINSON of Utah and Mr. COLDEN to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and there were—ayes 70, noes 32.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, all purchases and contracts made by the Administrator or the Secretary of War for supplies or for services, except for personal services, shall be made after advertising, in such manner and at such times, sufficiently in advance of opening bids, as the Administrator or Secretary of War, as the case may be, shall determine to be adequate to insure notice and opportunity for competition. Such advertisement shall not be required, however, when (1) an emergency requires immediate delivery of the supplies or performance of the services; or (2) repair parts, accessories, supplemental equipment, or services are required for supplies or services previously furnished or contracted for; or (3) the aggregate amount involved in any purchase of supplies or procurement of services does not exceed $500; in which cases such purchases of supplies or procurement of services may be made in the open market in the manner common among businessmen. In comparing bids and in making awards, the Administrator or the Secretary of War, as the case may be, may consider such factors as relative quality and adaptability of supplies or services, the bidder's financial responsibility, skill, experience, record of integrity in dealing, and ability to furnish repairs and maintenance services, the time of delivery or performance offered, and whether the bidder has complied with the specifications.

SEC. 8. (a) The Administrator, subject to the requirements of the Federal Water Power Act, shall keep complete and accurate accounts of operations, including all funds expended and received for the account of Bonneville project.

(b) The Administrator may make such expenditures for offices, vehicles, furnishings, equipment, supplies, books, periodicals, attendance of meetings, and for such other facilities and services as he may find necessary or appropriate for the proper administration of this act.

(c) In December of each year, the Administrator shall file with the Congress, through the Secretary of the Interior, a financial statement and a complete report as to the operation of Bonneville project during the preceding governmental fiscal year.

SEC. 9. The Administrator, the Secretary of War, and the Federal Power Commission, respectively, shall appoint and fix the compensation of such attorneys, engineers, and other experts as may be necessary for carrying out the functions entrusted to them under this act, without regard to the provisions of other laws applicable to the employment, compensation, and classification of officers and employees of the United States; and they may, subject to the civil-service laws, appoint such other officers and employees as may be necessary to carry out such functions and fix their salaries in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended.

SEC. 10. All receipts on account of Bonneville project shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of miscellaneous receipts, save and except that the Treasury shall set up and maintain from such receipts a continuing fund of $500,000, to the credit of the Administrator and subject to check by him, to defray emergency expenses and to insure continuous operation. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated from time to time, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: On page 16, amend section 10 as follows: Insert a period after the word "receipts", in line 5, and strike out the balance of that line and all of lines 6, 7, 8, and 9 to the end of the sentence.

Change the period to a comma at the end of line 13 and add the following: "and there is further authorized to be appropriated out of the receipts from the Bonneville project covered into the Treasury of the United States a continuing fund of $500,000 to the credit of the administrator and subject to check by him, to defray emergency expenses and to insure continuous operation."

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, this is the amendment which eliminates from the bill the language to which the acting chairman of the Committee on Appropriations objected on the ground that it was an appropriation. This language simply authorizes the Congress hereafter to make these appropriations. The acting chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has agreed to this amendment, and I have no objection to it.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. I notice this amendment states that the appropriation when made shall be "subject to check by him to defray emergency expenses." Is it not granting a rather broad power to provide that the Administrator shall have unlimited control and power over money appropriated by the Congress? Maybe I have construed this provision wrongly, and if so, I would like to be so advised. The amendment refers to a continuing fund of $500,000 to the credit of the Administrator, subject to check by him to defray emergency expenses and to insure continuous operation.

Mr. MANSFIELD. We have that in all Government operations. Somebody has to be able to give checks to pay expenses as they go along.

Mr. McCORMACK. But here is a man who incurs the expense and then he checks it out himself.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes; but he has to report it to the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. McCORMACK. Is this subject to the control of the General Accounting Office?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Why, every expenditure is subject to audit by the General Accounting Office. He has to report it and it has to be approved as a matter of course.

Mr. McCORMACK. This is not an exception to prevent the General Accounting Office from passing upon such expenditures in accordance with existing law.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I should not think so. I do not know anything about existing law on that point, but the purpose, as explained to me, is that the Administrator has to make arrangements for those transmission lines and make sales of the power and is bound to have money from some source to pay expenses as he goes along. The Army, the Navy, and every department of Government have arrangements of this kind.

Mr. McCORMACK. But I do not understand they have such power as this language, "subject to check by him", would indicate. Any expenditure of the Army, the Navy, or any regular department of Government is made subject to the General Accounting Office passing upon it prior to payment.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. COLLINS. This is somewhat like the authority we have extended to the Panama Canal. It is necessary for any business to have an operating account, and there are other agencies of the Government besides the Panama Canal which have authority similar to this.

Mr. McCORMACK. Do the expenses incurred out of this fund come within the purview or check or supervision of the General Accounting Office?

Mr. MANSFIELD. The General Accounting Office has supervision of all expenditures.

Mr. MAY. That is not in this bill.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. The words "continuing fund" raise this question in my mind: Suppose the Administrator spends $400,000 on some emergency, is he immediately entitled to another $400,000 to replace that payment?

Mr. MANSFIELD. He is only entitled to $500,000 under the appropriation to be made.

Mr. DONDERO. The point I am making is whether, under the words "continuing fund", he would be entitled to have an immediate appropriation of $400,000 to replace the expenditure.

Mr. MANSFIELD. He is limited to the appropriation made by Congress, undoubtedly.

Mr. DONDERO. And must come here for the appropriation?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a further question?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. TABER. Should not the word "continuing" be left out, so we would simply have a fund of this sort? The word "continuing" tends to confuse the matter and there may be some question as to what it means.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas may proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. COLLINS. As the gentleman from New York knows, I have a high regard for his anxiety about appropriations, and I think, as a rule, the gentleman is correct in nearly all of his conclusions, but I am just a bit afraid that if the word "continuing" were eliminated this operation might be embarrassed in the conduct of its general business activities in an orderly and efficient way. Year after year there is a certain amount of money that is taken in by the Panama Canal and its auxiliary operations which can be expended by the Canal authorities in the conduct of the Canal and its allied activities, and I believe it is necessary for that to be done in order for the Canal to function properly. For any business organization to carry on it is necessary that it have a certain amount of working capital, possibly of an amount relatively the same at all times, and that is all the gentleman's amendment undertakes to accomplish.

Mr. TABER. At the present time the Congress is appropriating funds for the entire operation of the Tennessee Valley Authority and we are not operating there on a continuing-fund basis, as I understand it. The permanent appropriation bill eliminated a great many of these appropriations. I appreciate there is one in the Panama Canal organization, but I am inclined to believe it is bad practice, and while this language only authorizes an appropriation, if you say "a continuing appropriation" you may have a confused result, whereas if it is just an appropriation, we know exactly what is done. Of course, the appropriation bill that is passed annually would govern in the matter and I would think it would be better policy and better practice if the word "continuing" were out, and I wonder what the gentleman from Texas would think about it.

Mr. MANSFIELD. The language is as new to me as it is to the gentleman from New York, because as we reported the bill, the language was different.

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. MANSFIELD. This was brought about by the objection of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. TABER. I understand so.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I immediately got in touch with the Interior Department to see if we could work out something that would be satisfactory to both parties and this language was satisfactory to both the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and the Department of the Interior.

It was thought that the appropriation will have to be made every year by the Committee on Appropriations, but that there ought to be authority to maintain this as a continuing fund.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes.

Mr. MAY. What in fact the $500,000 is, is a rotating fund that keeps accumulating.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes; I think that is it. I think the language ought to remain in the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 11. The Administrator may, in the name of the United States, bring such suits, at law or in equity, as he may find necessary in carrying out the purposes of the act; and he shall be represented in all litigation affecting the status or operation of Bonneville project by such counsel as he may select.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: On page 16, strike out section 11 (lines 14 to 19, inclusive) and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 11. The Administrator may, in the name of the United States, under the supervision of the Attorney General, bring such suits at law or in equity as in his judgment may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act; and he shall be represented in the prosecution and defense of all litigation affecting the status or operation of Bonneville project by the United States attorneys for the districts, respectively, in which such litigation may arise, or by such attorney or attorneys as the Attorney General may designate as authorized by law."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee will rise.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WILCOX, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7642) to authorize the completion, maintenance, and operation of Bonneville project for navigation, and for other purposes, and, pursuant to House Resolution 277, he reported the bill back to the House with sundry amendments adopted in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the previous question is ordered. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the amendment striking section 6 from the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment on which a separate vote is demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, line 6, strike out all of section 6.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chair proceeded to announce the result.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. DOCKWEILER] has submitted a parliamentary inquiry. It is possible to have a vote upon this. The gentleman from California [Mr. CARTER] demands a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 89, noes 39.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that there is no quorum present, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. CARTER (interrupting the count). Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California withdraws the point of order. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate no. 89 to the bill (H. R. 6958) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes, and agrees to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate nos. 93 and 95, each with an amendment.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I call up the Senate amendment to the House amendments to the Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. 6958) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year 1938, and ask unanimous consent that the two Senate amendments to the House amendments to the Senate amendments be considered en bloc.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nevada?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Would the gentleman state what these amendments are?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. These are corrections to the total.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nevada?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 93: In lieu of the sum "$9,150,000" proposed by the House of Representatives insert "$9,850,000."

Amendment no. 95: In lieu of the sum "$10,316,600" proposed by the House of Representatives insert "$11,016,600."

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur to the Senate amendments to the House amendments to the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TAX ON MARIHUANA

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6906) to impose an occupational excise tax upon certain dealers in marihuana, to impose a transfer tax upon certain dealings in marihuana, and to safeguard the revenue therefrom by registry and recording, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 6906, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 6, after "plant", insert "fiber produced from such stalks."

Page 2, line 7, after "any", insert "other."

Page 2, line 9, after "therfrom)", insert "fiber."

Page 3, line 9, strike out "$5 per year" and insert "$1 per year, or fraction thereof, during which they engage in such activity."

Page 4, line 6, strike out ",(2),".

Page 6, line 14, after "Columbia", insert "or."

Page 6, line 15, strike out "or the Canal Zone."

Page 8, line 11, strike out "or the Canal Zone."

Page 8, line 26, strike out all after "to" down to and including "cake" in line 6, on page 9, and insert "any person registered under section 2."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON]?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain these amendments?

Mr. DOUGHTON. There are only two amendments of any importance. The others are just matters of phraseology. One of those amendments reduces the occupational tax of those engaged in the production of the hempwort, marihuana, from $5 to $1, which is entirely satisfactory to the Treasury Department, which proposed this bill. The other is exemption of the Panama Canal Zone from the operation of the law. The Panama Canal Zone, as everyone knows, is under military control. The Department felt there was no reason why they should have any control over the operation of this law.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Is there any opposition?

Mr. DOUGHTON. None at all. I have talked to Dr. CROWTHER about it.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. My understanding is that the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. DOUGHTON] has communicated with Dr. CROWTHER, ranking member on the minority side, in the absence of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], and what the gentleman from North Carolina now proposes is in line with the agreement he had with the gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER].

Mr. DOUGHTON. Entirely so.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. These three amendments, as I understand, are practically Territorial amendments, in which the departments are particularly interested, and it is upon their recommendation?

Mr. DOUGHTON. It is entirely satisfactory to them.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. FISH. Can the gentleman inform the House what the tax was in the original bill, what it proposed?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Five dollars, and it is reduced to $1.

Mr. FISH. Now, is that correct?

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. If the gentleman will yield, originally it was $25, and the House reduced it to $5 per dealer, and then the Senate reduced it to $1.

Mr. FISH. That is quite different. It has been reduced from $25 to $1. I think that is a great improvement.

Mr. DOUGHTON. But as we passed it in the House it was $5.

Mr. FISH. In the bill originally it was $25?

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. The original bill presented was $25. After it came from the Ways and Means Committee it passed the House at $5.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. I have a long telegram in reference to the bill as it passed the Senate, and one of the objections is to the effect that they felt the American Medical Association should have been heard on this bill. As a matter of fact, the American Medical Association representatives appeared before the committee and were heard at length. Is that not true?

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. That is correct.

Mr. DOUGHTON. That is true.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Dr. Wharton, representing the American Medical Association, testified at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON]?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks by including a speech made by myself.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. I also ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to extend my remarks by including a statement made by myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I made today and include certain tables I have worked out with reference to power rates.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

FEDERAL CRIME DETECTION PAYS

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, today the Federal Bureau of Investigation observes the twenty-ninth anniversary of its service to the citizens of the United States. On July 26, 1908, Attorney General Bonaparte issued an order placing the investigative matters arising in the Department of Justice under a chief examiner, and gradually the organization developed into the crime-fighting machine which today is known throughout the law-enforcement profession of the world. Sixteen years after its birth the Federal Bureau of Investigation was completely reorganized.

Under its new and outstanding Director, John Edgar Hoover, the qualifications of personnel were raised, the organization was placed upon a career basis, and working policies were adopted which, during the last decade, have allowed this Bureau to function in such a manner that it has gained the respect and confidence of all persons interested in the safety and welfare of the American public.

The value of any organization is measured by the service which it renders. The Federal Bureau of Investigation has always sought in every possible way to render every item of available service to our citizens directly and to them indirectly through their own representative law-enforcement agencies.

ENLARGED JURISDICTION

We can all remember the period when marauding gangs, highly organized, roamed from coast to coast, spreading terror among law-abiding citizens and exacting tremendous tolls from them. So many were the victims of these gangs and so heinous were their tortures, their murders, and their kidnapings that the people of the United States turned to Congress for assistance.

Congress was quick to give aid by the passage of a new Federal crime bill in 1932 making it an offense under the jurisdiction of the Federal Bureau of Investigation to transport a kidnaped person in interstate commerce. In rapid succession, in 1934, Congress passed more crime bills increasing and strengthening the jurisdiction of the Federal Bureau of Investigation until it has investigative jurisdiction over all violations of Federal laws and matters in which the United States is or may be a party in interest, except those matters specifically assigned by congressional enactment or otherwise to other Federal agencies. It does not have investigative jurisdiction over violations of the counterfeiting, narcotic, customs and smuggling, postal, or immigration laws.

The types of cases which demand the attention of the Federal Bureau of Investigation include the following: Administrative investigations, admiralty law violations, antitrust laws, applicants for positions, bank embezzlements in District of Columbia, bankruptcy frauds, bondsmen and sureties, bribery, claims against the United States, claims by the United States, condemnation proceedings, conspiracies, contempt of court, copyright violations, crimes on the high seas, crimes in Alaska, crimes in connection with Federal penal and correctional institutions, crimes on Indian reservations, crimes on Government reservations, destruction of Government property, espionage, extortion cases, Federal antiracketeering statute, Federal Kidnaping Act, Federal Reserve Bank Act, frauds against the Government, harboring of Federal fugitives, illegal wearing of service uniforms, impersonation of Federal officials, interstate transportation of explosives.

Also interstate flight to avoid prosecution or testifying in certain cases, intimidation of witnesses, international claims, killing or assaulting Federal officer, larceny from interstate shipments, location of escaped Federal prisoners, Migratory Bird Act, National Bank Act, National Motor Vehicle Theft Act, National Stolen Property Act, neutrality violations, obstruction of justice, peonage statutes, passports and visas, patent violations, parole and probation violations—Federal, perjury, personnel investigations, Red Cross violations, robbery of national banks, member banks of Federal Reserve System, and insured banks of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation; theft or embezzlement of Government property, treason, Veterans' Administration violations, and White Slave Traffic Act.

Prior to the passage by Congress of the now famous crime bills, enlarging the jurisdiction of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, it was not a Federal offense to kill a special agent of that organization, nor did these agents have the authority to carry firearms. The Federal Bureau of Investigation enthusiastically accepted the new responsibilities placed upon it and, with modern weapons and equipment, its young special agents met the challenge of the marauding gangs.

These young men, the vast majority of whom are lawyers or expert accountants, selected only after most thorough investigations as to their character and fitness, and then highly trained in the Bureau's own schools of crime detection, welcomed the opportunity to render a more important service directly to their fellow citizens.

Efficiently and fearlessly they performed their duties with an added vigor spelling success, which led to the downfall, one by one, of such kill-crazy criminals as John Dillinger, Harvey Bailey, "Pretty Boy" Floyd, "Baby Face" Nelson, "Machine Gun" Kelly, John Paul Chase, Russell Gibson, Harry Campbell, Alvin Karpis, Albert Bates, and the many other leaders of the terrorizing gangs.

Because of the sensational nature of such victories, some have gained the impression that the activities of these special agents are confined to such cases as kidnapings and Federal bank robberies. This is erroneous, since officials of the Federal Bureau of Investigation point out that only approximately 5 percent of their time is spent upon such cases. The remaining 95 percent of time is devoted to investigations of a more routine nature, which, nevertheless, in their social value and in the savings and safety resulting to law-abiding citizens, are of tremendous import.

INVESTIGATIVE ACCOMPLISHMENTS

Approximately 640 special agents assigned to 39 field divisions are subject to 24-hour duty at the call of the people. These field division offices, under the jurisdiction of a special agent in charge, are carefully located throughout the United States to afford the maximum amount of protection from violations of Federal laws. Any person having knowledge of such a violation coming within the enumerated jurisdiction of the Federal Bureau of Investigation need but call the special agent in charge of the nearest field office to receive immediate assistance.

These offices are located at Aberdeen, S. Dak.; Atlanta, Ga.; Birmingham, Ala.; Boston, Mass.; Buffalo, N. Y.; Butte, Mont.; Charlotte, N. C.; Chicago, Ill.; Cincinnati, Ohio; Cleveland, Ohio; Dallas, Tex.; Denver, Colo.; Detroit, Mich.; El Paso, Tex.; Indianapolis, Ind.; Kansas City, Mo.; Little Rock, Ark. Los Angeles, Calif.; Louisville, Ky.; Miami, Fla.; Milwaukee, Wis.; Nashville, Tenn.; Newark, N. J.; New Orleans, La.; New York, N. Y.; Oklahoma City, Okla.; Omaha, Nebr.; Philadelphia, Pa.; Phoenix, Ariz.; Pittsburgh, Pa.; Portland, Oreg.; Richmond, Va.; Salt Lake City, Utah; San Antonio, Tex.; San Francisco, Calif.; St. Louis, Mo.; St. Paul, Minn.; Tacoma, Wash.; and Washington, D. C.

In case of kidnapings, a citizen should call National 7117, Washington, D. C., a line that is always open for such an emergency, and within the shortest possible time experienced agents will be present at the scene of the kidnaping to quietly render expert and sympathetic aid. The effectiveness of such direct aid to citizens themselves in kidnaping cases is disclosed by figures recently released by the Federal Bureau of Investigation. Since the passage of the Federal Kidnaping Act on June 22, 1932, it has investigated more than 100 cases of kidnapings and plots to kidnap, and all but one of these have been solved, resulting in over 200 convictions.

The service which the Federal Bureau of Investigation has rendered to the law-abiding element of the country in its investigation of bank robberies has been just as effective. According to recent statistics, since the passage of the Federal Bank Robbery Act on May 18, 1934, through March 31, 1937, a total of 241 cases of robbery of national banks and member banks of the Federal Reserve System has been reported to the Bureau. Investigations have resulted in the conviction of 152 persons in Federal courts and the imposition of the following sentences: 3 life, 1 indeterminate, and 3,250 years 10 months and 2 days.

In addition, investigation by Bureau agents in cooperation with local authorities, according to these statistics, resulted in the conviction of 76 persons in State courts with the imposition of 2 death sentences, 12 life sentences, 41 indeterminate sentences, and 518 years and 6 months. Nineteen robbers have been killed resisting arrest and 56 persons on March 31, 1937, were awaiting prosecutive action.

On August 23, 1935, Congress amended the Federal Bank Robbery Act to include robbery of insured banks of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. Since that date, through March 31, 1937, a total of 143 cases, involving the robbery of banks insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, has been reported to the Federal Bureau of Investigation. Available figures indicate that investigation of these robberies has resulted in the conviction of 41 persons in the Federal courts, resulting in 2 life sentences and other sentences amounting to 511 years. In addition, 45 persons have been convicted in State courts with the imposition of the following sentences: 1 death, 4 life, 17 indeterminate, and 463 years. Nine robbers were killed by officers and there were 35 persons in custody, according to the Federal Bureau of Investigation, on March 31, 1937.

There has been a marked decrease in bank robberies since the passage of the Federal bank-robbery statute and during the latter part of 1936 insurance companies announced a 20-percent reduction in bank-robbery insurance rates in 35 States, commenting that the work of the Federal Bureau of Investigation was instrumental in making this reduction possible.

In cases involving extortion during the 9 months' period beginning July 1, 1936, 63 convictions have been secured by the Federal Bureau of Investigation, resulting in the imposition of sentences totaling 300 years 1 month and 10 days. Thirteen fugitives were apprehended in connection with this type of investigative service.

One of the greatest sources of arms for dangerous criminals has been National Guard and other Government arsenals. From January 1, 1933, through March 1937, 365 cases had been reported to the Federal Bureau of Investigation involving the theft of 2,707 Government firearms and 338,381 rounds of Government ammunition. Convictions numbering 256 had been secured up to March 31, 1937, resulting in 4 life sentences, and actual sentences amounting to 763 years, 9 months, and 12 days. Indeterminate sentences amounted to a minimum of 122 years, 9 months, and 1 day, to a maximum of 356 years and 6 months, and 22 persons were in custody awaiting court action as of March 31, 1937.

One of the oldest types of violations under the jurisdiction of the Federal Bureau of Investigation is the White Slave Traffic Act, enacted on June 25, 1910. Since that time over 10,000 convictions have been secured. The Bureau has announced that from July 1, 1936, through March of the present year, the investigation of violations of this act has resulted in 382 convictions and sentences totaling 568 years, 8 months, and 1 day.

One of the most routine services performed for the citizens of this country by the Federal Bureau of Investigation is the investigation of the National Motor Vehicle Theft Act. This statute was enacted on October 11, 1919, and from that time through March 31, 1937, 44,070 stolen motor vehicles have been recovered and returned to their rightful owners, representing a value of $26,910,895.04.

SAVINGS

The type of service rendered by the Federal Bureau of Investigation in its direct contact with the public can be summed up through the statistics covering its operations for the fiscal year, extending from July 1, 1936, to June 30, 1937. During this period it secured a total of 4,624 convictions, resulting in the imposition of sentences totaling 11,067 years, in addition to 2 deaths and 9 life sentences. Savings, fines, recoveries, and judgments effected as a result of the Bureau's activities amounted to $41,438,370, compared to its total net appropriation for the entire fiscal year of $5,925,000. During the year special agents located a total of 1,303 fugitives, and 2,635 stolen motor vehicles, valued at $1,157,947, were recovered in connection with violations of the National Motor Vehicle Theft Act. Because of their careful selection, intensive training, and freedom from outside influences, the special agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation obtain convictions in 95 percent of the cases which they take to trial.

The work and service of these men during the past few years have established new confidence in law enforcement. No longer do our citizens feel helpless against the onslaught of crime. Major interstate gangs have disappeared. A larger percentage of our young boys and girls emulate the agents of law enforcement rather than the killers of the underworld. A new type of respect for the officer is evident. Local law enforcement agencies have adopted better training methods and the type of personnel selected by these agencies is improving from day to day. Headway is being made toward a definite improvement in crime conditions.

SERVICE MARTYRS

This encouraging improvement and the services rendered by the special agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation have not been without loss among these courageous men. The death of Special Agent Wimberly W. Baker on April 17, 1937, as the result of wounds received in a gun battle on April 16, 1937, while attempting to apprehend two New York bank robbers in the Topeka, Kans., post office, recalls the names of other special agents who have given their lives in the service of their country.

Since 1925, 10 of these men have been killed in line of duty. Special Agent Edwin C. Shanahan, a native of Chicago, Ill., was killed in that city by the notorious Martin Durkin on October 11, 1925. Special Agent Paul E. Reynolds, also a native of Illinois but a resident of Boise, Idaho, was murdered near Phoenix, Ariz., between August 9 and 12, 1929. Special Agent Albert L. Ingle, a native of Mississippi, was killed in Charlotte, N. C., by the accidental discharge of an automatic pistol carried by a private detective accompanying him. Special Agent Raymond J. Caffrey, a native of Nebraska, was killed on June 17, 1933, in the Kansas City massacre at which time two other special agents were badly wounded and three local officers killed.

Special Agent Rupert V. Surratt, a native of North Carolina, was killed on October 8, 1933, in an automobile accident while in that State on official business. Special Agent W. Carter Baum, a native of Washington, D. C., met his death on April 22, 1934, at the hands of "Baby Face" Nelson near Little Bohemia, Wis., at which time another special agent was wounded. Special Agent Herman E. Hollis, a native of Des Moines, Iowa, and Inspector Samuel P. Cowley, a native of Idaho, were killed near Barrington, Ill., on November 28, 1934, by "Baby Face" Nelson and John Paul Chase. Nelson was also killed in the gun battle. Special Agent Nelson B. Klein, a native of New York City, was killed by George W. Barrett at College Corner, Ind., on August 16, 1935. The average age of these special agents at the time of their deaths was 31, and 8 young wives and 11 children suffered the pain of their loss. They were left behind without the assurance of society's appreciation for the sacrifices they must make by insuring the security of their loved ones. Commercial insurance rates, because of the dangerous nature of a special agent's work, are correspondingly high and the Government has not provided insurance for them.

These men have died in order that civilization, which has been developed so laboriously with so great an expenditure of blood and sacrifice throughout the years, may continue to exist and society be protected. The losses suffered by the Federal Bureau of Investigation have been duplicated by law enforcement organizations in all parts of the country. Death has come with violent suddenness to the best and the finest types of officers, but those who are left behind honor their memory by a more determined effort to build an everlasting monument of sturdy law enforcement which can resist and repel the murderous thrusts of crime's overlords.

Although the service rendered by the Federal Bureau of Investigation to American citizens through its efficient and expeditious handling of those matters coming within its investigative jurisdiction has created new respect for law and order and reestablished the confidence of the public, perhaps a greater service is rendered quietly and indirectly to the citizens by this organization through local law-enforcement agencies. It has established and developed cooperative facilities which are subject to the call of peace officers throughout the Nation and which have increased the efficiency and effectiveness of all protective agencies.

F. B. I. NATIONAL POLICE ACADEMY

One of these cooperative features which during the years promises to be one of the most potent factors in the development of the highest type of law enforcement is the F. B. I. National Police Academy. The academy was founded by the Federal Bureau of Investigation in July 1935, and since that time four sessions have been completed.

The selection of the personnel to attend the academy is dependent upon the applications received by the Bureau from local, county, and State law-enforcement organizations. Following application the organization receives an invitation to select a representative of its department who is less than 46 years of age and best qualified to receive the training in Washington, D. C., and upon graduation to return to the department to give the benefits of his instruction and experience to the other members of his organization.

The representatives of 115 law-enforcement agencies, located in 44 States and 1 Territory, have completed the 3 months' instruction in such subjects as scientific and technical methods, statistics, records and report writing, firearms training and first aid, investigations, enforcement and regulatory procedure, tests and practical experience, police administration and organization; and police training methods.

In addition to the lectures and practical demonstrations given by experts of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, such distinguished authorities on law-enforcement work as the following assist in the training: Dr. Earl C. Arnold, dean of Vanderbilt University Law School; Prof. Thurman W. Arnold, Yale University Law School; Lt. Col. A. J. Drexel Biddle, United States Marine Corps Reserve; Col. Lynn C. Black, superintendent, Ohio highway patrol; Mr. Sherwood Brockwell, fire marshal of the State of North Carolina; Prof. Albert Coates, University of North Carolina Law School; Mr. Courtney Ryley Cooper, noted crime reporter, newspaperman, and magazine writer; Maj. Julian S. Hatcher, Ordnance Department, United States Army; Mr. L. V. Jenkins, police department, Portland, Oreg., and president of the International Association of Chiefs of Police; Mr. Paul G. Kirk, superintendent of Public Safety, State of Massachusetts; Capt. James T. Sheehan, Boston, Mass., police department; Mr. Bruce Smith, Institute of Public Administration; and Rev. E. A. Walsh, vice president of Georgetown University.

The 3 months' course is free of charge to the officers, their only expense being their transportation to and from Washington, D. C., and their living expenses while there.

The benefits resulting from the instruction are reflected by the large number of promotions which have been granted to the graduates of the academy. In most instances these graduates have returned to establish and take charge of training in their departments. Thus new police-training schools are developing from coast to coast, not only opened by the academy graduates but also by other officers who are enthused by the results obtained by the F. B. I. school. The service rendered by the F. B. I. police academy can be understood when it is realized that the total number of law-enforcement officers in the 115 departments which have had graduates from the school is 55,227. The total population within the territorial jurisdiction covered by these organizations which has thus been indirectly served is 73,662,352.

THE IDENTIFICATION DIVISION

Through the Identification Division of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, further assistance is rendered to local law-enforcement agencies. There are presently on file in this unit, which was established in 1924, more than 7,000,000 fingerprint cards; 10,394 municipal, county, and State agencies daily contribute from 4,500 to 5,000 fingerprint cards. The extent to which these officers take advantage of the service is evident from the statistics covering the operation of the Identification Division during the first 9 months of the present fiscal year. During that period 972,743 fingerprint cards were forwarded to the Bureau. The subjects of 54.4 percent of the criminal fingerprints received by the Bureau were found to have prior records on file when searched.

Within less than 36 hours after the receipt of a fingerprint card from a contributing law-enforcement agency a letter giving the criminal record, or advising that no prior record has been located, is forwarded to the agency. An additional copy of the letter is transmitted for the benefit of the prosecutor. This is also of value to the judge before whom a case is tried, as it is oftentimes studied before determining the length and character of sentence which the court imposes upon a convicted person.

If an individual with a prior criminal record commits a crime in a community, the law-enforcement agency seeking his apprehension will notify the Federal Bureau of Investigation. A "wanted" notice is then posted upon the individual's fingerprint record. If he is later arrested and his fingerprints submitted from some other section of the country, he is identified as the "wanted" criminal, even though he has changed his name, and the original department is immediately notified where the man it wants is being held and the arresting agency is advised where the prisoner is wanted. Through the use of this system the Federal Bureau of Investigation locates for local law-enforcement officers more than 500 fugitives from justice each month. For example, from July 1, 1936, to June 30, 1937, 6,223 fugitives were located in this manner.

The fingerprint records on file in the Identification Division also prove of value in determining if applicants for positions under the civil service of the Federal, State, county, or municipal governments have a previous record on file which might show the applicant is not of a proper character to receive the appointment. Applicant fingerprints, however, are only searched through the Bureau's criminal files when submitted by law-enforcement agencies.

During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, when the United States Civil Service Commission began routing its fingerprints through the Identification Division, 1 person in every 13 was found to have a criminal record. The following year 1 in 14 was discovered to be a criminal. After publicity was given to these searches and the word spread throughout the underworld the ratio dropped, until during the fiscal year 1936, according to figures furnished by the Federal Bureau of Investigation, only 1 of every 43 applicants was found to possess a criminal record.

To enlarge the services of the Bureau, in March 1932 the international exchange of fingerprint records was begun. This not only provides a means for furnishing a criminal's complete criminal history for assistance of prosecuting attorneys, judges, and parole officials but is also a medium whereby persons who are wanted in a country other than that in which they are arrested may be identified as fugitives. Eighty-one countries presently participate in this exchange, and the fingerprints of persons arrested in this country will be sent to any one of the 81 upon the request of the contributing law-enforcement agency.

Other services offered by the Identification Division of the F. B. I. are through its single fingerprint file, which contains the records of 13,516 of the most desperate criminals, such as bank robbers, kidnapers, extortionists, and notorious gangsters, and through its modus operandi and general-appearance files.

As a further expansion of its services in identifying fugitives, the Bureau publishes monthly the Federal Bureau of Investigation Law Enforcement Bulletin, which lists the principal offenders whose apprehension is desired by various police departments. This publication, which has earned the reputation over the world as a leader in the field, also contains treatises dealing with subjects of a scientific character and other topics of general interest to law-enforcement officials.

The Federal Bureau of Investigation also maintains a Civil Identification Section and will gladly file therein the fingerprints of any citizen for personal identification services.

All of the facilities of this great national identification clearing house are provided without cost to duly constituted law-enforcement agencies. Fingerprint cards, franked envelopes, and disposition sheets for the purpose of reporting action taken subsequent to arrest are supplied without charge on request of contributing officers.

RECORDING STOLEN PROPERTY

One of the greatest difficulties which has faced law-enforcement officers in the United States has been the identification of stolen property. Jewelry, firearms, furs, and other property stolen in one community are disposed of elsewhere through fences. Prior to April 1936, there was no means to list such property for later identification. At that time the Federal Bureau of Investigation initiated the national stolen property file in order that law-enforcement representatives throughout the country might avail themselves of a national repository of such information.

Law-enforcement officials have been advised that the Federal Bureau of Investigation will record in its file for the information of any law-enforcement agency, any stolen property of the following types: That which may be described by name, model and serial number, such as watches, firearms, bonds, typewriters or similar office equipment; and all stolen property involved in thefts amounting to an aggregate of $5,000 or more. The project possesses great potentialities as the size of the file increases.

SCIENCE LABORATORY

Again adding to its existing services to law-enforcement agencies, in 1932, the Federal Bureau of Investigation established the technical laboratory which is presently equipped to make all types of scientific crime analyses. Examinations are made of documents or letters to determine the identity of the handwriting appearing thereon, as well as any other information which may prove helpful in the investigation or trial of a case.

Precision rulers, a synchrisiscope, binocular magnifiers, micrometer calipers, color charts, and special ultraviolet and infrared lights are employed. In the examination of bullets and exploded shells, comparison microscopes, helixometers, and special photographic equipment are utilized. Microanalyses of hair and textile fibers are also important functions of the laboratory as are chemical analyses of stains. Spectrographic and spectrometer apparatus is available; reference collections of automobile tire tread designs; various types and sizes of bullets and cartridge cases of foreign as well as American manufacture; a file of animal and vegetable fibers; and a collection of handwriting specimens of many criminals are indexed for ready comparison.

The accomplishments of the laboratory have given impetus to the adoption of scientific crime methods throughout the Nation, leading to the solution of cases with amazing speed and precision. Third-degree methods previously used by some organizations have given way to the scientific approach. Technicians of the laboratory, in constant research, develop new techniques to be employed for the solution of cases.

The services of the technical laboratory are also available without cost to duly constituted law-enforcement agencies. Experts from the laboratory will proceed to the place of local trials and testify to their findings without cost to the investigating or prosecuting officers. A total of more than 5,000 cases was handled in the laboratory between July 1, 1936, and June 30, 1937, a large number of which were submitted by local agencies.

COLLECTION OF STATISTICS

Just as the doctor must make a diagnosis of his patient before he knows how to proceed in treatment, so those interested in law enforcement must know crime conditions and trends before a scientific approach to improvement can be effected. No comprehensive analysis of these conditions was made until Congress, in 1930, charged the Federal Bureau of Investigation with the duty of collecting and compiling crime statistics. A total of 3,431 police departments and other law-enforcement organizations forward monthly and annual reports upon which the statistics are based.

Many interesting facts are disclosed by these compilations. A tabulation recently completed of information appearing on 461,589 arrest records received during 1936, shows that 139,707 of the persons had been convicted of some type of violation prior to their most recent arrests. These figures place emphasis upon the fact that efforts of police organizations must constantly be directed toward reapprehending individuals who at some former time had unsuccessfully come into conflict with the law.

The statistics thus compiled also focus the attention of the public upon the problem of juvenile delinquency when they show that 17 out of every 100 persons arrested today have not yet reached voting age.

ADEQUATE PROTECTION NEEDED

The need for adequate police protection is graphically shown by tabulations disclosing that cities having the larger number of police employees in comparison with the population area policed, generally have the lower crime rates. The compilation, based on data furnished by 88 cities, each with more than 100,000 inhabitants, shows that 24 cities having an average of 2.3 police employees per 1,000 inhabitants had 4 murders per year for each 100,000 inhabitants, whereas 19 cities having an average of 0.9 police employees per 1,000 inhabitants had more than 9 murders reported for each 100,000 inhabitants. In addition, those cities in the first group had 51 robberies and 313 offenses of burglary reported for each 100,000 inhabitants as compared with 93 robberies and 485 burglaries per 100,000 inhabitants in cities of the second group.

The extent of crime is further revealed to the amazement of the public by the 1,333,526 serious crimes committed last year. This total is, however, a decrease of 7.8 percent over 1935.

To achieve further decreases we must more wholeheartedly support law-enforcement agencies, local, State, and National. Their appropriations and personnel must be sufficient to provide an increase in the services which they are able to render to the taxpayers.

The Federal Bureau of Investigation is returning to the taxpayers each year as a result of the direct services it renders to those taxpayers, approximately $7 for each $1 it spends in operation.

The Federal Bureau of Investigation, however, is not content with that record but through the cooperative features provided for other law-enforcement agencies, which it expands and to which it adds as new needs arise, renders even a greater service. Although while yet in its infancy in the life of government, it enjoys and treasures the good will and respect of the law-abiding citizens whom it hastens to serve. [Applause.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Friday next, after the disposition of business on the Speaker's table and the business of the day, I may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein one short letter and several excerpts from other letters, all of them short, and to append to my remarks a very short bill I introduced in the House last month.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. AMLIE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I made this afternoon, and also to include in the RECORD a copy of a letter I wrote to the Surgeon General of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OF TARIFF ACT

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4543) to amend the Tariff Act of 1930 to exempt vessels arriving for the purpose of taking on ship's stores and certain sea stores from the requirement of formal entry.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this the bill about which the gentleman talked to me on Friday, simply allowing ships to stay in American ports long enough to purchase American goods?

Mr. BUCK. This bill permits a ship, for instance, arriving in distress and remaining in port not more than 24 hours to purchase what are known as ship's stores as well as sea stores. These are words of the art. Sea stores means goods that must be consumed in the voyage. Ship's stores refers to articles such as paint, rope, and so forth. What the bill does is to enable some of our merchants in Boston—I see my colleague from Massachusetts rising—San Francisco, and elsewhere to do a little more business.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, has the gentleman taken the precaution of notifying the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] or the gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER] that he was going to bring this bill up today?

Mr. BUCK. Oh, yes; this matter has been discussed with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] and with the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. The bill comes to the floor with a unanimous report from the committee.

Mr. BUCK. It was reported out unanimously by the committee.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. And the gentleman presents it just exactly as our committee reported it out?

Mr. BUCK. Exactly.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subsection (4) of section 441, as amended (exempting certain vessels from the requirement of formal entry), of the Tariff Act of 1930 (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 19, sec. 1441 (4)) is amended by striking out "or necessary sea stores" wherever appearing in such subsection and inserting in lieu thereof "sea stores, or ship's stores."

SEC. 2. The amendment made by this act shall take effect on the day following the date of its enactment.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NAZI ACTIVITIES IN THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN], is entitled to be recognized for 30 minutes. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York for 30 minutes.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, ladies, and gentlemen, the children of Germany have a new song. It was published in the New York Evening Post on July 22, 1937, and the text of the song reads as follows:

Und Liegt auch vom Kampf in Truemmern die ganze Welt zu Hauf,
Das soll uns den Teufel nicht kuemmern, wir pfeifen darauf.
Wir werden weiter marschieren, wenn alles in Scherben faellt,
Denn heute gehoert uns Deutschland und Morgen die ganze Welt!

A rough translation of this lyric follows:

Even if in battle the whole world crumbled in a heap,
To the devil with it! We don't care a damn—we whistle.
We march on, even though everything be smashed to bits,
For today Germany is ours, and tomorrow the whole world!

The editorial goes on further:

Tomorrow, the world. Probably fantastic in America despite 21 Nazi camps, and in England despite Mosley's black shirts, who are getting nowhere.

Yet Hitler is looking hungrily westward. A digest of his aspirations in South America has been prepared by the American committee for anti-Nazi literature, which reads in part:

Nazi agents, plentifully supplied with funds from the propaganda ministry in Berlin, are busily engaged in Latin America spreading the gospel of Fascist dictatorship, of race hatred, and of war against democracy. The Nazis in their greedy quest for colonies are trying to turn South America into a vast colonial continent for economic exploitation.

Fascism in Latin America wears the garb and speaks the language of its European models in Germany and Italy. Its followers have called forth political and semimilitary organizations in practically all republics south of the Panama Canal. They have attacked the labor movement and helped to overthrow republican governments.

In Brazil and Chile, and to a large extent in Argentina, Germans often form the backbone of the Fascist movement. In Argentina alone there are at least eight uniformed Fascist organizations. In Chile there is an organization, the Partida Nacional Socialists, and its members call themselves "Nacistas", aping the German nazi-ism. In Brazil there is a Fascist organization known as the Integralist Action which claims a membership of half a million.

Over the troubled continent lies the shadow of the Nazi swastika reaching out to engulf our neighbors under the same medieval darkness that now hangs over Germany.

These thoughts come into my mind as I am again reminded of Nazi aggressiveness in connection with the establishment of a new camp in Andover, N. J., which was launched with appropriate ceremonies a week ago Sunday. The ceremonies in connection with the opening of the camp were very impressive. The principal speech was delivered by the fuehrer, Herr Fritz Kuhn, whose activities as the new German leader in the United States were depicted by me on several occasions in speeches delivered before this body and on the radio. Incidentally, a well-known magazine, the American Magazine, has a detailed description of the activities of this movement in its current issue. I recommend to the Members of this House that they read this magazine story, which will probably have a great effect on arousing them from the utter lack of interest which this country is apparently exhibiting.

In one of my previous speeches I showed the futility of taking the attitude of "It can't happen here." I also pointed out on more than one occasion how the indifference which the German Republic showed to the claims of nazi-ism was responsible for Hitler's obtaining power in Germany. I made the statement that no democracy had the right to commit suicide, as it did in Germany. I do not wish to be a prophet of evil, but I am very much afraid that we cannot let nazi-ism or fascism rise in this country without serious danger to the safety of our Republic. I cannot restrain myself from again reading to you another portion of the article in the New York Evening Post. Of course, the author of the article takes the position that this Nazi camp or other Nazi camps should really be licensed and subsidized by Federal funds on condition that these camps be made directly representative of the present-day German Government, and here is how the author of the article visions this model camp:

> This model camp, as I vision it, is surrounded by a high barbed-wire fence, behind which the happy inhabitants are compelled to labor at low wages. A third of their pay is deducted for the maintenance of the army and the munitions plants, of which in this model city there is a gratifying number.
> The diet of the inhabitants is simple, consisting occasionally of one-pot dishes, so that the savings may be contributed to the glory and the girth of Goering.
>
> Inside the model city there is a concentration camp crowded with Communists, Jews, trade-unionists, liberals, Catholics, and a few Protestants who protested too much. On the ground are the corpses of a dozen men shot while ungraciously resisting the kindness of their jailers.
> Here and there, spiked on the barbed wire to prove the efficiency of German munitions, are the bodies of Basque babies; also the remains of a hundred Nazi soldiers drafted for service in Spain and sent back as heroes, but, unfortunately, dead.
>
> Behind these grim entanglements the citizens not in the concentration camp walk in lock-step to the roll of drums and the incense of burning books. They give the Nazi salute when not otherwise engaged in tightening their belts.
> All citizens dutifully sing the Horst Wessel song, for it is held in this model city that a mouth engaged in singing cannot be engaged in eating, which would be bad for the national economy.

I again refer to the official program of the opening of Camp Nordland, which is a book or pamphlet containing some 50 pages full of advertisements of good Germans who should be patronized by their fellow countrymen, and the program of the festivals themselves, which lists among its speakers "the honorable State senator", William A. Dolan, of Newton, N. J., and the chairman of the township committee, William Current, of Andover, N. J. What these speakers had to tell the audience I do not know, but undoubtedly their being there served to dress up the occasion with American patriotism, showing that American public officials support the Nazi movement in the United States, and support the erection of camps in this country which are established for the purpose of conducting Hitler propaganda in the United States.

In 1933, when the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization made its first study of Nazi activities in the United States, I arranged for the publication of a historical sketch showing how this movement grew in this country and who its backers and sponsors were. This historical sketch, of course, brings the story only up to the end of 1933, and it is continued by the investigation of the Special Committee on Un-American Activities, of which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK] was chairman and of which I was vice chairman. The leaders of the movement then have left these shores, and one of the men who was very instrumental in organizing nazi-ism in the United States is now one of the assistants to the German Minister of Propaganda in Berlin. The new leader is aptly described in the American Magazine as being the successor of all who preceded him, and he shows a great deal of aggressiveness and disregard of the most fundamental rights of American citizenship. He is a citizen of this country, apparently, I suppose by naturalization, and I have a good mind to investigate into the circumstances under which he was able to convince an American judge of the fact that he was eligible for American citizenship on his "record."

I do not know how many of you gentlemen know it, but to become a citizen of the United States one must take an oath of allegiance to this Government. It is this same Fritz Kuhn who on his own statement went to Germany about a year ago and pledged the allegiance of all American Germans in this country to Adolf Hitler. As a matter of fact, it is required of everyone who joins the Nazi organization in the United States, which now calls itself the German-American Bund, to pledge his allegiance to Adolf Hitler. A booklet which is given to every member of the bund contains the following pledge of obedience:

> Ich gelobe meinem Fuehrer Adolf Hitler Treue. Ich verspreche Adolf Hitler und den von ihm bestellten, mir bekannten oder durch ihre Abzeichen erkennbaren Vorgesetzten Achtung und Gehorsam und verpflichte mich, alle Befehle unverdrossen und gewissenhaft zu vollziehen, da ich weiss, dass meine Fuehrer nichts Ungesetzliches von mir fordern.

A translation of the above reads as follows:

> I solemnly swear fidelity to my leader, Adolf Hitler. I promise Adolf Hitler and everybody designated by him known to me or to be known to me, through his credentials, or through his uniform, the respect and absolute obedience due him and give allegiance herewith to fulfill all orders without restriction, and with my entire will, because I know that my leader does not demand from me anything illegal.

I have no doubt that this "pledge of obedience" which is expected of every member of the German-American Bund will automatically debar any such person for American citizenship, and I have no doubt that proper legislation could be enacted which will authorize the United States attorneys in the respective districts to institute cancelation proceedings against anyone who took the oath of allegiance to the United States and at the same time pledged his real allegiance to the German ruler.

Incidentally, it is my desire to "plug" a loophole now existing in our naturalization laws by reason of the fact that any German who becomes naturalized today renounces allegiance to the German Republic. As a matter of fact, no such country exists today. The German Republic died with the assumption of office by Adolf Hitler, and the official designation of Germany today is not republic by "Fuehrerstaat", meaning a leader state, a state governed by a "leader" who has dictatorial powers.

Every person joining the Nazi organization must pledge his support to the so-called "leadership principle" which is the principle which gives the so-called leader absolute power, and the leader, that is the dictator, designates his subordinates, and a new feudal system is created as a result of it. Just like in the days of the Middle Ages when the lord obtained his obeisance from minor lords, and the minor lords from still minor lords, and so down the scale. The system by which the German Nazi organization is run calls for such obedience from the highest to the lowest "leader", and I suppose Fritz Kuhn is the leader no. 1 in the United States, owing his allegiance directly to Adolf Hitler, or perhaps to his minister of propaganda, Dr. Goebbels.

It will be interesting to find out how this new hierarchy actually operates in practice. From the article in the American Magazine, it would appear that leader no. 1, that is Kuhn, has a number of subleaders with whom he consults from time to time, but that his decision governs the entire outfit.

From the program of the new camp, it appears that the camp is situated 55 miles from the Holland Tunnel and is situated some 800 feet above sea level and has two lakes, for bathing, fishing, and boating, and some 200 acres of land at its disposal. The camp had also issued bonds at $25 apiece which were sold to members of the German-American Bund, and I wonder whether or not some real-estate operations by whom this camp was sold to the German-American Bund are not chargeable to New Jersey politicians who are responsible for the appearance at the opening exercises of a State senator and a chairman of the township committee.

In the pamphlet German parents are urged to send their children to camp for the summer so that a real "German education" will be given to these youngsters. What "German education" is to be given to American children is something I am not in a position to give you in great detail. But I can give you a story as to the type of education which was given in German camps heretofore established, from the official report of the committee to investigate un-American activities.

One Hugo Haas was at that time the so-called leader of the "youth movement", and it seems that the youth movement is modeled on the Hitler youth movement in Germany, using the same flag and symbol which the youth camps in Germany use. He (Mr. Haas) said that he had 176 boys, mostly American-born children of German parents or children of naturalized American citizens. Let me read to you some of the testimony:

Mr. DICKSTEIN. You see the flags over here [indicating]?
Mr. HAAS. Yes, sir.
Mr. DICKSTEIN. And over here [indicating]?
Mr. HAAS. Yes, sir.
Mr. DICKSTEIN. And you see it over here [indicating]?
Mr. HAAS. Yes, sir.
Mr. DICKSTEIN. And that is the same flag that you had on a pole in your camp?
Mr. HAAS. It was a little different there.
Mr. DICKSTEIN. It was practically the same?
Mr. HAAS. Yes, sir.
Mr. DICKSTEIN. These children had uniforms?
Mr. HAAS. Yes, sir.
Mr. DICKSTEIN. Where did they get the uniforms?
Mr. HAAS. Their mothers made them and we bought the breeches in army and navy stores.
Mr. DICKSTEIN. Sometime at 2 or 3 o'clock in the morning you called out the whole camp in a defensive drill, did you not?
Mr. HAAS. Yes, sir.
Mr. DICKSTEIN. That did happen?
Mr. HAAS. Yes, sir.
Mr. DICKSTEIN. Was anybody shooting at you; was there anybody disturbing your peace?
Mr. HAAS. No; but according to threatening letters that I got——
Mr. DICKSTEIN. So that you got a threatening letter, and at 2 o'clock in the morning you woke up all these boys; is that correct?
Mr. HAAS. Yes.
Mr. DICKSTEIN. But no one bothered you on that particular night?
Mr. HAAS. No.
Mr. DICKSTEIN. And the boys went back to bed?
Mr. HAAS. Yes, sir.
Mr. DICKSTEIN. You were reported sometime ago as having taken 15 or 20 boys out on a hike until about 2 o'clock in the morning, and passed near a cemetery, and you are quoted as having said that when you got through with that dangerous mission your heart was filled with joy at the spirit of the youth of Germany.
Mr. HAAS. I told you once before that the article that was printed in Today is not quite true.
Mr. DICKSTEIN. The article I am referring to is from the Deutsche Zeitung, which is a reliable German newspaper, is it not?
Mr. HAAS. That article was printed from two copies of the Deutsche Zeitung put together.
Mr. DICKSTEIN. But in substance it is true, is it not?
Mr. HAAS. About the march, but not about my heart leaping with joy.
Mr. DICKSTEIN. What kind of songs did you sing?
Mr. HAAS. Songs that are about a thousand years old.
Mr. DICKSTEIN. Not more than a thousand?
Mr. HAAS. No.
Mr. DICKSTEIN. They were all German songs, were they not?
Mr. HAAS. Mostly.
Mr. DICKSTEIN. These boys were all of them going to public schools here, were they not?
Mr. HAAS. Or high schools.
Mr. DICKSTEIN. Did you preach to them the philosophy of Hitler every day or just once in a while?
Mr. HAAS. Once in a while.
Mr. DICKSTEIN. About how many times did you preach the philosophy of Mr. Hitler in this American camp?
Mr. HAAS. Maybe twice.
Mr. DICKSTEIN. Did you have any propaganda printed in the German language distributed to some of these boys for them to read when they had a little spare time?
Mr. HAAS. We had a library there.
Mr. DICKSTEIN. What do you call a library?
Mr. HAAS. We had a shelf with books on it.
Mr. DICKSTEIN. How many books did you have?
Mr. HAAS. About 20.
Mr. DICKSTEIN. Can you give us the titles of any of these books?
Mr. HAAS. Zane Grey stories translated into German, and even some English titles.
Mr. DICKSTEIN. Did you have the history of the United States there?
Mr. HAAS. No, sir.
Mr. DICKSTEIN. Did you have any book about Abraham Lincoln?
Mr. HAAS. No, sir.
Mr. DICKSTEIN. About George Washington?
Mr. HAAS. No, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. You believe in the ideals of Hitler, do you not?
Mr. HAAS. Yes, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. Do you believe in a dictatorship?
Mr. HAAS. No, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. Well, if you believe in the ideals of Hitler, why do you not believe in a dictatorship? Is not Hitler a dictator in Germany at the present time?
Mr. HAAS. You might take it that he is a dictator.
The CHAIRMAN. Do you believe in freedom of speech?
Mr. HAAS. Yes.
The CHAIRMAN. Is there freedom of speech in Germany at the present time?
Mr. HAAS. If the speech——
The CHAIRMAN. If the speech is just the way the Government wants it?
Mr. HAAS. Yes, sir; if it is not against Germany.
The CHAIRMAN. Of course, over here you can have freedom of speech, even against the Government, can you not?
Mr. HAAS. There is too much freedom of speech.
The CHAIRMAN. You understand what freedom of speech means?
Mr. HAAS. Yes; everybody can say what they want.
The CHAIRMAN. There is no such thing as freedom of speech in Germany, is there?
Mr. HAAS. For Germans there is free speech.
The CHAIRMAN. Can Germans criticize Chancellor Hitler?
Mr. HAAS. Well——
The CHAIRMAN. Can they?
Mr. HAAS. I suppose they do.
The CHAIRMAN. Can they?
Mr. HAAS. Yes.
The CHAIRMAN. Can they urge a change of government over there?
Mr. HAAS. That is not freedom of speech.
The CHAIRMAN. You do not call that freedom of speech?
Mr. HAAS. No.
The CHAIRMAN. You do not believe in that, do you? Do you believe in the freedom of the press?
Mr. HAAS. To some press.
The CHAIRMAN. That is, a press that is friendly and agreeable to you?
Mr. HAAS. To the Government.
The CHAIRMAN. You believe those same conditions should obtain in America?
Mr. HAAS. There are many papers that should be put out of existence.
The CHAIRMAN. Do you believe in the freedom of religious conscience?
Mr. HAAS. Oh, yes.
The CHAIRMAN. Is that one of the ideals of the National Socialist movement—freedom of religious conscience?
Mr. HAAS. I do not think I ever read anything about that.
The CHAIRMAN. You read the papers, do you?
Mr. HAAS. Yes, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. Do you believe in a trial by jury?
Mr. HAAS. I do not get that.
The CHAIRMAN. Do you believe if you are charged with a crime that you should have the right, the constitutional right, the inherent right, to have a trial by jury?
Mr. HAAS. Surely.
The CHAIRMAN. Do you have that right in Germany now?
Mr. HAAS. As much as I know.
The CHAIRMAN. In any event, you believe that the philosophy of the National Socialist Party as it exists in Germany should be put into operation in this country?
Mr. HAAS. No, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. Do you believe in the philosophy of Hitler?
Mr. HAAS. Yes.
The CHAIRMAN. And, insofar as you can, you try to inculcate that in others?
Mr. HAAS. That means our philosophy or Hitler's philosophy, that he is trying to get all German people of the world together in certain groups.

I suppose the object of this camp, which is the twenty-first of its kind in the United States, is to try to get "all German people of the world together in certain groups."

American citizenship means very little to these exalted Germans. They are Germans first and foremost and American citizens only for convenience sake. The New York Times, on Monday, July 19, speaking of the address made in camp by Dr. Salvatore Caridi, of Union City, N. J., who headed a delegation of Italian war veterans, opened the speech by addressing the assembly as "my Nazi friends." As a matter of fact, in the last few public functions conducted by the Nazis, the black shirts seem to be very cooperative and it is a case of Nazis and black shirts working together.

The New York Herald Tribune, on July 19, speaking of the opening of the camp, said:

> This organization, which holds Adolf Hitler and the Third Reich in awe and reverence, dedicated this twenty-first camp by festivities attended to by 6,000 persons, including a number of Italian-American Fascist sympathizers who were guests.

The Washington Herald of July 20 shows a picture under the title, "This picture was not taken in Berlin, but in U. S. A.", and states under the description "Nazi-ism Invades America." With swastikas draped from buildings and carried in the line of parade, side by side with American flags, a company of Ordnung Dienst, Nazi military police, is shown entering Camp Nordland, at Andover, N. J. This parade was one of the features opening summer camp, operated by German-American Bund. Speakers lauded Reichsfuehrer Hitler and Premier Mussolini, and labeled John L. Lewis, C. I. O. head, Communist organizer; and to the same effect the New York Post on July 19, presented a picture captioned "Opening of Nazi Culture Center in Jersey" with these words at the bottom of the picture:

> Andover, N. J., gets a taste of Hitler heiling when 1,000 brown shirts march past the swastika-draped reviewing stand as the New Jersey division of the German-American Bund opens its 100-acre camp in the Sussex Hills. A group of Italian-American black shirts were presented as guests. Dr. Salvatore Caridi, of Union City, their spokesman, addressed the "bund" members as Nazi friends.

It is quite a stretch from Andover, N. J., to San Francisco, Calif., and between the two lies the whole territory of the United States of America. But to Nazi eyes the important thing is to operate a network of propaganda, and the entire territory of the United States is only a unit to further the interests of the Nazi master of Germany. And so it is not surprising that only a few weeks ago public opinion in this country was startled with the announcement that a Nazi adventurer, Mannfried von Killinger, was appointed German consul at San Francisco. An article in a German-American weekly, Volksecho, of July 19, 1937, gives a biographical account of Von Killinger's career.

In order to realize what qualifies a German consul for service in a democratic country, a study of Herr Killinger's past will be necessary.

Killinger belonged to that group of officers who after the war found it impossible to readjust themselves to civilian life. So he became an adventurer, taking part in the formation of secret organizations. One of these groups which he helped to organize was the so-called Company Ehrhardt. The purpose of this organization was to act as a stooge to the Reichswehr, whenever this reactionary organization found it necessary to remove a too enthusiastic supporter of the Weimar Republic. It was about this time that Herr von Killinger turned author. He wrote a book, Gay and Serious Moments in the Life of a Putchist. Just to give the reader an insight into the sadistic workings of the author's mind, let us quote an incident described in this book. It seemed that in 1919 a 19-year-old girl fell into the hands of these marauders. Here follows Von Killinger's verbatim account of what happened to this girl:

> As I gave the signal, the brigadiers stripped the wench and laid her across a wagon shaft. Then the horsewhips got into action. They did a good job, for there wasn't a white spot on her back when we got through. We knew that she was forever cured from prying into the secrets of the Ehrhardt company.

Later Killinger became treasurer of the secret political murder organization Consul. As such he instigated the assassination of the Catholic Minister Erzberger. It was Killinger who took care of the murderers'—Schulz and Tillessen—baggage. He also was the recipient of their mail and even after the murder was committed kept up close contact with them.

Later, when the Ehrhardt brigade and the Consul organization were obliged to dissolve, Killinger joined the S. A. Nazi organization. Again he qualified so well that he became assistant to the, at that time, supreme leader, Lieutenant Klintch.

With Hitler's help, he became a deputy to the Saxony Diet, which marked the beginning of his career. The year 1932 found Hitler's S. A. organization in serious financial difficulties. The treasury was empty and the radical elements of the party were in open revolt against what they termed too close alliance of Hitler with the big financial interests. The leader of this revolt was the colonel and supreme S. A. leader, Stennes. Killinger joined this revolt. At that time he made the classical remark about Hitler: "The S. A. must eliminate this Munich comic-opera diva." He fought with the insurgents until he found that the scales of fortune favored Hitler's side. Then he turned and promptly betrayed his comrades.

S. A. Leader Ernst—shot during the June 30 purge—had, prior to his death, deposited in a foreign country a document concerning the origin of the Reichstag fire. In it he wrote, in part:

> We were eating supper with Roehm, when Heines and Killinger discussed the matter of setting the Reichstag building afire. They were in perfect agreement with our plans. They also advised us under no conditions to take a direct part in starting the blaze, as the danger of detection would be too great.
> Killinger recommended to have the dirty work performed by a couple of S. A. troopers. "It will be easy to have them disappear afterward", he declared.

The June 30 blood purge almost put an end to Von Killinger's activities. Was he not a participant of the Reichstag burning, and did he not belong to the clique Roehm-Heines? These two reasons alone were sufficient for Hitler, Goering, and Goebbels to have Killinger forever silenced. He was arrested, but the intercession of an influential friend saved his life. He was deprived of all rank and offices, however, and for a time, at least, his name was completely obliterated from Nazi history. However, the Third Reich is in continual need of expert banditos. So when Herr Bohle joined the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, a fundamental change in the selection of foreign diplomats was inaugurated.

The policy of war which the Third Reich pursues necessitates the selection of experts in the field of espionage and terror. The less a diplomat is bothered by conscience, the better qualified he becomes. Thus it came about that the former assassin and soldier of fortune found himself one day traveling first class aboard a German liner bound for San Francisco. Of course, foreign Nazi bureaus had good reason to keep silent concerning the arrival and the past of this new representative of Aryan culture. The appointment of such an individual, however, constitutes an affront to the American people. It is particularly a challenge to the German-American people that their good name is besmirched by being represented by an expert in murder, sadism, and arson.

I have before me also a number of issues of a publication from Hollywood, Calif., which calls attention to renewed activities of the Nazis in California since Von Killinger became the German consul at San Francisco. Whether or not the renewed activities in establishing camps throughout the country is preparatory to a training to be given to our citizens as to how life in "concentration camps" is conducted, I do not know. But the fact of the matter is that these camps may well become, in due course of time, concentration camps for all dissenters from the Nazi philosophy.

I have shown you what the Nazis consider "freedom of speech" or "freedom of the press." In the testimony I quoted to you, freedom of speech meant the freedom by which individuals are allowed to preach Hitlerism and his works, and freedom of the press meant the freedom to publish pamphlets and circulars lauding Adoph Hitler.

What our American Constitution means to these fellows is best left unsaid. We cannot allow this alien ideology to be preached to children of impressionable years, and we cannot allow that subversive doctrines of this type be inculcated into the minds of immature youngsters. And, of course, we cannot permit the commingling of our American flag with the swastika, the symbol of Nazi hatred and intolerance.

To call a camp of this type an American camp is a travesty on the term "American", and to be told by speakers that they are patriots when they permit Hitler's ideology to govern the relationship of people in this country is something Congress at least could not tolerate.

I have given you at random the details of Nazi infiltration as practiced in the New Jersey camps and in the activities of the German consul at San Francisco; but we cannot lose sight of the fact that this is merely a drop in the bucket in the general scheme of things by which subversive movements are seeking to take hold of our citizenry.

I do not want to burden you with matters which I have already described in my prior speeches on the floor of this House dealing with Russian Fascists and their home-grown organizations preaching subversive doctrines. I do not wish to speak at this time about the activities of Communists, whom I have previously exposed on the floor of the House, and whose activities I have previously described to the Members of this body, but it seems strange that one of my colleagues, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. THOMAS] claims that there are more Communists in my district than there are Nazis in the United States. I stated at the time that in the last election there were no more than 200 Communists in my district, but the gentleman from New Jersey has an example as to what the Nazis are apt to do by having their camp opened in his own congressional district and under his very nose in Sussex County. You see, there are quite a number of Nazis right in the gentleman's own district, and it is futile to say that there are Communists in my district who require investigation. Why, the Communists in my district saw fit to parade for 9 long months and make life miserable for me because I tried to educate them into the duties of American citizenship. I am sure the gentleman from New Jersey will be performing a useful service to the community if he will try to educate some of the gentlemen who opened a camp in his own district in the duties of American citizenship and patriotism.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the telegram which I sent to the Clerk's desk may be read by the Clerk out of my time.

The Clerk read as follows:

NEWARK, N. J., July 26, 1937.

Representative SAMUEL DICKSTEIN:

We deplore laxity of Governor Hoffman in the investigation of Nazi encampment at Camp Nordland, Andover, N. J. Governor Hoffman, before C. I. O. came to New Jersey, condemned the C. I. O. and enlarged on fact it was going to create violence and seize factories and that he was going to fight C. I. O. with every resource at his command. It is significant that Governor Hoffman had no word of condemnation for un-American goose-stepping Nazis in their march of hate, with American flags flying below swastika, in violation of rules of Congress for proper display of American flag. We request immediate investigation by Congress.

COMMITTEE FOR INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATION,
W. J. CARNEY, Regional Director.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to stand on this floor and say "I told you so", but the facts I outlined to the House some 3 or 4 months ago are true today and cannot now be questioned. Although I have not introduced any resolution calling for an investigation, a Member of this House from the State of Texas has made an investigation of his own and has satisfied himself of the truth of my statement and my exposure of a well-organized subversive, un-American spy system in this country. This person is no less than the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES]. He has introduced a resolution calling upon this Congress to investigate these activities. While I have been working on this matter for years, working hard and doing my level best to bring to the attention of the House what is going on, I am willing to support the Dies resolution in order to turn the searchlight of publicity upon all alien subversive agitators and spies, whether they be the white shirts, the brown shirts, the black shirts, or any of the dirty shirts that have come into this country.

Mr. Speaker, let us stop playing post office. All we have been doing on this question in this Congress is to play post office. Too much politics is entering into this question.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I cannot yield.

Mr. Speaker, too much politics has entered into this. Whether it is in New Jersey, in the district of my friend, or any other district, or in my own district, it should be exposed.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? The gentleman mentioned my district.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to quarrel with any Member of this House. The newspapers of the country are now telling us what is going on. Mr. Speaker, the twenty-first camp of this type in this country was opened in New Jersey last Sunday with almost 15,000 men and women going wild about Mr. Hitler and Mussolini. They had thousands of children ranging from 4 to 10 years of age "goose-stepping" and pledging allegiance to the swastika; and in this particular parade last Sunday the swastika flew high above the Stars and Stripes.

One Nazi was carrying the American flag as though it hurt his back to carry it. There were hundreds of swastikas way up in the air.

The Nazis have now combined with the Black Shirts. There were 400 of the Black Shirts on parade with the Nazis. Then there are the White Russian Fascists in Connecticut. I can take you there and show an arsenal as big as this building with powder, guns, and ammunition, with an army of 50,000 Facists right in the State of Connecticut. Why does not the Governor of Connecticut do something?

Mr. Speaker, I want to quote from the speeches made at the opening of Camp Nordland. I had someone there to take a verbatim report. Before I get to that point I want the Members to know where Camp Nordland is located. This camp is situated within a number of miles of the largest ammunition factories of this Government and one of the largest powder factories of the Du Ponts. I do not have to tell what happened in 1916 in connection with the Black Tom explosion. Mr. Speaker, if we are ever implicated in another war we will have to fight the enemy within and without.

If an investigation is made, I am afraid that my good friend, Governor Hoffman, will be shown that he knew something about this camp, as well as State Senator Dolan and some others up there who call themselves "Americans." I think they all had their fingers in the pie, because the Nazis paid more for the camp than it is really worth. Somebody, somewhere, promised the Nazis protection.

This camp is located at Lake Denmark, and is within the area of some of the largest powder plants in the United States. It is located right near the Marine Barracks and not so very far away from the Hercules Ammunition Works and the Atlas Powder Manufacturing Co.

I have some definite information with reference to the leader of this group, and I will give you his name, Guastav J. Elmer. This man was negotiating with the Lackawanna Railroad trying to get the railroad to give them a special fare from Connecticut and from New York to this camp, which is 54 miles from New York. He told a distinguished American connected with this railroad that they have 13,000 men in uniform ready to take up arms against whom? Against whom, I ask you? Surely not for the United States of America, but if some one dares defy their great leader, this Mr. Hitler, they will take up arms for him. This Hitler group started off 4 years ago with a membership of 75 members, Mr. Speaker, and today they have 350,000 in 40 States of the Union, and I am going to give you here the States and places where they were located up to January 1937, namely:

LOCATIONS OF NAZI GROUPS IN THE UNITED STATES UP TO JANUARY 1937

East: Astoria, L. I.; Baltimore, Md.; Bergen County, N. J.; Brooklyn, N. Y.; Brooklyn South, N. Y.; Bronx, N. Y.; Buffalo, N. Y.; Danbury, Conn.; Glendale, N. Y.; Hudson County, N. J.; Jamaica, L. I.; Lindenhurst, L. I.; Nassau County, L. I.; Newark, N. J.; New Haven, Conn.; New Rochelle, N. Y.; New York, N. Y.; Norwalk, Conn.; Passaic County, N. J.; Philadelphia, Pa.; Pittsburgh, Pa.; Poughkeepsie, N. Y.; Reading, Pa.; Schenectady, N. Y.; Stamford, Conn.; Staten Island, N. Y.; Trenton, N. J.; Washington, D. C.; Waterbury, Conn.; White Plains, N. Y.; Yonkers, N. Y.

Middle West: Chicago, Ill.; Cincinnati, Ohio; Cleveland, Ohio; Dayton, Ohio; Detroit, Mich.; Gary, Ind.; Hammond, Ind.; Kenosha, Wis.; Milwaukee, Wis.; South Bend, Ind.; St. Louis, Mo.; Sheboygan, Wis.; Toledo, Ohio.

Diego, Calif.; San Francisco, Calif.; Seattle, Wash.; Spokane, Wash.; Portland, Oreg.

I am also going to give you the benefit of the names of a number of expert spies and agitators who came into this country and tried to scare the good German people, for whom I have the highest regard as Americans. As a matter of fact they have what is known as a "Uschla", which is a trial board that tries Americans. These Americans are tried by alien Nazis who come in on the ships of the Hamburg-American Line if these Americans do not cooperate with this un-American movement in our country. When they find these Americans guilty, and if they have a relative in Germany, they will be punished; and if they have property, it is going to be confiscated. The following is a list of Nazi propagandists:

NAZI PROPAGANDISTS, AGENTS, STOOL PIGEONS, AND SPIES OUTSIDE GERMANY IN THE UNITED STATES

Aschenbrenner, Kitty. Disguised as nurse, she was for a long time active as a Nazi agent in this country. She was finally exposed and deported.

Beyer, Kurt. Enrolled member of the NSDAP. Manager of San Francisco office of German Railroads.

Bolle, Willi. Owner of large furniture store at 1495 Third Avenue, New York City, and a notorious Nazi sympathizer.

Brunkhorst, Carol. Former Stahlheim contact man and confidential messenger.

Cremer, Hans. Contact man between Bunaste Leader Deutsch and NSDAP in Germany.

Dessecker, Richard. Adjutant leader of American National Labor Party.

Deutsch, Joachim. Leader of the Bunaste.

Emerson, Col. Edwin. American lawyer, journalist, and adventurer. Employed by Nazis as "front" to disguise their activities and give them an ostensibly legal foundation.

Gissibl, Fritz. The power behind the throne in Nazi intrigue in this country and one of the leaders of the Friends of New Germany or its successor, the Bund.

Gross, Rev. Francis. An ex-Catholic priest and vitriolic antisemitic writer.

Haag, Walter. Former aide to Spanknoebel; at present engaged in Gestapo work with the German National Railways bureau in Toronto, Canada.

Haas, Hugo. National commander of the youth movement of the Friends of New Germany, or its successor, the Bund.

Haegele, Anton. National leader of American National Labor Party.

Hanfstaengl, Dr. Ernst Franz. Forerunner of Spanknoebel in the United States. Posing as picture salesman, he succeeded in raising funds for Hitler previous to his seizure of power. Enlisted contact men for Spanknoebel and generally cleared the way for him; a member of the Bund.

Griebl, Dr. Ignatz. Nazi organization leader, formerly with Harlem Hospital, in New York; Uschla spy.

Hughes, Ingram. Lawyer and translator in Los Angeles who is helping in the circulation of antisemitic leaflets.

Hunt, Henry. Local leader of American National Labor Party in New York.

Kappe, Walter. A leader of the League of the Friends of New Germany and editor of the New York Deutscher Weckruf and Beobachter; and alien leader connected with the Bund.

Kiep, Dr. Otto. Former German Consul General in New York City and espionage pay agent.

Kuehtz, Werner. National treasurer of American National Labor Party.

Kuhn, Fritz. National leader of the Friends of New Germany and former provincial leader of the Middle West, now in full charge as its leader elected for 4 years, recently became citizen, using citizenship as protection for his espionage against United States.

Lange, Herbert. Local leader of American Nationalist Labor Party.

Luedecke Kwit Georg Wilhelm. Nazi propagandist, now one of the leaders of the League of the Friends of New Germany, or its successor, the Bund.

Markmann, Rudi. Provincial leader of the East of the Friends of New Germany, or its successor, the Bund.

Mensing, Capt. Frederick C. Official of North German Lloyd Line and espionage worker for Hanfstangl.

Meyer, William. Culture director of American National Labor Party.

Mutschinski, Frank. Was formerly commander of the Stahlheim.

Norman, Count. Nazi agitator and liaison man.

Peterson, William (William Mueller). Gestapo contact man in this country.

Ross, Colin. Adventurer, journalist, and lecturer, violent agitator for the "Germanization" of the United States.

Sanctuary, Col. E. N. Associate and Haegele and a leading distributor of antisemitic literature. He operates from an office at 156 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Sauerma-Douglas, Count. Nazi agitator and liaison man.

Schlosser, August. Local leader of American Nationalist Labor Party.

Schmidt, Georg. Nazi contact man between the United States organizations and the Third Reich. Disguises himself as wine salesman.

Schmitz, Ernst. Head of German Railroads Information Office in New York City. Voted in the A. A. U. meeting (December 1935), which approved of sending American athletes to the Berlin Olympics.

Schnuch, Dr. Hubert. A leader of the League of the Friends of New Germany; organized his own Gestapo detachment, the Bunaste.

Schuster, Joseph. National leader of the military organization of the Friends of New Germany, or its successor, the Bund.

Schwinn, Hermann. Provincial leader of the West of the Friends of New Germany, or its successor, The Bund.

Soika, Karl. National organizer of American National Labor Party.

Spanknoebel, Heinz. First large-scale Nazi agitator; founded United German Societies of New York and coordinated leading German-language newspapers in 1933. Forced to flee country, under indictment.

Spanner, Dr. Nazi agitator and liaison man.

Thompson, Franklin. A leader of American National Labor Party and editor of the New York National American.

Vollbehr, Dr. H. F. Nazi propagandist and anti-Semitic writer.

Walter Reinhold. Was figurehead leader of Nazi organizations in the United States; actually a dummy for the real leader, Fritz Gissibl.

Warth, Hermann. Local leader of American National Labor Party.

Winkel, Lothar. Local leader of American National Labor Party.

Although some changes have been made in the above list, new leaders of great number have arisen and been sent here under many pretexts to spread the doctrines of Hitlerism in the United States. Some of the old leaders have been supplanted by the new ones, but, broadly speaking, the list is genuine. An investigation is most essential at this time to determine the definite system of espionage against the United States and who these people are. If an investigation is made, it will prove that financial help is coming in from Germany and that subversive activities within the United States is by order of some foreign government.

Bear in mind this is the twenty-first camp in the United States. This group has an army of over 200,000 in uniform. Mr. Speaker and Mr. SNELL, I call upon you as Americans to help put the searchlight upon this menace which exists in this country. In your State, Mr. SNELL, and in mine, they bought that Camp Upton in New York a year ago. When you go out there on Sunday all you see is drilling in uniform, goose-stepping, clicking of heels and boots, boots, boots, and they swear allegiance to Mr. Hitler, and at the same time downing Americans.

Mr. Speaker, the children in that camp are not allowed to speak the English language. They are not allowed to read American books. They must speak the German language. They must drill, as they are told. As to how they are taught to obey their leader is well pictured in the beginning of my speech.

Coming back now to Camp Nordland, let us consider Dr. Salvatore Caridi, of Union City. He is known as the Black Shirt leader of this country. You do not have to take my word for that. I have pictures to show what a fine lot of Fascists he had in the parade with the Nazis. The Nazis were hailing Mussolini and the Fascists were hailing Hitler, and it was a grand love feast.

Mr. Speaker, and fellow Americans, listen to what he says:

We have a right to meet and organize and tell this country what we have done.

Dr. Caridi said:

We are the best law-abiding citizens in the United States and we don't like to have anyone insult the leaders of the nations from which we come. The authorities of this country have no power to silence them, but if they insult Mussolini—

He is talking now to 15,000 people—

if they insult Mussolini or Hitler in this country, we can punch them right in the nose.

And that is supposed to be an American citizen who says:

If you are going to insult Mr. Mussolini and Mr. Hitler I am going to punch you in the nose.

What does that mean? Just exactly what it says.

We find that the children in this Camp Nordland and other camps have had their feet so well drilled that they are now expert soldiers. The leaders of their camps say that you must not speak English. You must speak German, so that you do not forget you are Germans.

They teach them to forget all about the American Government. They teach them to forget all about American history. And after all of this lecturing, these boys and girls have to swear allegiance to the swastika almost five times a day.

Then you have the White Russian Fascist group, I talked about, in Connecticut.

This White Russian group has now combined with the Nazis. The Nazis, the Black Shirts, the Fascists, and the White Dirty Shirts have formed an organization. The leader of the White Russians who has combined with the Nazis and the Black Shirts, is Anastase A. Vonsiatsky, and if I do not pronounce his name properly I think the best thing to do is to whistle it. Some woman who had a lot of money, running into the millions, was crazy enough to marry this so-called ex-prince or ex-somebody—and this whole fortune is being spent to build up a White Russian organization in this country. This organization is combining with the Nazis to overthrow the Russian Government.

So far as I am concerned, I do not care what they do, but let them keep out of this country. They are stirring up trouble among the fine Russians who are naturalized citizens or native born. They are stirring up trouble amongst the millions of fine Germans. There are hundreds of thousands of fine Italians in this country who are loyal American citizens, and I do not have to go any further than to mention Generoso Pope, who represents a number of newspapers throughout this country and is a typical American of high standing. There are hundreds of thousands of Italians in this country, and they are against the Black Shirts. Almost 99 percent of the German people are against the Nazis. The fine Russian people are against the White Russians. These organizations are just fomenting trouble throughout the United States. They are seeking to substitute a dictatorship or facist government in place of a democracy.

Another camp is going to be opened pretty soon in California. They say some of these people complain about the fact that the climate in New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, and in Illinois, is not so good.
